PREFACE BY THE REV. DR COOKE.

If God has given a revelation of his nature and will, and intended it not for any particular class or nation, but for all ranks, conditions, and countries, it seems natural to conclude that such revelation should be plain, and level to every capacity. But are not the Books called the Holy Scriptures full of difficulties in narrative, doctrine, and precept? and is not the existence of these difficulties manifest by the continued efforts, uncertainty, or contrariety of interpreters? True; the Holy Scriptures present many difficulties, and have received various interpretations; but the existence of difficulties, or varieties of opinion, are so far from furnishing any objection to their divine origin, that they furnish, on the contrary, one of its internal proofs. For as, in painting, sculpture, and the mechanical arts, men often discover the author of one work by its marks of similarity to some of his acknowledged productions; even so, the visible world, which all, except the atheist, acknowledge to be the work of God, presents so many difficulties to the eye of science—difficulties which observation, experiment, and theory, have laboured in vain to overcome—that, in any other work professing to come, either directly or mediately, from God, similar difficulties are not only to be expected, but are, in some sense, necessary to prove that the work is his. Yet notwithstanding all their acknowledged difficulties, the works of God are, for every practical purpose of light, and labour, and enjoyment, perfectly level to all capacities; and, in like manner, they who read and search the Holy Scriptures with an humble, sincere, and prayerful desire to discover what is sin, what is duty, and who is the Saviour, will find no difficulties beyond those that arise from the world, the flesh, and the devil, seeking to blind their eyes "lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ should shine unto them," 2 Cor. iv. 4.

But if the Holy Scriptures be thus plain to every capacity, what is the advantage of interpretations? It lies chiefly in two points. (1.) All have not similar opportunities of study, even as all have not similar opportunities of travel. And as the traveller who has visited distant countries presents to his untravelled reader, in a narrow map, the outline and relative distances of vast continents, even so may the result of much "searching diligently" (1 Pet. i. 10), and "comparing of spiritual things with spiritual" (1 Cor. ii. 13), be presented within the limits of a few sentences, whereby those who, because of youth, have as yet little experience, or who, because of employment, have little leisure, may have their memory and their judgment alike aided and strengthened. (2.) The second use of interpretation, however, lies, not in expounding to those who are willing to learn, but in defending truth against those who are labouring to mislead and pervert. And as the chief means adopted by those who "lie in wait to deceive" is the allegation of inexplicable difficulties and irreconcilable contradictions, so, in the following notes, I have chiefly laboured to resolve the alleged difficulties, and reconcile the apparent contradictions of the Divine word. That, in this attempt, I have always been successful, I do not mean to insinuate; but I can say with all sincerity, that, so far as my purpose was, and as memory serves, I am not aware that I have passed over anything that appeared a real difficulty, or had ever been alleged as a serious contradiction, without, at least, attempting the solution of the one, or the reconciliation of the other. That instances of both may have been overlooked, I can scarcely doubt; but, wherever such oversight may have occurred, I can truly say, it was not intentional. In the prosecution of this object I feel deeply indebted to the Publishers, who, when I could not possibly attain my object within the marginal limits, freely granted room for such Additional Notes as I counted absolutely necessary for elucidation of the more important or difficult portions.

That, on difficult points, I have seldom given the various opinions of expositors, may be accounted a defect. For this omission I had two reasons. First,—My limits seldom permitted me to enlarge; and, Secondly,—I hold it better that an expositor should prayerfully and studiously endeavour to be "fully persuaded in his own mind," and then present to his reader, not a perplexing diversity, but his own deliberate judgment. I have occasionally found it necessary to deviate from this rule, but only in cases where the importance of the different opinions seemed to demand their introduction, and where selection or decision seemed peculiarly difficult or impossible.

Upon a few points, wherever occasion permitted, I have strenuously, though briefly, insisted. Among these may be ranked, the Godhead of Christ, the fall of man by sin, and salvation by free and sovereign grace; to which I would add, the plenary verbal inspiration of the Holy Scriptures—a doctrine of vital importance in the Christian system—for the elucidation and maintenance of which, I cannot pass by this opportunity of paying a tribute of respect to the memory of the late Robert Haldane.

In relation to the Marginal References to parallel passages, I beg to say, that, so far from seeking their increase, I have studied their diminution; and those which I account of most practical value will generally be found imbodied in the Notes. Experience has taught me that mere verbal references, so far from being valuable, are extremely perplexing; expository references alone being of any real importance.

I beg leave to conclude with a few simple and practical rules for the profitable reading of the Holy Scriptures.

1. Read them with prayer, and an earnest desire to learn and obey the truth.

2. Besides such occasional reading as circumstances may permit, or studies require, fix upon the most convenient time for the daily and regular reading of one portion in the Old, and another in the New Testament, and let nothing short of insuperable necessity interfere with the arrangement.—Have a special rule for the reading of the Lord's day.

3. Memory being often a weak, but always an improvable power, go on committing select portions of the word, however brief. Thus a copious store will at length be hoarded up for personal use and the instruction of others.

4. Read the whole as matter of sacred history, until the leading events arrange themselves orderly in the mind.

5. When in search of the meaning of a passage, begin with the meaning of the principal words. This meaning will generally be found in the immediate neighbourhood, either before or after the passage. If it be not found there, search for it in the other books of Scripture;—in which case a Concordance will be found extremely useful.

6. If you cannot be satisfied of the meaning, use such books of exposition as are accessible, or ask the opinion of others—judging prayerfully and attentively of both. And if, after all, you rest unsatisfied, wait, meditate, watch, and pray. God may reveal it in answer to prayer—or God may withhold it to keep you humble and prayerful.

7. As one of the best stimulants and aids in the study of the Scriptures, seek to instruct some one. Children will often try the mind by questions more acute than could be expected from their years; the follies and sins that you seek to correct, will lead you to search for scriptural argument, and demonstrate the necessity of the teaching of the Spirit; while the bed of the sick and dying will compel you to draw waters from the wells of comfort and salvation.

8. Often "examine yourself whether you be in the faith" (2 Cor. xiii. 5), whether you be growing "in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour" (2 Pet. iii. 18); and in all your studying, instructing, or acting, live "looking unto Jesus" (Heb. xii. 2); for, "if ye abide in him, and his words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John xv. 7.

PREFACE TO THE ORIGINAL EDITION.

NOT to depreciate the valuable commentaries of Pool, Patrick, Clarke, Henry, Burkitt, Gill, Doddridge, &c., but to exhibit their principal substance with all possible advantage, in a manner that might best comport with the ability and leisure of the poorer and labouring part of mankind; and especially to render the oracles of God their own interpreter, and enable every serious reader to judge for himself what doctrines ought to be believed, and what duties practised by the Christian, are the avowed aims of this publication.

In the copious INTRODUCTION, the principal proofs of the Divine Authority of the Old and New Testaments, and the rules necessary to promote the profitable perusal of the oracles of God therein contained, are largely exhibited. The connected scheme of the Hebrew Laws, and their evangelical signification,—and of the fate of nations, narrated or predicted in Scripture, as subservient to the glorious work of our redemption,—together with the large Chronological Index,—form a summary of the most celebrated labours of the learned world on these diversified subjects. An accurate attention thereto will, through the blessing of God, greatly assist in searching the Scriptures with success.

The contents of the sacred books, and their respective chapters, are an accurate, full and explicatory representation of their subject. Properly attending to these, the reader must discern of whom, or of what, the Holy Ghost there speaks, and understand the passage accordingly. He may easily fix in his mind a general, but distinct view of the whole system of inspiration; and thus be capable, with the utmost readiness, to find out or compare whatever passages of Scripture he may desire.

The EXPLANATORY NOTES are chiefly confined to the figurative, the prophetic, and the practical parts. Here the obscurity of Scripture, or the importance of faith and holiness, chiefly required them.

In our Saviour's delightful discourses, and the epistles of his inspired Messengers, our holy religion is most fully delineated; and there the explication is peculiarly extensive, and attempts to exhibit the substance of many learned and expensive commentaries, in a manner which, attending to the beautiful connexion, clearly unfolds the scope and meaning of the Spirit of God.

A particular and lively application of divine truth to the heart, and an unspotted holiness of conversation, being the immediate end of God's revelations to men, the contents of each chapter, which are often in an explicatory manner, are in the Reflections practically summed up, and directed home to the reader himself, for enlightening his understanding, awakening his conscience, warming his heart, and for directing and animating his practice.

An exact knowledge of the seasons in which the oracles of God were delivered, or the events mentioned in them took place, being of no small importance for obtaining a distinct perception of their meaning, the dates before and after our Saviour's incarnation have been adjusted from the best chronologers, and marked in the margin.

But, as every Protestant must allow the Scripture itself to be its own best interpreter—as God, to oblige men to a diligent search of his word, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, has seldom fully unfolded any of his more important truths in one particular passage—the uncommon collection of Parallel Scriptures, such as is not to be found anywhere else that I know of, has formed the most laborious, and will, to the diligent peruser, be found by far the most valuable part of the work. Some of these are similar in phrase, others in meaning, and, in fine, others in their scope and design. In these, and others which may be added, we have a delightful view of the harmony of the Scripture, and multiplied proofs of every article of our Christian faith; we have a real Concordance, which may abundantly furnish preachers and others with their desired quotations; we have, in little room, a large Commentary, infinitely more certain than any dictates of men; and of which the very words are, as nails and as goads, pointed and fastened by the great Master of assemblies. In a truly diligent comparison of them, many texts all at once explain, and are explained by each other. Nor, unless at first, will the careful reader find much trouble in comparing the texts: but the mere view of the marginal quotations will direct his memory to that part of them which corresponds with the sentence to which they are annexed for explication. And, for his encouragement, I can only say, that my labour, in collecting the parallel texts in this work, has afforded me much more pleasant insight into the oracles of God than all the numerous commentaries which I ever perused.

Thus we may listen to, and converse with God, and lay our consciences open to the inspired arrows of our all-conquering Redeemer;—we find his words, and eat them, to the joy and health of our soul; we hide them in our heart, that we may not sin against him; we become mighty in the Scriptures, and expert in handling this sword of the Spirit, in opposition to every enemy of our soul: in fine, we are made wise unto salvation; are reproved, corrected, and instructed in righteousness, and perfectly furnished for every good work. May the Lord himself prosper it for these ends!

MEMOIR

REV. JOHN BROWN.

THE Rev. JOHN BROWN was born in the year 1722, at Carpow, a small village in the parish of Abernethy, and county of Perth. His parents ranked in that class of society who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. His father could boast of no rent-rolls, nor had he any title of honour, save that of an honest man and an industrious mechanic, who, during the greater part of his life, laboured in the profession of an operative weaver. Though destitute of all the advantages arising from a regular education, he was nevertheless a man of considerable intelligence, moral worth, and christian sincerity. He made conscience of keeping up the worship of God in his family, and set a christian example before them, though living in a neighbourhood remarkably careless of these things. His external circumstances were so narrow, that it was little he could afford to promote the intellectual improvement of his son; so that the subject of this memoir found his situation in this respect but little superior to that of his father. He was sent to school; but the time allowed him to acquire the elements of reading, writing, and arithmetic, was so very short, that nothing but an excellent genius, and the most intense application, could have enabled him to attain the ordinary education of the lowest orders in the country. This, however, with one solitary month which he bestowed on the Latin, and that without the consent of his parents, appears to have been all the regular education he ever received, till we find him studying philosophy and divinity under the superintendence of the Rev. Ebenezer Erskine and James Fisher. It does not appear that his father ever intended him for the church, or even contemplated the possibility of his accomplishing such a design; though the strong propensity of his mind to learning, and particularly to that species of learning the nearest allied to divinity, seems to have suggested to his mother the possibility, that the day might come when his literary predilection might find room for its gratification in the service of the church; and often and again has she pictured to herself that happy day, when her darling child should emerge from his obscurity, clothed in the emblems of the most honourable employment—an ambassador of the Prince of Peace. In the mean time, his personal piety, the most important of all the prerequisite qualifications for an office so sacred, afforded her the lively hope that his labours, should her ardent wishes be ever realized, would not be in vain in the Lord. In a short narrative of his experiences written by himself, Brown acknowledges the delight which he had, while at school, in committing to memory the Catechisms of Vincent, Flavel, and the Westminster Assembly; and the profit he afterwards derived while yet a boy, from the perusal of the Bible, Rutherford's Letters, and Gouge's Directions how to Walk with God. His God was preparing him inconsciously for the service of Christ. He had separated him from the womb, and was even now calling him by his grace, (Gal. i. 15.) that he might reveal his Son in him, and send him to preach. In the same memoir he records the solemn impressions made on his young mind, by witnessing the dispensation of the Sacrament, and listening to the addresses delivered during the service; and, from his experience of profit argues against the impropriety of excluding children from witnessing a service so calculated to engage the affections. This exclusion appears to have been practised in the Church of Scotland at the commencement of last century; and was perhaps a remnant of Episcopal feeling, remaining after the restoration of Presbytery. "About the eighth year of my age," says he, "I happened, in a crowd, to push into the church at Abernethy, on a sacrament Sabbath. Then it was common for all but intended communicants to be excluded. Before I was excluded I heard one or two tables served by the minister, who spake much to the commendation of Christ, which in a sweet and delightful manner so captivated my young affections, as has since made me think that children should never be kept out of the church on such occasions."

About the eleventh year of his age his father was removed by death; and in some short time after, his loss was doubled in the death of his mother, and he left a poor orphan, without friends who could render him any essential service in his forlorn situation. But another ingredient was still wanting to fill up the bitter cup of adversity. About four months after the death of his mother, he was seized with a fever, four attacks of which rapidly succeeding each other, rendered his recovery almost hopeless: but his Master had employment assigned for him in his church; and having, by a series of afflicting circumstances, impressed his mind with the ineffable importance of eternal things, and rescued him from the jaws of the grave, provided the homeless orphan with a friend and protector. An elder in the parish of Abernethy—an aged shepherd and an eminent christian, respectable also for his intelligence, though so destitute of education that he could not so much as read—cheerfully embraced the opportunity of supplying the deficiency under which he laboured, by engaging the homeless orphan, to assist him in tending his flock, and in reading for him as opportunity allowed. It will appear strange to many, that men, of considerable talents and religious intelligence, should have been so utterly neglected in their education, particularly in a country so famed for her public seminaries as Scotland has long been. To account for this, we have only to consult the history of the reigns of Charles II. and his brother James, where we find that, during that persecuting period, the laws and social regulations of the country were greatly deranged; and that, under the then prelatic ascendency, the parochial schools, established by our forefathers, were utterly neglected—a fact which shows how nearly allied the prelacy of the times was to popery—nor were they restored by law till eight years after the Revolution of 1688. The young generations, rising during that long period, must, therefore, have been either partially or totally deficient in point of instruction, with the exception merely of those who could afford a very uncommon expense. John Ogilvie, the elder, whose kindness to young Brown we have just mentioned, had felt the privation of parochial instruction. But the connexion with the orphan boy was peculiarly advantageous to both parties, who, well pleased with one another, set to work and constructed a small hut amongst the hills, to protect them from the rain and the storm, where they read and conversed with one another, and sent up their joint supplications to him who fills the hungry with good things, while the rich are sent empty away. During this reciprocity of kind offices and congenial feelings, by a strict attention to the dispensations of Providence, by pondering over the books he read, and the sermons he heard, the young man was brought under very impressive apprehensions of the majesty of God, the hatefulness of sin, the love of Christ, and the utter insignificance of all earthly enjoyments, when contrasted with the glories of heaven; so that the pleasure of his secret devotions was greatly augmented, while he felt his conscience daily becoming more tender, and his walk and conversation more assimilated to that of his Lord and Master. His mountain was now strong, and his state prosperous; but sun and shade are not more vacillating, in the natural world, than hope and fear, joy and sorrow, are in that of the spiritual. His pastoral friend and companion relinquished his mountain occupation, and settling in Abernethy, Mr Brown was again out of employment; and wishing to provide for himself things honest in the sight of all men, he found it necessary to enter into the service of a neighbouring farmer, whose premises were much more extensive, and his domestics more numerous, and, as it would appear, whose lives were less exemplary than that of his former friend. Here he soon began to feel a sensible decline in his spiritual attainments, and a general lukewarmness and indifference in the exercise of religious duties, though his external deportment was still distinguished by manifold virtues, and particularly by the ornamental graces of meekness, patience, and christian forbearance, under the most irritating provocations, with a spirit of christian charity, ever ready to forgive.—A fellow shepherd, who, in his youthful gaiety, had taken a malicious pleasure in ridiculing and otherwise annoying the young man in his devotions, after observing for some time the unalterable serenity and interminable patience with which he endured the unprovoked insult, blushed himself into repentance; nor could he find rest in his own mind till he had acknowledged his fault, expressed the shame and sorrow he felt for what he had done, and had received an assurance of a frank forgiveness. This led to an intimate and cordial friendship, which lasted during life; and the same individual, when on his death-bed, declared that the admonitions and religious instructions he received from Mr Brown, during their intercourse as fellow-servants, had laid him under obligations which no language could express.

In the year 1733 a serious rupture took place in the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, in consequence of an act of Assembly passed in 1730, by which it was enacted, that reasons of dissent against the decisions of the judicatories of the Church should not be entered on the record; an enactment which prevented all who dissented in any case from exonerating their consciences by recording their dissent. This gave rise to much righteous indignation on the part of the godly ministers in the Church—an indignation which was augmented when, in 1732, the most solemn remonstrances against intrusive settlements were not so much as listened to. Along with these harsh dealings it was made a cause of censure for any minister to animadvert on the proceedings of the Church courts. Several ministers—inasmuch as they were bound by solemn engagement to the truth as expressed in the subordinate standards—found that they could not, as faithful servants of Jesus Christ, submit to censure for what appeared to them their obvious duty. Accordingly, Mr Ebenezer Erskine, having freely animadverted on the growing defections of the Church, in a sermon delivered before the Synod of Perth and Stirling, in 1732, was called to account before said Synod, where he was found liable to censure in terms of the enactment aforesaid. To this decision, however, from a sense of duty, he peremptorily refused to submit, both before the Synod and General Assembly. Mr Erskine was at this time joined by Messrs William Wilson, James Fisher, and Alexander Moncrieff; who, after due deliberation, finding that they could not, with a good conscience, continue in the communion of the Church under these circumstances, seceded from her ecclesiastical jurisdiction, on the following grounds:—1st. The sufferance of error without adequate censure. 2d. The infringement of the people's rights in electing their ministers, under the law of patronage. 3d. The neglect or relaxation of discipline. 4th. The restraint on ministerial freedom in opposing error and maladministration. 5th. The refusal of the prevailing party to be reclaimed. On these, and other solemn considerations, stated at large in their Testimony, they constituted themselves into a distinct presbytery, fully persuaded of the lawfulness of their separation.

To this party our shepherd considered it his duty to join himself; and, anxious to become a shepherd of souls in their communion, he prosecuted his studies with incredible ardour and perseverance, and soon acquired a considerable acquaintance with the Latin and Greek languages. In these difficult studies he had no instructor, excepting that, on some occasions of rare occurrence, he could find an hour to call on one or other of two neighbouring clergymen, namely, Mr Moncrieff of Abernethy, and Mr Johnston of Arngask, father of the late Dr Johnston of North Leith, who kindly assisted him in surmounting any formidable difficulty that threatened to arrest the progress of his literary pursuits. Having now obtained such an acquaintance with the Greek language as enlivened his hopes that he should ultimately succeed in his darling object of acquiring the necessary qualifications for preaching the blessed gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, he pressed forward with renovated vigour and growing confidence. But amongst the many things wanting to accelerate his motion, he was, at this time, anxious to obtain a Greek Testament, that he might have the satisfaction of reading, in the original language, the character and work, the holy life and vicarious death, of Him who feedeth his flock like a shepherd, and laid down his life for his sheep. Buoyed up with these hopes, and excited by this anxiety, after folding his flock one summer evening, and procuring the consent of his fellow-shepherd to watch it next day, he made a nocturnal trip to St Andrews, distant about twenty-four miles, where he arrived in the morning. He called at the first bookseller's shop that came in his way, and having inquired for the article in question, the shopman, on observing his apparent rusticity and mountain habiliments, told him that he had Greek Testaments and Hebrew Bibles in abundance, but suspected an English Testament would answer his purpose much better. In the mean time some gentlemen, said to have been professors in the university, happened to enter the shop, and learning what was going on, seemed much of the shopman's opinion. One of these, however, ordered the volume to be produced, and, taking it in his hand, said, "Young man, here is the Greek Testament, and you shall have it at the easy charge of reading the first passage that turns up." It was too good an offer to be rejected: the shepherd accepted the challenge, and performed the conditions to the satisfaction and astonishment of the party; and Mr Brown very modestly retired with his prize.

In his employment as a shepherd—a calling so much ennobled in the patriarchal age, and so universally celebrated both in the ancient and modern pastoral—he enjoyed more leisure, and better opportunities, for prosecuting his favourite studies, than could have fallen to his share in almost any other business; nor did he neglect to improve such promising circumstances. In a very short time he left far behind him many who had the advantage of every thing calculated to quicken their progress,—proper books, leisure to study them, and the best masters for their instructors. Left to his own resources, however, he acquired the knowledge of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages, with a rapidity that attracted the attention of the neighbourhood, and became the general topic of conversation. But while this procured him many friends, it at the same time hurt the pride, and excited the malice, of some of his outstripped rivals in the race of literary fame. It was, accordingly, whispered, that the progress he was making in his studies, in the absence of all instruction, bearing no proportion to the powers of the human mind, could only be accounted for by supposing that his unaccountable progress was effected by the agency of the devil; who, with a similar temptation, had seduced the mother of mankind, and has, in all ages, taken the advantage of the studious and scholastic habits of individuals to entangle them in his snares.—"Report ye, and we will report: come, let us smite him with the tongue." Notwithstanding that this malevolent slander had absurdity deeply imprinted on its forehead, it was eagerly laid hold of by the ignorant and credulous, and so widely circulated, that the innocent victim felt it extremely distressing, and more especially since even Mr Moncrieff appeared, for a season, to be influenced by it, and withdrew his countenance from him—a thing which, he afterwards admitted, was very cruel and unkind. For although the charge of diabolical intercourse was no longer admissible in the criminal courts of the country, yet the superstitious notions and prejudices handed down from the dark ages of popery were, at that period, so far from being eradicated from the minds of the people, especially in sequestered corners of the country, that such surmises were still capable of ruining a man's peace, and inflicting a serious wound on a mind of even the most ordinary feeling. To one so ardent in the prosecution of knowledge, and so anxious to attain the qualifications necessary for a minister of the gospel, it must have been no common affliction to have all his pleasing anticipations thus cruelly blighted in a moment; for, as he apprehended, the immediate tendency of this foul reproach was to blast his religious character, and counteract his whole purpose, by shutting against him the door of the divinity hall. On those who were best acquainted with him (the members of a praying society with which he was connected,) the slander had no impression; they continued his steady friends, and their attachment seemed to strengthen in proportion to the anguish he suffered from such an unmerited calumny. In the narrative already quoted we find him speaking thus: "The reproach was exceedingly distressing to me; however, God was gracious, for I enjoyed remarkable mixture of mercy and affliction. At the beginning of the trial these words, 'The Lord will command his loving-kindness in the day-time, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life,' were peculiarly sweet to my soul."

Some short time after the spreading of this report, and probably owing to the disagreeable situation in which it had placed him, our shepherd abandoned his crook, and undertook the occupation of a pedlar or itinerant merchant; a profession, however, in which he made but an indifferent figure. His mercantile excursions were chiefly confined to those parts of the country lying between the Forth and Tay. He seldom took lodging in any family that was not characterised for religion. The first thing he did in his new lodgings, was to turn over their books, and finding one to his mind, the sale of his wares was forgotten, and every mercantile consideration quenched in the more congenial traffic of literary knowledge. His friends and well-wishers frequently hinted the impropriety of neglecting his business; and some of them ventured to apprize him of his danger, and the difficulties into which his carelessness was likely to involve him; but all their admonitions went for nothing—although he was often obliged to any kind person who would arrange his ill-assorted pack, while he pored for an hour over some book which had fallen into his hand. The acquisition of wealth, unless in so far as it tended to promote the more important acquisition of knowledge, was, in his opinion, a matter about which no wise man would greatly concern himself.

During these perambulations, Charles Stuart the pretender had effected a landing in the north, and boldly laid claim to his grandfather's forfeited throne. The partial success attending his opening career, and the alarm it produced, had thrown the country into considerable disorder. The Presbyterians, in general, were loyal; those of the Secession were universally so. There were many amongst them who had been eye-witnesses of the cold-blooded butcheries, the unqualified tyranny, and ruinous spoliation sanctioned by the last of the Stuarts, and shuddered at the thought of their return. They were inclined, of course, to stand by the king and a Protestant succession, at all hazards; nor was it ever known that one of their body joined the ranks of the pretender. Mr Brown was imbued with the same political principles; and observing one day a party of Highlanders approaching him, he had the address to conceal himself till they were gone; when, pondering on the unsettled state of the country, which he considered unsafe for one of his profession, he came to the resolution of relinquishing his present employment, at least till quieter times. In pursuance of this new scheme he concealed his pack in a peat-stack, and enlisted in a corps of volunteers that had been raised in the neighbourhood in support of government; with whom he did duty in Blackness, and latterly in the castle of Edinburgh, till the rebellion was extinguished by the decisive battle of Culloden.

On the breaking up of his regiment, he retired to the scenes of his former wanderings, withdrew his deposit from the peat-stack, and recommenced his former employment, which he seems to have followed for at least another year. Tired at last of this uncongenial and wandering life, and wishing to get into a more direct road to his ultimate design, he undertook at the suggestion of several friends the toilsome and troublesome vocation of a teacher. In 1747 he opened a school at Gairney Bridge, a village in the vicinity of Kinross; which he superintended for two years with remarkable success. His experience, as a self-taught scholar, enabled him with more ease to lead them through those elementary difficulties that stand in the way of the young scholar; while his patience and conscientious assiduity, which peculiarly qualified him for an instructor of youth, attracted scholars from every quarter. While thus unwearied in carrying them forward in the various branches of education, he laid hold on every proper opportunity to impress their young minds with the importance of practical religion; particularly on Saturday, before dismissing his school, he made it his constant rule to address them on the duty, the propriety, and urgent necessity of remembering their Creator and Redeemer in the days of their youth; and the happy result of his pious endeavours may be partly gathered from the astonishing fact, that, though only two years a schoolmaster, eight or nine of his scholars were afterwards ministers of the gospel. His strenuous endeavours to press others forward in the paths of wisdom and usefulness, however, did not retard his own motion, or relax his industry. He has been known to commit to memory fifteen chapters of the book of Genesis in an evening after dismissing his school; and after all this unparalleled exertion, to allow himself only four hours in bed.

When the religious clause of the burgess' oath came under discussion in the Associate synod, it appeared that the members entertained very different views of the subject; the mournful consequence of which was a complete separation of the opposing parties into two distinct synods; the one denominated the Burgher, the other the Antiburgher synod. Though not as yet officially connected with the Secession Church, yet as a conscientious member, Mr Brown could not allow the question to pass without duly deliberating for himself and determining the path of duty; the result of his deliberation was, that though not fully satisfied with regard to the lawfulness of the oath, he did not consider it a matter of sufficient magnitude to break up all Christian communion and fellowship; but rather held it as a proper subject for the exercise of mutual forbearance. He consequently ranked with the adherents of the Burgher synod; of which body he continued a zealous and respected member till his death.

During the vacations of his school, Mr Brown attended the classes of philosophy and divinity under the superintendence of the Rev. Ebenezer Erskine and James Fisher; till having gone through the several courses, he passed trials before the presbytery of Edinburgh, and was licensed by that reverend body at Dalkeith, in 1751, to preach the gospel in their connexion. On this sacred service, he entered deeply impressed with the awful responsibility of his office; nor could he help being seriously affected with a coincidence, which one might think sufficient to shut the mouth of every calumniator; namely, that about the same time, if not on the same night, on which he was licensed, and sent forth, in acknowledged innocence, a commissioned messenger of Christ, the author and principal propagator of those malicious imputations, from which he had suffered so much, was excommunicated by his own supporters.—His probationary labours were of short duration, two calls having been got up almost simultaneously for discharging the duties of the pastoral office; the one from Haddington, the county town of East Lothian; the other from Stow, situated on the southern border of the shire of Edinburgh. The presbytery left him the choice of the two situations; and Mr Brown accepted of Haddington, partly in consideration of several disappointments that congregation had sustained, and partly also because it was the smallest, and likely to afford him the more leisure to prosecute his studies. In gratitude to the people of Stow, for the predilection they had shown for him, and as a small compensation for their disappointment, he preached for them several Sabbaths, and continued to examine them every year till they were supplied with a pastor of their own.

The pastor of a large congregation has but little time to spare from the duties of his office, compared with one engaged with a less numerous charge. In this respect Mr Brown found himself in his proper element at Haddington. There, without trenching on the duties of his office, he could devote a very considerable portion of his time to study; and this privilege he improved to the best advantage. In the summer months his constant rule was to rise between four and five, and during the winter by six. From these early hours, till eight in the evening, excepting the time allotted to bodily refreshment, family worship, or when called away on the duties of office, he continued to prosecute his studies with unremitting application. To a mind so ardent in the acquisition of knowledge, with a judgment so clear, a retentive memory, and exertions so intense, it was by no means surprising that he became greatly superior to most men engaged in discharging the same sacred duties. In acquiring the knowledge of languages, ancient or modern, he possessed a facility altogether his own. Without an instructor, unless for one month to start him in the Latin, as formerly mentioned, he soon got so far acquainted with that language as to relish its beauties; and, left to his own resources, though frequently but indifferently provided with the proper books, he soon became critically acquainted with the Greek, and especially the Hebrew. Of the living languages, he could read and translate the Arabic, Syriac, Persic, and Ethiopic, the French, Spanish, Italian, Dutch, and German. With him natural history, civil law, natural and moral philosophy, were particular objects of research; but divinity, and the history of human affairs, sacred or civil, were his favourite studies; and his success in these departments of knowledge are visible in his various works. Among the writers on divinity with whom he was versant, we find that Turretine, Pictet, Mastrecht, and Owen, with Boston, Erskine, and Hervey, were the chief; which shows that he accounted sound divinity and accurate sentiment a far better recommendation of his author, than the flowing fancy, the brilliant style, or the harmonious period. Though stimulated by a sense of duty, and strongly excited by inclination, to the study of divinity, such was his anxiety to become a universal scholar, that he made himself acquainted with the whole round of the sciences. In his reading, especially important works, he was in the habit of compendizing his author as he went along. In this way he abridged the whole of Blackstone's Commentaries, the ancient Universal History, and a number of other important works. This, however, is a method concerning which the learned hold different opinions. To lay aside the book, and abridge entirely from memory, and that in the writer's own language, without regarding the style of the author, will make the substance of the work more his own; which, with other reasons that might be named, seems to render it the more eligible method.

On the death of the Rev. J. Swanston of Kinross (1768), the professor of divinity for the Burgher branch of the Secession, Mr Brown was elected to fill the vacant office; nor were they at all disappointed in their choice. The ability and attention with which he fulfilled the various duties of that important charge, met with universal approbation. He found it was absolutely necessary to support the dignity of a teacher amongst his students, but could not help discovering, at the same time, the affection and anxious solicitude of a father for his children, which, on their parts, was rewarded with confidence, love, and obedience. He treated them with the greatest impartiality; or, if piety, talents, application, or exemplary conduct, in any case inclined him to a preference, he was careful that it should never be observed. To promote their best interests, he was unwearied in his labours of love. That he might satisfy himself that the young men were improving their time, he used to visit them at their lodgings early in the morning, to see that they were properly engaged. The ordinary course of attendance on the divinity lectures was five sessions, of two months each. In his View of Natural and Revealed Religion, and the Cases of Conscience subjoined to his Practical Piety, we have a connected view of the substance of all these lectures. His General History of the Church, as well as that of the British Churches, were originally intended for the use of his students. He ever considered personal piety the most essential qualification for successfully discharging the various and important duties of the ministerial office; and accordingly pressed on his students the pre-eminent interest they themselves had in the doctrines they were to preach to others; assuring them, that divinity was to be studied in a very different way from that of a system of philosophy; and that, without heart-religion, they must necessarily continue unprofitable students of theology. He urged, moreover, by all means to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the oracles of God in the original languages; and, next to these, with the writings of Turretine, Owen, Boston, Fisher's Marrow of Modern Divinity, the Erskines, and Hervey's Theron and Aspasio, with his Defence against Wesley. The serious and solemn manner in which, on particular occasions, he was in the habit of addressing his students, but especially on parting at the end of the sessions, seldom failed in melting both the speaker and hearer into tears, and of leaving the best impressions on their young minds; and the many able and acceptable ministers, in Great Britain and Ireland, who had been trained up under his tuition, afford the most convincing proof of his success in this department of his manifold labours.

But Mr Brown was not only distinguished as a minister of the gospel, and a teacher of divinity, he is celebrated also as an author. A strong desire to contribute towards the moral and religious improvement of mankind, and that he might, in some measure, be useful to the church of Christ, when he rested from his labours, weighed down every consideration of either profit or applause connected with his writings; indeed the pecuniary reward of all his labours, in this way, was but a matter of small amount, never exceeding forty pounds. It was reserved, however, for his booksellers to reap a much more bountiful harvest; several of his works having already appeared in upwards of thirty, and some even in forty editions. His first attempt as an author, was his large work on the Catechism, which appeared in the year 1758; the next was a lesser work, also on the Catechism; and the rest of his works succeeded one another as circumstances seemed to render them necessary. That the doctrines he taught might appear with all the solidity and perspicuity in his power, he was at the extraordinary pains of writing his manuscripts thrice, and occasionally four times over, before they went to press; and frequently, after all this trouble in correcting, adding, and retrenching them, to request some one of his brethren to examine, and give his candid opinion concerning them. But on none of his works has he bestowed so much labour as on his Dictionary of the Bible; a book of such diversified information, extensive research, and generally acknowledged utility, that it is doubtful if any work, of equal size, has hitherto appeared better calculated for assisting in the study of the Holy Scriptures, although now from the increased amount of information on scientific, historical, and other subjects, it necessarily is imperfect as compared with what he doubtless would have made it, had he possessed the opportunities of our day.

Among the things which obviously claim our attention in the character of Mr Brown, we must not pass over the astonishing extent of his scholastic acquirements. Though possessed of no very considerable fund of originality, his capabilities for the acquisition of almost every species of literary knowledge was such, that he outran most of all his contemporaries, though possessing every advantage of a regular education, and that from their infancy. Ordinary attainments, whether in languages or science, could by no means satisfy the ardour of his inquisitive mind. With a memory strongly retentive, a solid and discriminating judgment, and an inflexible and persevering assiduity, with the blessing of God on his labours, he acquired and secured an uncommon share of useful and ornamental knowledge; and especially from the oracles of God, with which, from a child, he had cultivated a very particular acquaintance, so that he could repeat almost every text, and state its meaning and connexion. His feet were early turned into the paths of wisdom. Apprehended by the grace of God while his mind was yet young and tender, he made choice of his law as the rule of his life, and solemnly devoted himself to his service. In prayer, public, secret, or domestic, he overstepped the rules of almost any prescribed routine; even amid the ordinary business of life, the breathings of his soul were continually breaking forth in ejaculations of gratitude and praise, particularly while composing, or committing his discourses to memory. He possessed such an habitual evenness of temper, that hopes realized or disappointed seemed neither to elate nor greatly depress his spirits. He lived always conscious of God's presence, and as one who had learned to lay down the sinful suspicion that men by nature have of Him. On hearing a peal of thunder he remarked, "that is the low whisper of my God." His Christian Journal, which presents a good index of the general tone of his mind, bears this inscription, "The soul that is ever attentive to God never hears a voice that speaks not o Him; the soul, whose eye is intent on Him, never sees an atom, in which she does not discern the face of her best beloved." He was scarcely ever seen to weep, unless it were from the impressions of divine truth on his own heart, or compassion for perishing souls. Bodily pain, or the death of relatives, he suffered without a tear; but when warning sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and, in Christ's stead, entreating and beseeching them to be reconciled to God, his heart got frequently too big for utterance.

In conversation his aim was obviously to edify and reform. On political subjects he seldom gave an opinion; and any remarks he made, when such topics were introduced, were with the design of changing the subject to something more useful and interesting, something more nearly allied to the hopes and fears of sinful men, and intimately connected with their welfare, both here and hereafter. From his habits of study, and serious turn of mind, his deportment was grave, though neither gloomy nor severe. In the circle of his friends he could take a share of that cheerful and innocent pleasantry which enlivens the social hour, and relaxes and prepares the mind for more severe pursuits. To formal visits, where he had no official call, he had a serious aversion, and considered such a mode of killing time the very bane of improvement. He was wont to say, that he would rather compose a sermon than spend an hour in this trifling way. Knowing his mind on this point, his people seldom encroached upon his time without some necessary call; nor made he many visits to their houses unless in the line of his profession.

In order to form an opinion of the importance which Mr Brown attached to the improvement of time, we have only to consider the number and extent of his publications, as they appear in the list given in the close of this narrative, together with the labour bestowed in correcting and revising them, as formerly mentioned; to which must be added his ministerial labours, which were executed on the largest scale, and with the most conscientious precision; in which, excepting a short time in the winter, he delivered four discourses, a lecture and three sermons, every Sabbath, and in winter a lecture and two sermons. He visited every family in his congregation once, and examined them twice, a-year, with frequent examinations of the young, besides preaching occasionally in the adjacent villages. And in addition to all this labour, no one more conscientiously visited the sick and afflicted.

In church government Mr Brown, as his Letters on the subject amply show, was a Presbyterian, not from hereditary prejudice or party feeling, but from scriptural conviction. And yet he could discern where the saving truth was embraced, under whatever communion. He was truly a lover of all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, be they who they might, and his prayers for the extension of Christ's kingdom and the edification of his body the Church, were those of a heart that rejoiced to find the truth successful anywhere; yet he was strict in his views of communion, and maintained the purity of it in his own congregation, without denouncing others as antichristian.

As a minister of Christ, though he possessed a singular talent in deliver ing discourses calculated to awaken careless sinners to the consideration of their eternal concerns, yet his greatest pleasure consisted in publishing the free grace and pardoning mercy of God through Jesus Christ, offered to all, even the chief of transgressors. He had a happy turn of mind in selecting subjects suitable to special occasions and providential occurrences, either passing over the nations or his own congregation. The style of his pulpit discourses was highly scriptural, and a vein of spiritual unction ran through the whole. He had evidently his heart on the work, and felt that he was speaking as an ambassador of God to guilty men—a messenger of love to such as are reconciled. In the public exercises of the sanctuary, both in preaching and prayer, his rule was to be short. He gave this advice to his students, and exemplified it in his practice—"Be short," said he, "in the pulpit and the family, in secret be as long as you please." Nor ought it to be forgotten that he was among the first who introduced into the Presbyterian Church in Scotland a more frequent dispensation of the Lord's Supper, and urged the improvement on the public, so that not only in most places has the ordinance come to be dispensed twice a-year, instead of once, as formerly, but in most dissenting churches it is celebrated quarterly. Great as his learning certainly was, he made no exhibition of it in his sermons; on the contrary, his main object was to reduce the great truths of religion to the level of the meanest understanding of his hearers. In addressing immortal souls, he spake as one having authority, with all that boldness and fidelity that became the importance of a subject in which was involved all that is either dreadful or desirable.

A respectable English divine, who for some time heard him in his own meeting-house, says, "I well remember a searching sermon he delivered from that text, 'What went ye out into the wilderness for to see?' &c. At that time I had no experimental acquaintance with the truth as it is in Jesus; yet his grave appearance in the pulpit, his solemn, weighty, and energetic way of speaking, used to affect me very much.' Certainly his preaching was close, and his address to the conscience pungent. Like his Lord and Master he spake with hallowed pathos, having himself tasted the sweetness, and felt the power, of what he delivered.—If the style of his printed sermons should seem harsh and unpolished to a fastidious ear, his own congregation, and others who have heard him, have at least attested that the sense of all these minor deficiencies was swallowed up in sympathy with his soaring devotion, or lost in the ardour of his energetic expostulations. Avowed infidels have sometimes been so struck with this, when hearing him, that their sarcastic leer has been forced to give place to gravity and close attention. He was never backward to preach, if sinners were but willing to hear. In place of considering it the drudgery of office, he accounted it an honour bestowed, a glorious privilege, a grace given him, to preach to poor and perishing sinners the unsearchable riches of Christ. Unless on days of fasting or thanksgiving, his public prayers were short; nor in visiting the sick was he ever tedious, but frequent, and, if possible, it was done immediately on his receiving information; nor did he consider his duty in this respect confined to his own congregation, when told that his visit would be acceptable to those of any other denomination. Having tasted the sweetness of early religion, he attended to the instruction and admonition of the children and youth of his congregation with the most earnest solicitude; he examined them at their schools, and frequently appointed diets of examination for them in his meeting-house; preached sermons occasionally, and sometimes a series of sermons, calculated for their instruction in the first principles of the oracles of God; and often, in the application of his sermons, expostulated with them on the propriety, the pleasure, and pre-eminent importance of devoting the days of their youth to the service of God. Prayer was his delight; and what he practised himself with so much pleasure, he uniformly recommended to, and encouraged in others. A society of children for religious purposes was held for some years in his own house; and though the meeting was attended on the Saturday evening, when he was likely to be seriously engaged in his weekly preparations, he frequently found time to visit, exhort, and pray with them.

Having been early set up as the butt of malice, and sorely shot at by the poisoned arrows of malevolence, he had learned to appreciate the value of a good name; and ready, at all times, to do to others as he would that they should do unto him, he was unwilling to listen to, and ever cautious in believing, an ill report of any person, knowing how foully his own innocence had been represented. He had a deep sense of the evil of sin, as offensive to God and ruinous to the souls of men; he deplored it in himself and lamented it in others; he had contemplated its malignity, and calculated the value of an immortal soul by the inestimable price paid for man's redemption. In imitation of his Lord and Master, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; but while suffering the wanton cruelties and unmerited indignities heaped upon him by his relentless murderers, prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do:"—in this spirit of meekness and christian charity, Mr Brown replied to some clergymen who had vilified some of his works from the press—"Whatever they please to call me," said he, "may they be called the redeemed of the Lord: whatever they wish me, my heart's desire and prayer to God is, that they may be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation." Against the authors and abettors of that malicious calumny, so cruelly circulated through the country against him when a student, a breath of resentment was never heard from his lips. While thus frankly forgetting and forgiving the injuries he had received, he was warmly attached to his friends, particularly his early benefactors; even their children he regarded with the feelings of a father. The companions of his youth, whatever might be their circumstances or rank in life, had a particular place in his affections, happy at all times in finding an opportunity to do them a service.

None more earnestly wished the spreading of the blessed gospel. He gladly undertook many long and severe journeys to congregations destitute of pastors, where he might have access to preach the glad tidings of salvation. He greatly rejoiced in the success of Brainerd, and other missionaries; and often in preaching, when his subject would admit, descanted with much pleasure on missions to the heathen world. Of this he was peculiarly fond a few years before his death. Meetings for prayer and religious conversation he laboured to encourage, not merely by recommending them from the pulpit, but by frequently attending them himself. Those in the town he visited, if possible, once a-week; those in the country, as often as he had opportunity. Persons weak in knowledge, who attended them, he kindly encouraged, by showing respect to such remarks as they made on divine truths. He met with trials from the irregular behaviour of some few members of his church; but when any fell into open and heinous transgressions, it grieved his spirit so much, as not unfrequently to deprive him of his night's rest. When he understood that differences existed between members of the church, he made it his business to have them speedily removed; and was particularly active this way, especially in view of the dispensation of the Lord's Supper. His success in the ministry was very considerable. In his own congregation, it is hoped, that a number claimed him for their spiritual father, and that others acknowledged him to be the helper of their faith and joy. Nor was it at home only that he was instrumental in doing good to souls; in various parts of the country, where he had access to preach, there were seals of his ministry. It is true, the success was frequently hid from himself; and while his Master secured the honour of making the word efficacious, he left the servant to cry, "I have laboured in vain; I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain." As a member of society, he endeavoured to know the mind of God in regard to every particular part of his duty; and having found the truth, he avowed and acted upon it without disguise. When truths of importance were opposed, zeal for his Master, and regard to mankind, brought him forward in their defence. This gave rise to such of his writings as were controversial. On the settlement of any of his students as fixed pastor to a congregation, he usually sent him a paper of excellent counsels in regard to the exercise of his ministry. There are many valuable letters in possession of the children of deceased ministers and private Christians, full of scriptural and suitable comfort and advice, which he sent on the death of their parents. Many a time did he wipe off the tear from the widow's face, by leading her faith to the promises of the covenant, and ministering to the supply of her necessities.

In ordinary charity he was exemplary—giving, on many an occasion, beyond what ordinary judgment would have deemed prudent for a man with his limited income, but not beyond what God gave him a heart to bestow. This is the true rule in all benevolence, and Mr Brown acted on it. His income, at the highest, never exceeded fifty pounds a-year, and was for a long period of his life only forty. Yet with these limited means was his charity extensive, while, at the same time, he reared his family in respectability, and educated two of them for the ministry—John, who became minister at Longridge, in the parish of Whitburn, and Ebenezer, at Inverkeithing. Both these gifted men have followed him to the rest of Christ's faithful servants, leaving a name worthy of sons of such a father. He considered every Christian bound to devote a tenth of his income to pious or charitable purposes, and often exceeded that proportion himself. With regard to his own personal expenses, he exercised the most rigid economy, that he might be better enabled to assist them who were in want. To poor congregations who requested a collection from his people, he frequently sent more than its probable amount out of his own pocket, rather than burden his flock, they being few in number, and generally poor. He used to say, the surest method of getting rich was lending to the Lord.

Mr Brown was strict in his keeping of, and sanctifying the Sabbath. The conversation too common amongst professing Christians, that consists in talking about ministers and other external concerns of the church, he considered by no means fitting for that holy day, and therefore warned all against such a trifling mode of spending any part of that sacred portion of their precious time. His own domestics, and all under his immediate influence, he strictly prohibited from such a sinful practice; exhorting them not to seek their own pleasures, think their own thoughts, nor speak their own words on that holy day.

From Mr Brown's eminence of character as a minister of the gospel, a teacher of divinity, and one so greatly distinguished as a linguist, it was impossible that he should not be extensively known; but his natural modesty prevented him from cultivating the acquaintance of many who were admirers of his works. He was honoured, however, with the correspondence of the Rev. Mr Phillips, late of Sarum, the Rev. Mr Simeon of Cambridge, the late Countess of Huntingdon, with that of the Rev. Mr Hall of Well Street, London, the Rev. Mr Mason of New York, Mr Annan of Boston, and others. He likewise received a very kind and pressing invitation from the Dutch church, in the province of New York, to be their teacher in divinity. This invitation, which he modestly declined, and his correspondence with the Countess of Huntingdon, were unknown till after his death.

About two years after his ordination, Mr Brown married Miss Janet Thomson, daughter of Mr John Thomson, merchant in Musselburgh; and for eighteen years enjoyed in her a discreet and praiseworthy helpmate and companion in his christian journey. By her he had several children, two of whom only survived their mother, John, afterwards minister at Whitburn, and Ebenezer at Inverkeithing. In 1773, about two years after her death, he married Miss Violet Croumbie, daughter of Mr William Croumbie, merchant at Stenton, East Lothian, by whom he left, at his death, four sons and two daughters. The intensity of Mr Brown's application to study was such as might have destroyed even the most robust constitution, and, in all probability, had brought upon him a prematurity of old age, with all its bitter concomitants. Several years before his death he felt that his memory was greatly on the decline, while his digestive powers were so relaxed, as to refuse the necessary means of support; in consequence of which his strength was daily giving way. In the beginning of 1787 this complaint increased to such a general and extreme debility, that no means could counteract; and feeling in himself that nature was exhausted beyond all hopes of restoration, he resigned himself to the will of his heavenly Father, who had conducted him through all the trials, difficulties, and vicissitudes of life, and brought him safely and honourably forward to the last stage of his pilgrimage journey. Unalarmed at the approach of the last enemy, his mind continued collected and cheerful, alike removed from fear, peevishness, and impatience. If at any time a desire of returning health preponderated in his mind, it was that he might thereby promote the glory of his Redeemer, and be further serviceable to his church on earth. On the 25th of February, 1787, though so weak that he could scarcely support himself in the pulpit, he preached from Luke ii. 26: "Unto him it was revealed that he should not taste of death until he had seen the Lord's Christ." In the close of his discourse he apprized his own congregation, that in that place there was every probability they should see his face no more, and gave them a solemn, affectionate, and soul-moving adieu. In the evening the congregation consisted chiefly of members of the established church, who usually attended his evening sermons, of whom he took a similar farewell; after having, with more than usual earnestness, pressed on their minds the mercy, grace, and glory, manifested in that embassy of peace and reconciliation with which he had been intrusted, from Acts xiii. 26: "To you is the word of this salvation sent;" and, having thus finished the course of his public ministry, retired, amid the tears of his audience, to die in the hope of that gospel, of which he had so long proclaimed the grace, and exemplified the purity. In communicating his religious experiences, he had hitherto been remarkably reserved; but as he approached the end of his journey, this delicacy, this habitual reserve, wholly disappeared, and his language, to all he had occasion to converse with, now was, "Come and see what the Lord hath done for my soul." The lingering nature of his complaints afforded him an opportunity of composing his own mind for the inevitable result, and also for arranging his secular concerns, and providing for the best interests of his family and congregation, to each of whom he drew up a letter of the most solemn and pathetic admonition, addressed to them as from the dead, as the best legacy of a dying father and pastor.

Some time before his death, at the request of some intimate friends and connexions, he drew up a short account of his own life and character; wherein, amongst many other things, he says, "Now, after having for nearly forty years preached Christ and his great salvation, I think I would rather beg my bread all the labouring days of the week, with an opportunity of preaching on the Sabbath the gospel of the grace of God to a congregation of sinful men, than, without that privilege, to be put in possession of the richest inheritance on earth. O the kindness of God! notwithstanding that he left me a poor orphan, without any relations on earth who had it in their power to help me to any purpose, many, who have had their parents spared with them far longer than I had mine, are now in deep poverty; or, what is infinitely worse, abandoned to all manner of wickedness; while, by strange means, the Lord has restrained and preserved me from poverty and want; yea, God, by his mere grace, hath raised the helpless orphan to the highest station in his church; and, I hope, has given some success, not only in preaching and writing, but also in training up many for the ministry; whom, I trust, he hath made, or will make, far more successful in winning souls to Christ than ever I have been. In this the Lord has obviously manifested himself the Father of the fatherless, and the orphan's stay. Lord, what am I, and what is my father's house, that thou hast brought me hitherto!"

Many of his devout sayings, during his last illness, have been preserved, of which the following are a few specimens: "Now that I consider myself passing into eternity, my joy and consolation is, that the Son of God passed by me in time of love, called me with a holy calling, and, by his all-powerful influence, conquered the enmity of my heart, and made me willing in the day of his power. That Jesus loved me, and gave himself for me; that his everlasting arms are under me, and I, as in a garrison, am kept, by the mighty power of God, through faith unto salvation; I am, therefore, as well assured of eternal felicity as I am of eternity itself. O to see the smiling countenance of my Redeemer, my Advocate and Intercessor! Such a sight I consider not only worth suffering for, but well worth the dying for. Again, the mercies I have received, and the sins I have committed, are both innumerable. God has been doing, I had almost said, all that he could, to save, favour, and comfort me, while I have been doing all in my power to destroy myself. I was young when left by my parents, yet their instruction, accompanied with God's dealings with my heart, has left such an impression as I trust will remain to eternity. I have served several masters, but none of them so kind as Christ. I have had dealings with many an honest man, but no creditor like Christ. O what kindnesses has he heaped upon me! what kind strugglings! what kind overlookings of my outrageous wickedness! with what kind smilings has he cheered my drooping soul! In my mad attempts he has often arrested me; my mad wishes he has often refused to grant me; and my mad words he has often seemed to overlook, and to this day has crowned me with lovingkindness and tender mercy. There would not have been more grace manifested in the salvation of the chief of devils than in saving me; the same price would have redeemed them, and the same manifestations of love would have overcome them. O how these words once penetrated my heart, He loved me, and gave himself for me."

Addressing himself to his two sons in the ministry, he said, with peculiar earnestness, "Labour, I beseech you, labour for Christ while you have strength. How I now regret my indolence and want of activity in his service. O commend Christ! there is none, none like Christ! Had I ten thousand hearts they should all be given him; had I ten thousand bodies, they should all be devoted to his service. Were he to make me young again, I think I would study to devise other and better means of winning souls, and apply them with more earnest activity than I have ever done. I am now so very weak, that reading tires me, walking tires me, riding, and even the smallest exertion tires me; but were I once with Jesus, fellowship with him will never tire. I am indeed very weak; but how delightful it is for one to feel himself weak when encircled with the friendly arms of omnipotence!"

On another occasion he said, "I have sometimes been agreeably entertained with a flighty sermon, but have always found that Scripture expressions only penetrated my heart. O what must Christ be in himself! Christ, who sweeteens heaven, sweetens Scripture, sweetens ordinances, sweetens earth and all its enjoyments, sweetens even tribulations and death, yea, and perfumes the putrefaction of the grave! What a strange kind of debt is that of grace! Were I even now indebted to any man a sum of three or four hundred pounds, it would distress me much; but my views of the debt, the incalculable debt I owe to the free grace and mercy of my God, greatly refresh me. I should not like to stand at the market-cross, I must confess, with a paper on my breast, declaring myself a bankrupt to men; but O! I think I should like to stand in the most public place in heaven, with all the redeemed company pointing at me as the greatest sinner that ever had been admitted within the gates of the New Jerusalem."

On hearing the usual demonstrations of joy on the king's birth-day, he said, "Blessed be God, that to us was born, in the city of David, a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord. This joyful and all-transporting declaration has kept the gospel-bells a sounding for many ages past, and they shall continue to ring with yet a louder and a louder peal. I do not expect to see it; it is, nevertheless, the joy and rejoicing of my heart, that the day draws nigh when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; when dead churches shall be quickened, apostate churches recovered, and new churches erected, in the regions of darkness and the shadow of death; and the sweet savour of the name of Christ, the knowledge of his laws, the glory of his kingdom, and the happiness of his subjects, be extended to the uttermost ends of the earth."

On the 17th of June he found himself extremely weak, and spake little; but the joy of God, and the peace that passeth all understanding, continued with him to the end. On the 19th his lips moved often, but few of his words could be understood, from the weakness of his voice; he was heard, however, to say, "The Lord is my strength and my song, he also is become my salvation." The last words he was heard to utter, were, my Christ! after which he lived about four hours, and fell asleep in Jesus, June 19, 1787, being in the sixty-sixth year of his age, and having completed the thirty-sixth year of his ministry. On the 24th his remains were interred in the churchyard of Haddington, and followed to their place of repose by almost all the inhabitants of the town, and a large concourse of his friends and brethren from a distance. On the following Sabbath his funeral-sermon was preached, in his own meeting-house, by the Rev. John Henderson of Dunbar; and most of the ministers of that connexion, which he had laboured so much to edify and honour, embraced the opportunity of rendering, in their own places, a similar tribute of respect. The Associate Synod, at their first meeting after his decease, unanimously agreed to testify "their respect to the memory of the Rev. John Brown, their late professor, whose eminent piety, fervent zeal, extensive charity, and unwearied diligence, in promoting the interests of religion, will long be remembered by this Court, especially by those members of it who had the happiness of studying divinity under his inspection."

Here we have no continuing city! The laws of mortality forbid that prophets, more than other men, should live for ever. Mr Brown, whose best wishes and affections embraced the generations yet to come, as well as that in which he lived, employed much of his time and talents in the only way by which he could continue his instructions; and though dead, he yet speaketh in his works, which are the best and most durable monuments to his memory—a list of which are here subjoined.

His first work was published in 1758, and was intended to illustrate the doctrinal standards of the Presbyterian Kirk. It was intitled, "An Help for the Ignorant; being an Essay towards an easy Explanation of the Westminster Confession of Faith and Catechisms, for the use of the young ones of his own congregation." To this he added afterwards a "Short Catechism introductory to the Shorter Catechism," and another explanatory of it. In all these he displays an intimate acquaintance with the doctrines of Scripture, and great facility in presenting them expressed in accurate language. If these works are not in the style of such as command attention in our day, the fault was not in the author, but in the method of his time, which consisted more in explaining, by finding expanded and synonymous expressions, than in translating difficult language into simple terms.

In one of these Catechisms he had ventured to insert a statement explanatory of the extent to which, in his view, the active righteousness of Jesus is imputed to believers. As this gave rise to an attack on his orthodoxy as a divine, he published, in 1759, a Dissertation explanatory of his views on this important point, and supporting them by quotations from eminent divines. The "Brief Dissertations on Christ's Righteousness, showing to what Extent it is Imputed to us in Justification, together with the Sentiments of Orthodox Divines in this important Question," is written in admirable spirit, and is, for its meekness, singular as a work in controversial theology.

Though able to combat, Mr Brown was more given to edify. In 1765, he published his "Christian Journal, or Common Incidents Spiritual Instructors." The piety and devout spirit which breathe through this work are unquestioned; but it is not a work of imagination sufficiently chastened for the refined age in which we live. Besides, the analogy is sometimes strained so far as to become ridiculous to all who are incapable of restraining their risibility, out of assured conviction that the godly man intended all for good.

In the year following, and with a versatility of talent which none but a well-stored mind, such as his, could have turned so speedily to account, he published his "History of the Rise and Progress of the Secession," and his "Letters on the Constitution, Discipline, and Government, of the Christian Church." These are intended to vindicate and explain the principles of Presbyterianism, as held by the Secession.

These were immediately followed by the first of a series of works intended to illustrate the figures, types, and predictions of Scripture. The first of the three, "An Explication of the Metaphors contained in Scripture, with Practical Reflections," was published in 1756; and the other two in 1781, under the titles, "An Evangelical View of the Types of the Old Testament," and "The Harmony of Scripture Prophecies, with the History of their Fulfilment." The last of these is the best of the three, and well executed, though now completely eclipsed by the work of Dr Keith. The works on the types and figures, like his "Christian Journal," are characterized by an overstraining of the analogies, and a waste of ingenuity in discovering types and typical allusions; but they are truly pious, and in the hands of Christian readers, may undoubtedly be useful.

In the year 1768, when elevated to the divinity chair, he published his "Dictionary of the Holy Bible." Of this we have already expressed our opinion. He commenced the same year the compiling of a System of Divinity. This was published eventually under the title, "A System of Divinity; or a Compendious View of Natural and Revealed Religion." No explication of the scheme of Christian doctrine, imbodied in the Westminster Confession of Faith, equals this in the excellence of its arrangement and the accuracy and precision of its statements. It is a most valuable work.

In 1771 he published "A General History of the Christian Church from the Birth of our Saviour to the Present Time;" and, in 1784, "A History of the Churches in Scotland and England from the Earliest Period." These two works were for the use of his students; and the latter is a work of value and painstaking research.

In 1775 he published the "Metrical Version of the Psalms, with Notes, exhibiting the Connexion, explaining the Sense, and for directing and animating the Devotion." This is much esteemed by the godly, and will continue to be of service to the Church.

The "Self-Interpreting Bible," by far the greatest of all his literary labours, and that on which his reputation as a theological writer is principally founded, made its first appearance in the year 1778, when it was received with an uncommon and still increasing approbation. His object in this laborious undertaking was, to bring all the information that ordinary readers may consider necessary for furnishing them with the practical knowledge of the Scriptures, within their reach, and on a level with their capacities. In the execution of his design he has given a lengthened Introduction, wherein the divine authority of the Scriptures is clearly vindicated, the typical institutions explained, and the most remarkable events recorded, by the sacred penman, chronologically arranged. In his illustrations of the Sacred text he has very correctly gathered up the scope of each book, and the contents of every chapter, given a mass of marginal references, a paraphrase on the most obscure passsages, with a continued series of devotional reflections, and a great variety of useful and instructive tables. This great and edifying work, taken together with his Dictionary of the Holy Bible, form a distinguishing monument of his superior qualification for illustrating the sacred records, more durable than brass or marble.

In 1781 he published "The Christian Student and Pastor, exemplified in the Lives of Nine Ministers in Scotland, England, and America." This was followed by "The Young Christian, or the Pleasantness of Early Religion, exemplified in the Lives of Eleven Young Persons;" and he concluded this series of works illustrative of personal religion, by publishing, in 1783, "Practical Piety, exemplified in the Lives of Thirteen eminent Christians, and illustrated in Cases of Conscience." These are most useful and attractive works.

In 1782 he published "Letters on Toleration and the Binding Obligation of the Scotch Covenants." His views on the subject of toleration do not accord with those now generally held on this point. But the topic has been canvassed more thoroughly since his days, and is now better understood. Had he lived in this age he would have altered his sentiments.

In 1783 he published his "Concordance to the Bible;" and, in 1785, a pamphlet against running the mail on the Sabbath, which was the last thing he put to the press. Besides the works now enumerated, he published several Tracts and Sermons. These, collected together, now form his "Select Remains."

The good worthy minister of the gospel at Haddington has long ago gone to his reward. But his works still keep his name, and will keep it in everlasting remembrance. Unquestionably he was a man of no ordinary genius, and in perseverance and painstaking few have ever equalled him. It is impossible to contemplate the orphan charge of the honest shepherd, John Ogilvie, exalted to the chair of a theological professor, and leaving behind him works so voluminous, so precious and masterly, without acknowledging that talent is the gift of God, and when spent in his service, not only blesses the generation in which it is spent, but extends its blessed fruits to all generations to come. We cannot close our Memoir more appropriately than by laying before the reader the inscription on his monument, still to be seen in Haddington churchyard.

AFTER MAINTAINING AN EMINENT CHARACTER FOR

PIETY, CHARITY, LEARNING, AND DILIGENCE,

HE DIED,

REJOICING IN THE HOPE OF THE GLORY OF GOD,

AND ADMIRING THE RICHES OF DIVINE GRACE TO HIM AS A SINNER,

AGED 65 YEARS.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours, and their works do follow them."

This is the last link of connexion between the dead and the living; the pathetic wish that the departed soul were still in the midst of us; the silent voice from the tomb that bids us prepare to follow; the eye of the dead looking from the sepulchre, and wondering when mortal man will admit the conviction that he is hurrying to the grave. Reader, the author of the Self-Interpreting Bible realized this conviction; he lived to God, and slept in Jesus. Study the Bible, as he did, and, by grace, you will live the life of the righteous, and your last end shall be like his.

AN INTRODUCTION

TO

THE RIGHT UNDERSTANDING OF THE ORACLES OF GOD.

OF THE DIVINE AUTHORITY OF THE SCRIPTURES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT.

No man, who is an unbiassed free-thinker, can soberly hearken to the dictates of his natural reason, and seriously ponder the absurd and contradictory principles and practices which have been or are prevalent among mankind, without perceiving that the light, or even the law of nature, is altogether insufficient to direct us to true holiness, or lasting happiness, in our present lapsed condition. It can give us no plain, distinct, convincing, pleasant, powerful, and lasting ideas of God. It cannot direct us in the right manner of worshipping him with due love, resignation, humility, self-denial, zeal, wisdom, sincerity, and fervent desire of the eternal enjoyment of him. It cannot show us our true happiness, which is suited to our highest powers, which may always be enjoyed without shame, suspicion, fear, or dread of loss or danger, and which will in every situation support and comfort us. It can discover no true system of morality, perfect in its rules, means, and motives. It can discover no effectual incitements to virtue, drawn from the excellency and presence of God the law-giver, from the authority of his law, or from his discovering a proper regard to it in rewarding virtue and punishing vice. It cannot manifest in a striking manner the certainty, excellence, pleasure, and allurement of virtue or of future reward, nor carry us to that proper pitch of religion and virtue in our heart, which will ripen us for the full and immediate enjoyment of God. It cannot show us one perfect example of virtue, either among learned or unlearned heathens; nor give us any promise of God's assisting us in the study of it. It can discover no certainty that God will pardon our sins, —no proper atonement,—no actually pardoned sinner,—no happy soul, praising God for his pardoning mercy,—no spiritual worship, appointed by God for rebellious sinners,—no purpose, promise, perfection, or name of God, that can secure his pardon;—nor does it give us any hint that it could consist with his honour, or is intended in his patient bearing with sinners on earth;—nor does it afford any divine proclamation of pardon, nor even any incitement to us to forgive our injurers;—and, in fine, it cannot effectually sanctify our heart, nor produce that bent of will and affection, that inward peace with God, that sufficiency of light and strength from God, or that solid hope of eternal happiness, which is necessary to produce true holiness and virtue. It cannot support us under heavy and bitter afflictions, by showing us God's fatherly care of us, his promises to us, or his making all things to work together for our good,—nor can it comfort us against death by certain views of his love to us, and providing everlasting life and happiness for us. While reason, then, plainly suggests the possibility, the desirableness, and the necessity of a revelation from God, adapted to our circumstances, the books of the Old and New Testament manifest themselves reasonable, credible, and divinely inspired: It is their DIVINE INSPIRATION (which indeed supposes them reasonable and credible) that we now attempt to demonstrate. In what manner the influence, by which the penmen of the Scriptures were directed, affected them, we pretend not fully to explain. It is enough for us to know, that thereby they were infallibly guided and determined to declare what they did not formerly know; to conceive properly of what they had formerly known; and to express their subject in terms absolutely just in themselves, and calculated to convey the truths represented to others. But so far we may conclude, that, while the penmen exercised their own reason and judgment; Ps. xlv. 1; Mark xii. 36; Luke i. 3; Acts i. 1; 1 Pet. i. 11; the Holy Ghost (1) Effectually stirred them up to write; 2 Pet. i. 21. (2) Appointed to each his proper share or subject correspondent with his natural talents, and the necessities of the church in his time; Mat. xxv. 15; 2 Pet. i. 21. (3) Enlightened their minds, and gave them a duly distinct view of the truths which they were to deliver; Jer. i. 11—16; xiii. 9—14; Ezek. iv. 4—8; Dan. x. 1, 14; ix. 22—27; viii. 15—19; xii. 8; Amos vii. 7, 8; viii. 2; Zec. i. 19, 21; iv. 11—14; v. 6; John xvi. 13; Eph. iii. 3, 4; 1 Pet. i. 10, 11. Perhaps this illumination was given all at once to Paul, when caught up to the third heaven, but was bestowed gradually on the other apostles; Mark iv. 34; Luke xxiv. 17, 45; John xx. 22; Acts ii. 4; x. 9—15, 28, 34. (4) He strengthened and refreshed their memories to recollect whatever they had seen or heard, which he judged proper to be inserted in their writings; Jer. xxxi. 3; Luke i. 3; John xiv. 26. (5) Amidst a multitude of facts, he directed them to write precisely what was proper for the edification of the church, and neither more nor less, John xx. 30, 31; xxi. 25; Rom. iv. 23, 24; xv. 4; 1 Cor. x. 6—11. (6) He excited in their minds such images and ideas as had been treasured up in their memories, and directed them to other ends and purposes than themselves would ever have done of their own accord. Thus, under inspiration, Amos draws his figures from herds, flocks, and fields; Paul makes use of his classical learning; Amos i, ix. Acts xvii. 28; 1 Cor. xv. 33; Tit. i. 12. (7) He immediately suggested and imprinted on their minds such things as could not be known by reason, observation or information, but were matters of pure revelation; Is. xlvi. 9, 10; xli. 22, 23; xlv. 21; whether they respected doctrines, 1 Tim. iii. 16; or facts past or future, Gen. i. 2, 3; Lev. xxvi. &c. (8) He so superintended every particular writer, as to render him infallible in his matter, words, and arrangement; and by his superintending influence, made them all in connexion so write, as to render the whole Scripture, at any given period, a sufficient infallible rule to direct men to true holiness and everlasting happiness; Deut. viii. 4; Ps. i. 2; xix. 7—11; cxix. 105; Mat. xxii. 29; Luke xvi. 29, 31; John v. 39; Rom. xv. 4; 2 Tim. iii. 15—17; 2 Pet. i. 19. Many of the sentences recorded in Scripture are not inspired in themselves, being the words of Satan or of wicked men; but the Scripture report relative to these expressions is directed by divine inspiration.—That our books of the Old and New Testament, the APOCRYPHAL TRACTS being excluded from both, are of an INFALLIBLE and DIVINE original, is thus evident.

I. The subject MATTER of them requires a divine inspiration. The history of the creation, and part of that of the flood, &c., therein related, were known only to God. Mysteries relative to the Trinity of persons in the Godhead; the covenant of grace; the incarnation of the Son of God; his undertaking, offices, and states, and our union with him; justification, adoption, sanctification, spiritual comfort, and eternal blessedness, in him, are therein declared;—which God only could comprehend or discover. The scheme of religion therein prescribed is so pure and benevolent, that God alone could devise or appoint it. While it represents the Most High as everywhere present—as infinitely perfect, powerful, wise, and good—holy, just, and true—an infinitely gracious lover of righteousness, and hater of iniquity,—as our bountiful Creator and Preserver, and as the infinitely merciful Redeemer of our souls, by the obedience and death of his only begotten Son,—it requires us to know, believe in, and revere him with our whole heart, soul, mind, and strength, as our Father, Friend, Husband, Saviour, and Portion in Christ; and confidently to depend on him, and ask from him whatever we need in time or eternity; and to obey him in all that he commands, as children whom he hath begotten again to a lively hope, and established as the heirs of his everlasting inheritance. We are here taught how human nature may be truly improved and perfected, by our receiving Jesus Christ as made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption,—as an effectual principle and root of true holiness;—and by our walking in him by faith, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly, patiently, contentedly, and cheerfully,—setting our affections upon things above, where Christ is, and through the Spirit mortifying every sinful and selfish inclination. We are taught to love our neighbours as ourselves,—perfectly fulfilling the particular duties of every relative station; and to lay aside all malice, envy, hatred, revenge, or other malevolent dispositions or passions; to love our enemies; to render good for evil, blessing for cursing; and to pray for them that despitefully use us. These laws of universal purity and benevolence are prescribed with an authority proper only to God, and extended to such a compass and degree as God alone can demand: and those sins are forbidden which God alone can observe or prohibit. The most powerful motives to duty, and dissuasives from vice, are here most wisely proposed, and powerfully urged; motives drawn from the nature, the promises, the threatenings, the mercies, and the judgments of God; particularly from his kindness in the work of our redemption, and his new-covenant relations to us in Christ; and from advantages or disadvantages, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. And, while the most excellent means of directing and exciting to, and of exercising piety and virtue, are established on the most prudent forms and authoritative manner, the most perfect and engaging patterns of holiness and virtue are set before us in the example of Jesus Christ our Redeemer, and of God as reconciled in him, and reconciling the world to himself; Ex. xxi. 1—17; Lev. xviii—xx; Deut. iv—xxv; Mat. v—vii; Rom. vi; xii—xv;

Gal. v, vi; Eph. iv—vi; Col. iii, iv; 1 Thes. v; Tit. ii; Jam. i—v; 1 Pet. i—v; 2 Pet. i; 1 John i—v., &c., &c.

II. The MANNER in which these subjects are exhibited in the Scriptures is evidently divine;—wise, condescending, and yet majestic. The discoveries have been gradual, as men stood in need of them or were in a proper condition to receive them; Gen. iii, ix, xii, xvii, &c.; Heb. i. 1. The principal points; as of God's new-covenant grant of himself to sinful men; his full satisfaction in and with Christ as our Mediator; and the law of the ten commandments; were declared from heaven with uncommon solemnity; Mat. iii. 17; xvii. 5; Ex. xx. 1—18, &c. And, while these and other similar truths are announced in a style the most plain and simple, there appears therein something astonishingly sublime and majestic. While the dictates are authorized with a THUS SAITH THE LORD, the very style, particularly in Scripture songs, Job, Psalms, Lamentations, and Isaiah, and in our Saviour's discourses, &c., is at once surprisingly suited to the dignity of the Author, the nature of the subject, and the condition of the persons addressed.

III. The manifest SCOPE of the Scriptures is to render sin loathsome and hated, and to promote holiness and virtue; to humble men, and reform them from their beloved lusts and sinful practices, and to exalt and glorify God to the highest. No good angel or man could dare to personate God in the manner of the Scriptures; nor could bad angels or men publish, and so warmly inculcate, what is so remarkably contrary to their own vicious inclinations and honour. It therefore remains that God alone must be the author and inditer of them.

IV. Notwithstanding the dictates of Scripture are so extremely contrary to the natural inclinations of mankind, and were published without any concert by various persons, of very different conditions, and in different ages and places, yet such is the marvellous HARMONY of all the parts, in their whole matter and scope, as irrefragably demonstrates that these penmen must all have been directed by the same Spirit of God. One part of our Bible is so connected with, and tends to the establishment of another, that we cannot reasonably receive any part without receiving the whole. In the New Testament we have the historical narrative of the fulfilment of the typical and verbal predictions of the Old. In both Testaments the subsequent books, or subsequent parts of a book, are connected with that which went before, as a narrative of the execution of a scheme begun, or of the fulfilment of a prophecy declared. If we receive the history, we must also receive the prediction. If we admit the prediction, we must believe the history. To a diligent searcher of the Scriptures, it cannot fail to occasion a most pleasant astonishment, to find everywhere the same facts supposed, related, or prepared for; the same doctrines of a gracious redemption through Jesus Christ exhibited, or supposed to be true; the same rules or exemplifications of piety and virtue, and motives thereto; the same promises of mercy, or threatenings of just misery, to persons, societies, or nations, exhibited without a single contradiction. When there is an appearance of contradiction, it will be found that the different passages do not respect the same thing or person, in the same respect, and in the same circumstances of time, place, or manner; and so there is no contradiction at all.

V. The manifest CHARACTER OF THE PENMEN further evinces the divine original of the Scriptures. They everywhere discover the utmost candour and disinterestedness: they everywhere candidly publish the infirmities, or even faults of themselves, their friends, and nation. None of them ever gained anything in this world by their work but trouble and vexation; and, according to their own principles, they could obtain nothing in the next but everlasting destruction, if they indulged themselves in any imposture. The matter and manner of their work infinitely transcended their abilities. Setting their predictions aside for a moment, how could men of the best education, and especially men of no education, form such exalted schemes of sense, piety, and virtue? Or how could wicked men, inspired by Satan, publish and prosecute such a scheme of mystery, holiness, and morality? Such is the character of Jesus Christ, drawn by the four evangelists, with every mark of simplicity and candour, and in which ignominious suffering is made a leading article, that the delineation thereof—and that too by persons of no uncommon knowledge—without a real and exactly answerable model, would, to every unbiassed free-thinker, appear more incredible and impossible than even the incarnation, obedience, and death of the Son of God, therein attested, however astonishing.

VI. The providence of God has, in a most marvellous manner, PRESERVED the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament from being lost or corrupted. While perhaps millions of other books, once of considerable fame in the world, and which no one sought to extirpate, are lost and forgotten, the Scriptures, though more early written, and though Satan and his agents unnumbered have hated them, and sought to cause their memory to perish from among men, or to corrupt them, still remain, and remain in their purity. In great wisdom and kindness, God, for their preservation, ordered an original copy to be laid up in the Holy of Holies, Deut. xxxi. 26; and that every Hebrew king should write out a copy for himself, Deut. xvii. 18; and appointed the careful and frequent reading of them, both in private and public. With astonishing kindness and wisdom has he made the contending parties who had access to the Scriptures —such as the Jews and Israelites, the Jews and Samaritans, the Pharisees and Sadducees, the Jews and Christians, and the various parties of Christians —MUTUAL CHECKS upon each other for almost three thousand years past, that they might not be able either to extirpate or to corrupt any part of them. When the Christians had almost utterly lost the knowledge of the Hebrew originals, God, by his providence, stirred up the Jewish rabbins to an uncommon labour for preserving them in their purity, by marking the number of letters, and how often each was repeated, in their Masoras. By what tremendous judgments did he restrain and punish Antiochus Epiphanes, the Syro-Grecian king; Diocleslan, the Roman emperor; and others who attempted to destroy the copies of Scripture, in order to extirpate the Jewish or Christian religion! And he has bestowed amazing support and consolation on such as have risked or parted with their lives rather than deny the dictates of Scripture, or in the least contribute to their extirpation or misinterpretation. By quickly multiplying the copies or the readers of the Scriptures, he rendered it impossible to corrupt them in anything important, without causing the corruption all at once to start up into every copy dispersed through the world, and into the memories of almost every reader;—than which nothing could be more absurd to suppose. Nay it is observable that of all the thousands of various readings which the learned have collected, not one in the least enervates any point of our faith or duty towards God or man.

VII. Multitudes of MIRACLES, which only the infinite power of God could effect, have been wrought for the confirmation of the doctrines and facts mentioned in the Scriptures, and for evincing the divine mission of the principal publishers thereof. The wisdom and goodness of God required him, especially when in the days of Moses and Christ he was establishing a new form of worship, to mark the important declarations of his will with some distinguishing characteristics, awakening to consideration. Nothing appears more proper for this end than a series of uncontrolled miracles, which no power could check, and which supported nothing but what was agreeable to reason, so far as it could conceive of it. Neither reason nor experience can admit that the infinite wisdom and goodness of God could permit one, much less multitudes of uncontrolled miracles to be wrought for the confirmation of falsehood. But the miracles wrought in confirmation of the Scriptures have every favourable circumstance that could be wished. Their number was almost beyond reckoning, and all of them calculated to answer some great and benevolent end. According to the nature of the broken law, many of those wrought by Moses, Elijah, and Elisha, were tremendous and dreadful. According to the nature of the gospel which they published, the miracles wrought by Jesus Christ and his apostles were generally of a benevolent nature and tendency. Moreover, most of the miracles mentioned in Scripture were performed in so public a manner that both friends and foes had the fullest access to a thorough examination of their nature and certainty. Most of them were wrought when the concurrent circumstances of Providence loudly called mankind to observe and examine them. Most of them—as the passage of the Hebrews through the Red Sea and through Jordan; the forty years' sustenance of the people in the Arabian desert, by manna from heaven, and water from a rock; the stoppage or retrograde motion of the sun; the feeding of thousands with a few loaves and fishes; and the raising of dead persons—were of such a nature, that nothing less than absurdity itself can suppose the senses of the witnesses to have been deceived, or that any power less than divine could have produced them. Besides, all these miracles were wrought in confirmation of a religion the most holy, pure, and benevolent; and most of them by persons who were eminent patterns of virtue. And that such miracles were wrought, is in part attested by the inveterate enemies thereof, whether Jews or heathens.

VIII. The PROJECT of reforming mankind by the Scriptures, and the manifest SUCCESS thereof, is a continued miraculous proof of their divine original. What, but a certain evidence of his divine commission, could have made Moses risk his character—that on the sixth day of the week, the whole Hebrew nation in the wilderness should always find manna sufficient for two days, and that the sixth year should always produce a double crop; and, on that supposition, enact a standing law, that they should never attempt to gather manna on the seventh day, or to cultivate their fields on the seventh year. Without certain assurance of divine protection from their inveterate enemies on every hand, on those occasions, could he ever have required that all the males, able to walk, should, three times every year, leave their homes, and assemble to keep the sacred festivals near the middle of their country? Without manifest warrant from God, could he ever have hoped that there would be a sufficiency of males in Aaron's family to execute the priesthood for all Israel, free from all those blemishes which he marks out as excluding from that office? Without this, could he ever have hoped that the small country of Canaan could afford sustenance for his numerous nation, while they were debarred from so many kinds of eatables, and were required to give yearly so much of the product to the Lord?——The PROJECT of Christianity, and its SUCCESS, are still more astonishing. Nothing less than a certain warrant and almighty influence from God could effect the one or the other. How is it possible that a few men, weak or villanous, without the smallest assistance from worldly influence, could ever form a scheme to reform the whole world from principles and practices deep rooted in their inclination, and firmly established by extensive custom, by long confirmed laws, and the high and universal authority of nations,—by mere declarations of what they thought true?—nay, by what they knew to be falsehood, if they were impostors! How could villains, or even the weakest, choose for their hero One who had been always contemned, and had lately been crucified between thieves as a noted malefactor, by the common consent of his own countrymen!—One who, if he was not God in our nature, had abused his disciples' confidence, and decoyed them into a train of temporal and eternal miseries!—One who had never encouraged them to hope for anything in this world, in following him, but crosses, hatred, reproach, imprisonment, tortures, and death;—nor, if they indulged themselves in a fraudulent prosecution of their cause, for anything in the future state but everlasting destruction! How stupendous, and absolutely incredible, that a few villanous projectors of reformation should begin their work, a few weeks after, in the very place where, and among the very multitude by whom, Jesus their hero had been ignominiously crucified;—and should in the most public and undaunted manner, in the face of danger and death, avow him to be the Son of God; and to have risen from the dead, ascended to heaven, and sat down at the right hand of God;—that amidst the deepest poverty, cruel hatred, calumnious reproach, and inhuman persecution from enemies, they should, with unwearied zeal and cheerfulness, carry on their project, never appearing to covet any outward honour or wealth;—and that they should form a system of doctrines and morals, infinitely superior, in sense and dignity, to all the productions of Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, and other renowned doctors of the heathen world! How astonishing is it that these few preachers, without the smallest encouragement from earthly powers, should so triumph over the craft, the rage, and power of the infuriated Jews; triumph over the pride, the policy, and power of the Roman empire, when at its full strength and maturest sagacity;—over the pride of learning, and the obstinacy of ignorance, hatred, prejudice, and lust;—over the hardened inclinations, deep-rooted customs, and long-fixed laws of Jews and heathens;—and that, contrary to every temptation from outward advantage, nay, notwithstanding every conceivable form of opposition, the gospel should, within a few years after Christ's ascension, be preached in almost every corner of the Roman empire and the countries adjacent;—and that multitudes, at the hazard of every temporal loss or punishment from men, should readily believe, constantly adhere to, and cheerfully and strictly practise the same! and it is equally astonishing, that, for more than seventeen hundred years, notwithstanding innumerable persecutions, together with the wickedness of professors, and the inconceivable villanies or base indifference of the clergy, this project has been more or less successful in reforming the hearts and lives of multitudes in almost every nation of importance under heaven.

IX. Nothing more clearly demonstrates the divine authority of the Scriptures than the exact fulfilment of the typical and verbal predictions therein exhibited, in the most circumstantial manner, hundreds or thousands of years before that fulfilment took place, or there was the smallest appearance of it. Predictions (especially as above circumstantiated) necessarily imply a looking with certainty through an infinity of possible events, and seeing and determining what shall certainly happen, and what not. Such foresight and determination can only take place in the omniscient and almighty Governor of the world, who alone can declare the end from the beginning.—To mark the all-seeing JEHOVAH, the author of Scripture, its pages are crowded with predictions, the exact fulfilment of which is recorded in the inspired and other histories written since the events took place. Almost every historical passage in our Bible is a narrative of something antecedently foretold. The New Testament is little else than a representation of the fulfilment of the types and predictions of the Old, relative to Jesus Christ and his gospel church. Nay, the histories of churches and nations, from the beginning to the end of the world, do, to a judicious observer, represent little more than the fulfilment of Scripture predictions, as to the families of Adam and Noah; the Canaanites, Amalekites, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Egyptians, Ethiopians, Syrians, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, Greeks, Romans, Saracens, Tartars including Goths, Huns, and Turks; and especially the Jews, Jesus Christ, the New Testament church, and Antichrist; as shall be hereafter manifested. This proof, drawn from the fulfilment of predictions, increases in evidence more and more as that fulfilment takes place, and is observed. The dispersion and misery of the Jewish nation, so long continued, or so often repeated; the progress and continuance of the gospel among the Gentiles; the long continued dominion of the popes, and the partial revolt from it at the Reformation: the past and present condition of the Turkish empire; the present state of Assyria, Chaldea, Arabia, Phenicia, Canaan, Egypt, &c., in exact correspondence to Scripture predictions, are standing testimonies of the divine original of our Bibles, no less conclusive and striking than if we had miracles wrought every day.

X. Though the above arguments are sufficient to silence gainsayers, and to produce a rational conviction that the Scriptures are of divine original and authority, it is only the effectual application of them to our mind, conscience, and heart, in their SELF-EVIDENCING DIVINE LIGHT and POWER, which can produce a cordial and saving persuasion that they are indeed the word of God. But, when thus applied, this word brings along with it such light, such authority, and such sanctifying and comforting power, that there is no shutting our eyes nor hardening our hearts against it; no possibility of continuing stupid and unconcerned under it: but the whole faculties of our soul are necessarily affected with it, as indeed marked with divine evidence, and attended with almighty power; 1 Thes. i. 5; ii. 13; John vi. 63.

CHAPTER II.

OF RULES FOR UNDERSTANDING THE SCRIPTURES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

I. Let us labour, in much fervent prayer and supplication, for the powerful influence and inhabitation of the Holy Ghost (who perfectly understands the Scriptures, and indited and appointed them for our spiritual edification,) that he may effectually interpret and apply them to our heart. He is the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ; He it is who searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God:—He is the Anointing, that is Truth, and teacheth all things. He can enlighten our eyes, and make us to know the things freely given us of God, and to see wondrous things out of God's law; can make us by the Scriptures,—wiser than our teachers—wise unto salvation; Eph. i. 17, 18;—iii. 16—19; 1 Cor. ii. 10, 12; 1 John ii. 20, 27; Ps. cxix. 18, 96—108; 2 Tim. iii. 15—17.

II. Being renewed in the spirit of our minds, and having in us the mind of Christ, we ought, under a deep sense of God's presence and authority in the Scripture, earnestly, and with much self-denial, to search the Scriptures, by much serious reading and meditation thereon; chiefly that we may spiritually know the mind, behold the glory, and feel the effectual power of God therein, in order to our faith in, and obedience to them. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: it is the man who feareth God to whom he will teach his way, and reveal the secrets of his covenant;—it is the man who hath the Spirit of Christ, the mind of Christ—who hath seen the Lord, and tasted that he is gracious—the man who hath had his eyes opened, that can discern, judge of, and understand the matter or manner of Scripture revelations: 1 John ii. 20, 27; Ps. xxv. 12, 14; 1 Cor. ii. 14—16; John xiv. 21—23; Luke xxiv. 45; Ps. cxiv. 18. A deep sense of our ignorance, and of our absolute need of Scripture influence, must animate us to the earnest study of knowledge. He, who thinks that of himself he knows divine things to any purpose, knoweth nothing as he ought to know—only with the lowly is wisdom. God, who resisteth the proud, giveth grace to the humble: the meek will he guide in judgment; the meek will he teach his way. The mysteries of the kingdom he hides from the self-conceited, wise, and prudent; and reveals them unto babes; 1 Cor. viii. 2; Prov. xi. 2; Ja. iv. 6; Ps. xxv. 9; Mat. xiii. 11; xi. 25. Scarcely can anything tend more effectually to blind the mind, and harden the heart, than the searching of the Scriptures in a philosophical manner, regarding merely or chiefly the rational sense of the passage. Hence multitudes of preachers, who daily study the Scriptures for the sake of their external performances, are of all men the most ignorant how Christ's words are spirit and life. The god of this world blinds their minds; so that hearing many things, they never open their eyes; and seeing many things, they never behold one truth, or the subject thereof, in its glory; Is. vi. 9, 10; xlii. 18, 19; lvi. 9; 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4.

III. We must earnestly study to reduce all our Scriptural knowledge to practice. Not any number of the best rules can make an apprentice to understand his business so much as a considerable practice therein. When serious contemplation of Scripture and experimental feeling and practice of it meet together, true Scriptural knowledge must needs be greatly enlarged and sweetened. The man that doth Christ's will, he shall know of his doctrine whether it be of God. If God's commandments be ever with us, and be kept by us, they will render us wiser than our enemies, wiser than the ancients, or even our teachers; John vii. 16, 17; Ps. cxix. 98, 100.

IV. In searching the Scriptures, we must proceed in an orderly manner beginning with that which is most plain and practical; and afterwards study that which is more difficult and obscure. To recommend this method, the FIRST PART of both Testaments is chiefly HISTORICAL, plainly declaring what things had been done; and intermingled with plain directions how the more necessary duties ought to be done. Of this kind are the books of the Old Testament from GENESIS to ESTHER inclusively, and the first five books of the New. These ought carefully to be studied, as there are manifold references and allusions to that which is contained in them in the other books. Nay, even in the subsequent histories, there is frequent mention of, or allusion to, the creation; flood; deliverance from Egypt; captivity in Babylon; birth, life, and death of Christ. The SECOND PART of both Testaments, i. e. from JOB to the SONG of SOLOMON inclusively in the Old, and all the EPISTLES in the New, consist chiefly of DOCTRINAL declarations of the nature, perfections, purposes, and works of God; of the person and mediation of Jesus Christ, and the way of salvation through him; and of man in his innocent, fallen, recovered, and eternal state; mingled with commands and directions how to behave answerably to the relations and providences of God towards us; together with manifold hints of the conduct of God, and the cases of his people. The LAST PART in both Testaments is chiefly PROPHETICAL, declaring beforehand the mercies and judgments which should take place all along, till the end of the world; but intermingled with manifold charges of guilt, as the cause of the judgments threatened;—and with historical hints of the circumstances or fulfilment of the predictions; and directions how to behave aright. This part, generally relating to things then future, is naturally most obscure. It is even necessary that it should be so, that the persons concerned might be induced to a careful expectation of, and preparation for, the events; and that men might be the less able to counterfeit or to attempt preventing some of them.

V. It is of great use to form in our mind a brief collection of the most plain and important histories, doctrines, laws, and predictions of Scripture, which may serve as a kind of standard and criterion for understanding of others. Thus a fixed view of the creation; the fall of man; the flood; the calling of Abraham; the fate of Joseph; the Israelites' entrance into and deliverance from Egypt; their travels in the wilderness; settlement in Canaan; change of their government by judges into that by kings; division of their kingdom into two; their captivities into Assyria and Babylon;—and of the birth, life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ; and of the spread of the gospel, which followed by means of the remarkable effusion of the Holy Ghost;—will greatly contribute towards our right understanding of other historical points, and even of many predictions. We should endeavour to obtain a compendious view of the nature of God, as a Spirit, infinite, eternal, unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth; subsisting in three distinct persons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and who has, in his eternal decree, foreordained whatsoever comes to pass; and in execution of that decree, forms all things into being in creation, and preserves and governs them therein by his providence:—And of man, who, being created perfectly holy, and admitted into a covenant of friendship with his Maker, did, by disobedience to God, render himself and all his natural posterity sinful and miserable: that they being utterly incapable, as well as unwilling to recover themselves, God, of his mere and unbounded grace and mercy, formed a new covenant, in which his own Son was made their Mediator, Surety, Saviour, and Redeemer! their Prophet, to instruct them; their Priest, to offer sacrifice and intercede for them; and their King, to subdue, rule, and defend them;—that in consequence of his obedience, suffering, and glorification, they may, by his Spirit, be effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified, comforted, and glorified;—And of the ten commandments, or of Christ's summary of them; Mat. xxii. 37, 38; vii. 12. Or those Scriptures commonly annexed to the Assembly's Shorter Catechism may serve as a criterion for understanding the doctrines and laws of Scripture. Such a brief summary of divine truth is the analogy or proportion of faith; Rom. xii. 6; is the delineation, draught, platform, pattern, or form of sound words, which ought to be held fast in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus; Rom. vi. 17; 2 Tim. ii. 13. By attention to it we may immediately discern when texts are plain or when they are figurative. Thus, if bodily members be ascribed to God, it will teach us to understand them as representing his spiritual excellencies, since God himself is a Spirit. If God be said to deceive men, or to harden them in sin, it will teach us to understand those texts only of his permitting men to be deceived and hardened by Satan and their own lusts—since God is infinitely holy. If the sacramental elements be called Christ's body and blood, it will teach us to understand them as signs and seals of his person and righteousness; but not as transubstantiated into his material body and blood,—since the heavens contain him till the end of the world; Acts iii. 21. If the Scriptures represent saints as exposed to punishments for sin, or as obtaining rewards by their gracious tempers and good works, it will teach us to consider both in that form in which saints meet with them, i. e. as purchased for them by the blood of Christ, as bestowed by God's redeeming love, and suited to their state as persons indissolubly married to Christ and adopted into the family of God, &c.

VI. Not only must every text be understood in harmony with the analogy of faith, or general plan of revealed truth, but also in agreement with the plain scope and tendency of the passage, chapter, or book where it lies. This plain scope must therefore be earnestly searched out and observed in an accurate observance of the contents of each book or chapter. Thus the scope of the historical books of the Old Testament is to represent the fate of his Hebrew people; and therefore every text thereof ought to be understood in agreement with this. The scope of the Psalms is to express the saints' exercises, and to acknowledge God as blessed in himself, and the author of all blessedness to men; and in reference to these ought every text therein to be understood. The scope of the Proverbs is to teach men wisdom and discretion; of Ecclesiastes, to point out the insufficiency of all created enjoyments to render men happy; of the Song of Solomon, to exhibit the kind and familiar fellowship between Christ and his people: and therefore, in agreement with this scope, ought the several texts in each of them to be understood. The scope of the prophetic parts in both Testaments, is to warn the church of her dangers on account of sins, and to encourage her hopes of preservation under, and deliverance from the greatest tribulations. The scope of the gospels, by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, is to exhibit Jesus Christ as the Son of God and promised Messiah, that we might believe in him to the saving of our soul. The general scope of the Epistles is to point out our need of a Saviour, and the blessings which we receive through him; and to direct us how to improve these aright in our personal practice, relative duties, and ecclesiastical fellowship. More particularly the scope of the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians is to establish the doctrine of justification by the imputed righteousness of Christ, and to teach us how to improve it. The scope of those to the Corinthians is to redress contentions and disorders among church-members:—of those to Timothy and Titus, to direct church officers:—of that to the Hebrews, to manifest Christ's headship over the Church, and his fulfilment and wise abolition of the typical ceremonies:—of James, to show the vanity of pretending faith, without exercising good works:—of Peter and Jude, to warn their Jewish brethren of the approaching ruin of their nation, and of their duty with respect to it:—of John, to comfort them in their distress, and enable them to examine themselves fully. The particular texts ought therefore always to be understood in reference to the manifest scope of each epistle, and the particular passage of it.

VII. The various texts which are similar, either in words or in signification, or even which represent a similar subject, ought to be carefully compared. On almost every subject a multitude of phrases will be found, which when compared, do amazingly illustrate, and as it were, support one another. The truth which is more darkly represented in one passage, is represented more clearly in others. Part of the attributes or circumstances of persons or things is so represented in one text, and part of them in another, that only by searching the several Scriptures, and connecting them together in one view, can we obtain a true or just apprehension of them. In particular, the types of the Old Testament must be compared with their antitypes in the New. The predictions must be compared with the history of their fulfilment; and the passage in which the point is purposely handled, ought to be chiefly attended to in the comparison; as Gen. i. on creation; Rom. iii. iv, v. on justification, &c.—To carry this comparison of Scripture texts, one with another, to a due extent, or a due degree of exactness, will perhaps appear very difficult; but the more it is practised, it will become the more easy and pleasant. The inexpressible advantage which attends it will infinitely more than compensate the toil. Herein the serious inquirer has the Spirit of God for his director, the lively oracles of God for his commentary. He has the pleasure of discovering the truth for himself in God's own light. And the discovery which he thus makes, by humbly searching the Scriptures, is inexpressibly more agreeable than merely to have met with it at random in some commentator. Being acquired by care and labour it generally fixes itself much more firmly in the mind. And while we are thus occupied in comparing the several texts, we may humbly expect that the Holy Ghost will illuminate all with his glory, and apply all to the heart.

VIII. We ought never to content ourselves with a general view of any text, or of the words of it abstractedly considered; but should search out what is therein chiefly and emphatically intended by the Spirit of God as it stands in such a particular connexion.—Thus thousands of unexpected beauties will appear to our view. Never are the oracles or truths of God seen in their real and manifold glory but when they are viewed in their proper connexions. The glory of redeeming grace is never justly conceived of unless it be viewed as abounding where sin had abounded—as reigning unto eternal life where sin had reigned unto death; Ps. cvi; Ezek. xvi, xx; Rom. iii, v; Eph. ii. Man's wickedness is never justly perceived without viewing it in connexion with that God against whom, and that goodness against which, it is committed; Deut. xxxii; Rom. ii. 4. Gospel holiness is never rightly understood but when viewed in connexion with that state of salvation in which, the gracious principles and motives from which, the manner in which, and the end to which, it is performed. The history of typical persons or events, and the form of typical ordinances, are never properly understood but in connexion with their antitypes. Never can we discern the sovereignty of the grace, or the seasonableness of the mercies or judgments of God without carefully observing the connexion, when, where, and after what, the mercy or judgment happened. Nay, never are the oracles of God rightly received, but when viewed in their proper connexion with Jesus Christ, as the author, matter, and end of them. This connexion of the sacred oracles is often contained in a small particle; AND, THEN, THEREFORE, BECAUSE, IN, BY, TO, THROUGH, &c.; and sometimes we are left to collect it from the station in which one thing is placed with another. We ought therefore not only to weigh every word of the Holy Ghost, but carefully to mark how things stand joined one with another. Thus, by observing the context, 1 Pet. iv. 18, we learn, that the saving of the righteous with difficulty relates to their escaping when the Jewish nation was destroyed, not to their spiritual salvation: and that the eating doubtingly, Rom. xiv. 23, relates immediately to the partaking of common meats, not to the receiving of the Lord's supper.

IX. Christ Jesus being the great subject and end of Scripture revelation, we ought everywhere to search if we can find him. The Scriptures testify of him, John v. 39. To him give all the prophets witness; Acts x. 43. In Moses, in the Psalms, and in the prophets, there are things concerning him; Luke xxiv. 27, 44. His name is the Word of God; and the Scripture is but the testimony of Jesus; Rev. xix. 10, 13. It is but a gradual revelation of him, answerable to the counsels of God as a God of order,—answerable to the growing state of the church, and of every saint on earth. Scripture history does but exhibit man's need of Christ, and God's preparation of the world for him. Scripture genealogies do but direct to the line of Christ, and thus mark him out as the promised Messiah. Scripture chronology does but mark the seasons of Christ, the times of promise, and days of power. He is the end and fulfiller of all Scripture laws; Rom. x. 4; Gal. iv. 24. Gospel declarations are but the exhibitions of him as the light and life of the world. In Christ all the promises are yea and amen; 2 Cor. i. 20. What then can be more absurd, more unchristian, than to overlook, or to evade the discerning of Jesus Christ, especially when the description and work cannot agree to another; but, after all, we must take heed to discern him only in the manner he is really represented by the Holy Ghost, and no other. To fix spiritual meanings upon phrases which were never immediately intended by the Holy Spirit in them, is to profane the Scripture, and expose it to contempt. But where Jesus Christ and his fulness are immediately exhibited, we must conceive of them as thus exhibited. Where he is but indirectly exhibited, it is only in that manner we must apprehend him there. Where he is represented in a type, we must discern him through that type, as a medium.

X. As to the infinite mind of the Holy Ghost, every subject and every event are at once perfectly in view, his words in Scripture ought always to be understood in the fullest latitude of signification that the analogy of faith and of the context can admit. Historical hints must be understood as relating to everything similar preceding the date, unless the context restrict them. God's nourishing and bringing up children, Is. i. 2. includes all the favours he had done for the Jewish nation from the call of Abraham, Gen. xii. to the date of the prophecy. Their rebelling against God must include all their wickedness in, and after their deliverance from Egypt, till Isaiah uttered these words. Sometimes a phrase does not only relate to both church and state, but at once represents the sinful crime and the wrathful punishment thereof. Thus, Is. i. 5. The whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint, &c., may at once denote the sinfulness of the church and nation, among all ranks, high and low, and in every person; and likewise the miserable state of both under Ahaz, &c. Figures relating to the church, as in the Song of Solomon, &c., and manifold promises relating to it, ought to be applied to it as the visible mystical body of Christ; and also to every particular member of it. And these figures and promises ought to be understood in one manner when applied to the church, and in another manner when applied to a particular soul. The same promises or threatenings frequently relate to both church and state; in which case they are to be understood in one view when applied to the former, and in another view when applied to the latter. Thus most of the promises and threatenings, which respect the Jewish nation, are to be understood in both these views. The predictions which we have in Rev. vi, viii. relate to the Christian church and to the Roman state. The predictions we have Rev. ix. 1—11. relate to the power of the popes in the west, and of the Mahometans in the east. Predictions ought to be considered as fulfilled in every event posterior to their date which can correspond with their terms and context. Types, so far as they prefigure things future, must be understood in the same latitude. Thus most of the Old Testament histories are again verified in antitypes, with respect to their antitypical fulfilment. And thus the predictions relative to David, Solomon, the Jewish nation, &c., besides their immediate fulfilment on these objects, have an antitypical accomplishment in Christ and his gospel church. The prediction of the enmity between Jesus Christ and his people on the one hand, and the devil and his subjects on the other, Gen. iii. 15, has its fulfilment, in all the contentions between these parties, from the fall of man till the end of the world, whether in a single person or a social capacity. The prediction of trouble to mankind, particularly women, Gen. iii. 16—19. has its accomplishment in all the painful conceptions, child-birth, nursing, &c. of women;—in all their subjection to and ill usage by men;—and in all the troubles of persons, families, or nations;—in all the storms, earthquakes, bad seasons, scanty crops, &c., which happen. The prediction of Noah, concerning the fate of his sons, Gen. ix. 25—27, has had its accomplishment in the fate of mankind ever since. The prediction of men's being blessed in Abraham or in his seed, Gen. xii. 3; xxii.18, has been fulfilled in his and his posterity's usefulness to render men pious or happy; but chiefly in the Gentiles' salvation through Jesus Christ; and even in the outward happiness of nations where the gospel has been received. The predictions of God's giving Canaan to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their seed, Gen. xii. 7; xiii. 15, &c., was not only fulfilled in God's bringing the Hebrews into, and continuing them for many ages in, that country, but also in his bringing multitudes of chosen men into a new covenant state, the gospel church, and the heavenly glory. The predictions of Moses, in Lev. xxvi; Deut. xxviii—xxxiii, not only had their fulfilment in the diversified sinning and repenting, and in the mercies and judgments which have or shall befall the Jewish nation, but in whatever similar hath or shall befall the gospel church and the members thereof; nay, in the eternal happiness of saints and ruin of sinners. The predictions of destruction to their enemies of Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, &c., not only have had their fulfilment in the diversified disasters of these nations, but perhaps also an antitypical fulfilment in the disasters of Antichrist and other enemies of the gospel church. The predictions of distress or prosperity, announced to the Jews by Amos, Micah, Isaiah, &c., before the Assyrian invasion, had different steps of fulfilment. (1) In the invasion under Hezekiah, and the merciful deliverance therefrom, and the reformation and prosperity which followed. (2) In the invasion of their kingdom under Manasseh, and the deliverance therefrom, and the reformation and prosperity under Josiah. (3) In their captivity in Babylon, and deliverance therefrom, and the prosperity which ensued. (4) In their harassments under the Syro-Grecians and the Romans, and the present long dispersion and the future deliverance therefrom. (5) In the erection of the gospel church. (6) In the entrance into, and happiness of, the thousand years' reign of the saints. And (7) In the happiness of the church in the eternal state. The like prophecies, by Isaiah, Micah, Zephaniah, Obadiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, after the Assyrian invasion, had their fulfilment in the oppressive captivity of Babylon, and deliverance therefrom, and the prosperity which ensued; and in the other four subsequent steps already mentioned. Those by Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, related only to what followed the deliverance from Babylon. The predictions of Daniel, ch. ii, iii, vii, xi, xii, had, or shall have, their fulfilment in the rise, management, and ruin of those respective empires. The majestic COMING of Jesus Christ, predicted by himself, Mat. xxiv; Luke xx, and by the prophets, had, has, or will have, its accomplishment in his destruction of the Jewish nation—of the heathen empire of Rome—of Antichrist—and in the final judgment of the world:—in order to the erection or glorification of his church in these different periods. The predictions of the wickedness of the Antichristians or Papists, 2 Thes. ii. 2—11; 1 Tim. iv. 1—4; 2 Tim. iii. 1—6, &c., have their fulfilment in whatever similar happens in any period of Antichrist's progress or reign. The predictions of the church's happiness, in Rev. vii. xi, xix, xx, xxi. xxii, shall have their fulfilment not only in the glorious millennium, but chiefly in the eternal state. So many events being thus narrated, and especially foretold in the same passage, it cannot reasonably be thought strange that the prophetical terms do not exactly agree to any one of the particular events or steps of fulfilment; they will nevertheless all agree to the whole fulfilment conjunctly taken. And the terms, which appeared too high or too low for one step of fulfilment, will appear exactly answerable to another step. What did not answer to the predictions, literally understood, will be found to have corresponded to them in a figurative and spiritual sense.

XI. The language of Scripture, especially in the poetical and predictory parts, abounding with figures, it is necessary to have the knowledge of the principal of these fixed in our mind. The most remarkable figures of Scripture language are (1) The name of ONE THING IS GIVEN TO ANOTHER, because of some connexion with it, as its cause or effect, or as its subject or adjunct. Thus the temple is called Lebanon, because built of cedar wood brought from Lebanon; Zech. xi. 1. A heavenly frame is called the spirit, because produced by him; Rev. i. 10. The name of parents, Jacob, Israel, Moab, &c., is given to their posterity; Is. xliii. 22; xv. 1, 2, 5. A testimony is called the mouth; Deut. xvii. 6. Speech is called the tongue; Prov. xxv. 15. The benefits which God bestows are called his love or grace, because they proceed from it; John i. 16; 1 John iii. 1. The name of the effect is given to the cause: thus the gospel is called the power of God; Rom. i. 16. Esau's taking Canaanitish wives is called a grief, i. e. the cause of it; Gen. xxvi. 35. Faith is called victory over the world, i. e. the cause of it; 1 John v. 4. Samaria is called the transgression of Israel, and Jerusalem the high places of Judah, i. e. the cause thereof; Mic. i. 5. Wisdom and knowledge are called stability, because they are means of it; Is. xxxiii.6. The name of an act is given to its object; so God is called the fear, hope, trust, &c., of his people; Gen. xxxi. 53; Joel iii. 16. The name of what contains anything is given to the thing contained: thus the inhabitants are called by the name of the city, the country, the world, &c., Jer. iv. 4, 14, 29; Gen. vi. 11. The liquor is called a cup; 1 Cor. xi. 25; and hence cup denotes a portion of mercy and judgment; Ps. xvi. 5; xxiii. 4. Pullets are called a nest; Deut. xxxii. 11. The dispositions, thoughts, desires, &c., are called the heart; Ps. lxii. 8; Jer. xvii. 9. What belongs to a person is called by his name: thus Christ's people are called Christ; 1 Cor. xii. 12. The Lord's oblations are called the Lord; Deut. x. 9; with Num. xviii. 8—31. The name of the sign is given to the thing signified; as when the supreme authority is called a sceptre; Gen. xlix. 10; Zech. x. 11:—or of the thing signified to the sign; as when the elements in the Lord's supper are called Christ's body and blood; 1 Cor. xi. 24, 25: or of a quality to that in which it is found: as when a crimson or scarlet-coloured thing is called crimson and scarlet; or a field containing springs is called the upper and nether springs; Is. i. 18; Josh. xv. 19. The name is put for the person or thing named: thus the name of God, name of Christ, signify God himself Christ himself; Deut. xxviii. 58; Acts iv. 12. Sometimes also persons and things are named according as they appear, not as they really are: thus angels appearing as men, are called men; Gen. xviii, xix, &c. The devil resembling Samuel, is called Samuel; 1 Sam. xxviii. 14—20. Error is called a gospel, as it pretended to be one; Gal. i. 6. (2) By taking persons or things together, MORE UNIVERSAL TERMS ARE USED FOR MORE RESTRICTED ONES;—as ALL for many, for all kinds, for some of every sort, for the greater or better part; Mat. iii. 5; xix. 28. The WORLD, earth, or whole world, for the Roman empire, for the Gentiles, for the wicked, for the Antichristians, for many; Luke ii. 1; Rom. i. 8; 1 John ii. 2; v. 18; Rev. xiii. 3, 8; for Canaan; Rom. iv. 13. EVERY CREATURE for men, or many of them; Mark xvi. 15; Col. i. 23. NORTH is put for Chaldea, a country north-east of Jerusalem; Jer. i. 13, 15; Zech. vi. 8. BEFORE for the east side, RIGHT HAND for south side, &c., Is. ix. 12. FOR EVER is put for a long time; Gen. xvii. 8, 13; Dan. ii. 4. Christ is said to die, be buried, rise again, &c., when it was only his body that died, &c. John xix. 29, 42.—Or more restricted terms are used for more universal ones; as one for all of the kind; Ps. i. 1. YESTERDAY for time past; Heb. xiii. 8. THRICE, SEVEN TIMES, TEN TIMES, for often, very often; 2 Cor. xii. 8; Ps. cxix. 169; Num. xiv. 22. A THOUSAND for very many; Is. xxx. 17; Deut. xxxii. 30. A part for the whole, as souls for persons; Acts ii. 43; Christ's resurrection for his whole appearance on earth, particularly after his death; Acts i. 22. An HOUR, or DAY, for a period of time; Ps. xxxvii. 13; John xiv. 23; v. 25. (3) THE EXPRESSION APPEARS TO MEAN MUCH LESS OR MUCH MORE THAN IS REALLY MEANT; thus in the ten commandments, especially those negatively delivered, and in most of the negative injunctions, much less is expressed than is really meant; Ex. xx. 3—17. The Hebrew spies are represented as grasshoppers, i. e. very little; Num. xiii. 33. The tops of towers or walls are represented as reaching up to heaven, when very high; Gen. xi. 4; Deut. xi. 1. Men are represented as the sand on the shore, as a sea, as the dust, as the dew, as the grass, the vapours of a cloud, &c., when very many; Gen. xiii. 16; 1 Sam. xiii. 5; Ps. cx. 3; lxxii. 16. Plenty of a thing is represented as rivers of it; Job xxix. 6; Ex. iii. 8. Saul and Jonathan as swifter than eagles, and stronger than lions; 2 Sam. i. 23. (4) Some expressions, being uttered with a DERISIVE AIR, have a signification directly contrary to their natural meaning; as Deut. xxxiii. 38; 2 Sam. vi. 20; 1 Kin. xviii. 27; xxii. 15; Ps. xxii. 8; Eccl. xi. 9; Zech. xi. 13; Mat. xxvi. 45. (5) But no figure more abounds in Scripture than METAPHOR, by which the names, qualities, or actions, proper to one person or thing, are attributed to another, because of some likeness between them. By this figure, and in order to accommodate to our weakness, almost the whole visible creation of God is formed into a representation of things spiritual and divine. By it, Jehovah, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit; angels and men, in their different classes of good and bad; nations, churches, &c., are likened to human persons, in their parts, members, characters, stations; and even to animals, &c.—God's purposes, providence, covenants, word, law, gospel, ordinances, and blessings;—so also graces, sins, prosperity, adversity, life, death, resurrection, last judgment, and this world, heaven, hell, &c., are likened to things material, &c.; and that we may have emblematical instructors ever before us, metaphors are drawn from God himself, and from angels, but chiefly from human persons; from animals and vegetables; from the celestial luminaries or airy meteors; from substances, fiery, liquid, or earthy; from means of human accommodation, houses, food, raiment, &c.; from times, typical institutions, &c. See SCRIPTURE METAPHORS. Two things are necessary to be always observed with respect to this figure:

(1) That the likening of anything to another naturally produces a likening of the acts, relations, and attributes of the thing compared, to the acts, attributes, and relations of the thing to which it is compared; nay, the relations and acts themselves, of the persons or things compared, receive a correspondent figurative representation. Thus, when God or Christ is figuratively represented as A MAN, his attributes are consequently represented as hands, feet, eyes, ears, mouth, nostrils, bowels: and he is represented as thinking, speaking, walking, writing, sitting, standing, riding, flying, sleeping, &c. Ps. xx. 6; xviii. 8; cxxx. 2; Is. i. 20; lx. 13; Heb. iv. 13, &c. ;—and as a father, master, husband, king, warrior, husbandman, builder, &c., Mal. i. 6; Is. lxiii. 16; liv. 5; xxxiii. 22; lxiii. 1; Mat .xvi. 18; John xv. 1. These again introduce other correspondent figurative representations. Under the notion of a FATHER, he is represented as begetting, adopting, teaching, loving, pitying, and providing for, and giving an inheritance to his people; 1 Pet. i. 3; Eph. i. 5; Ps. xxxii. 8; ciii. 13, &c. Under the notion of a MASTER, he is represented as having a house, chambers, servants; and the favours he bestows in consequence of obedience are called a REWARD; John xiv. 2; Cant. i. 4; Rev. xxii. 3, 12. Under the notion of a HUSBAND, he is represented as betrothing, affectionately loving, dwelling with, and providing for his people; who are represented as his bride, spouse, bringing forth children, and the like; and their apostasy from him by idolatry, or other indulged iniquity, is called whoredom, and themselves represented as harlots; Jer. iii; Hos. ii, iii; Ezek. xvi. 23. Under the notion of a KING, he is represented as having subjects, armies, laws, sceptre, crown, throne, palace; Ps. xlv, cx, cxlviii, &c. Under the notion of a WARRIOR, or CAPTAIN, he is represented as having armour, sword, bow, arrows, spear, helmet, &c. fighting with, and routing his opposers; Hab. iii; Ps. vii, xviii, xxxv; Is. lix, lxiii.; and angels, clouds, &c., are represented as his horses, or chariots. Under the notion of a HUSBANDMAN, he is represented as hiring labourers, and ploughing, planting, sowing, reaping, winnowing churches or nations, as his fields, vineyard, garden, and corn; and the days of remarkable judgment are the harvest, vintage; Mat. xx. If he is represented as a FOWL, eagle, hen, &c.; his perfections and providences are represented as wings, feathers; Ps. xci. 4; Mat. xxiii. 37. Under the figure of a RAVENOUS BEAST, lion, bear, leopard, he is represented as roaring, tearing, swallowing up, waiting to destroy, &c., Am. i. 2; Hos. v. 14; xiii. 7, 8. When the church in general is represented as a WOMAN, Christ is her head; young converts rooted in him, her hairs; ministers, her eyes, neck, feet; divine oracles and ordinances, her breasts, and ornaments; church members, her children or daughters; blameless ones, virgins; scandalous and apostate ones, harlots. But, when a particular saint is represented as a WOMAN, hope is the head; good works the hair or feet; spiritual knowledge and faith, the eyes or ears; faith, the neck and hand; faith and love, the breasts; praise, prayer, and holy converse, the mouth or lips; love, the bowels; the affections and conversation, the feet; Christ's righteousness, implanted graces, bestowed gifts, and holy exercises, their robes and ornaments; Ps. xlv; Cant. i—viii. When the church is compared to a VISIBLE WORLD, Christ, or God in him, or his word, is the light, the sun; ministers, the stars; ordinances, the moon and clouds; divine doctrines and influences, the refreshing wind, rain, dew, wells, rivers; persecution and distress, the storms, winter, night, scorching noon; saints, the corn, green grass, fruitful shrubs or trees; and their works or rewards are their fruit; Cant. i, ii, iv, vi—viii, &c. When nations are represented as a visible world, laws, rulers, and great men or idols are figured out as the sun, moon, stars, mountains, principal trees, or boughs, on which the subjects grow as berries, or sit as birds; and those of lower stations as the earth, air, sea, rivers, grass, stubble; and fearful judgments are the storms, earthquakes, eclipses, night, thunderings, lightnings, harvest, vintage; Rev. vi, vii, viii, xiv, xvi; Is. xxiv; Ezek. xxxi. When nations are represented as a FAMILY, the country or chief city is the mother, the lesser ones the daughters; and if flourishing, or never taken, they are called virgins, and magistrates are the parents; Is. xxii, xlvii; Jer. xl—li; Ezek. xvi, xxiii; when nations or armies are represented as FLOCKS and HERDS, their governors are the shepherds; great or valiant men, the rams, bulls, he-goats, fat ones, &c.; Ezek. xxxiv; Jer. xxv.

2. That in fixing the sense exhibited by a metaphor, the comparison ought never to be run too far, or into anything which cannot be properly applied to the person or thing represented. And that which appears chiefly intended by the Spirit of God, and which is obviously figured out to us in the nature, form, or use of the thing from which the metaphor is taken, ought to be chiefly attended to. Thus, in metaphorical language, the term God represents angels, prophets, and magistrates, as God's deputies, and like him in dignity, glory, &c.; Ex. xvii. 1; Ps. lxxxii. 1; xcvii. 7; but denotes devils, idols, or our belly, as worshipped and served instead of God; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Phil. iii. 19. ANGEL, represents Christ, ministers, or magistrates, as bearers of God's message, or active performers of his work; Rev. ii, iii, viii, ix, xvi, xvii. MAN, in what pertains to and is done by him, represents God in his excellencies and glorious works; eyes denote his knowledge and pity; ears, his knowledge or attention; mouth or lips, his word or authority; arms, hands, fingers, his power; heart, his purpose or love; bowels, his mercy; feet, his providential work; his face, his essential glory, or providential manifestation of himself, &c.; Ps. xxxiv. 15, 16; Is. i. 20; xxv. 11, &c. The frequent representation of God, by this emblem, at once exhibits JEHOVAH in his new covenant relations and appearances, in the most endearing manner; and suggests the marvellous and everlasting inhabitation of his Son in our nature. But indwelling grace and corruption are represented as men, to denote their residence in our whole nature, and having in them what is similar to our several powers; Eph. iv. 22, 24. WOMEN represent what is comely, kind; or what is weak and dispirited; Cant. i. 8; Nah. iii. 13. VIRGINS represent professors or churches, as beautiful in their conversation, ordinances, or form; or cities, and countries, glorious, prosperous, or never destroyed; Isa. xxiii; Jer. xlvi; Mat. xxv; Rev. xiv. Wives often figure out saints and churches, as united to Christ; rendered fruitful by him; or adulterously departing from him; Cant. i—viii; Jer. iii; Ezek. xvi, xxiii. TRAVAILING WOMEN represent God and Christ, as powerfully accomplishing remarkable events; Is. xlii. 14; liii. 10; but represent wicked men, as earnestly working mischief, or as rendered suddenly miserable; Ps. vii. 14; Is. xiii. 8. USEFUL ANIMALS, as sheep, oxen, doves, represent Christ and his people, as social, patient, pure, peaceable, and as acceptable sacrifices to God; Mat. xxii. 4; John xxi. 17; but figure out wicked men, as stupid, thoughtless, worthless, and as miserable sacrifices to the vengeance of God; Is. liii. 6; xxxiv. 6. RAVENOUS ANIMALS, as eagles, lions, &c., represent God, Christ, and the saints, as courageous, powerful, active, or terrible; Hos. xiii. 8; Rev. v. 5; Prov. xxviii. 1; Is. xl. 31; but figure out wicked men as crafty, malicious, mischievous, destructive; Ps. x. 9; xxii. 20, 21: and their claws, teeth, horns, denote their power and means of doing mischief; and so horns become emblems of kings, kingdoms, oppressors; Dan. vii, viii; Zec. i. 18. Animal flesh, denotes spiritual or temporal blessings ; as nourishing and strengthening; Is. xxv. 6; Rev. xix. 21: indwelling grace denotes grace as sensible, and easily impressed by God's influences; Ezek. xxxvi. 26; and indwelling corruption refers to it, as conveyed by natural generation, and as base, polluted and putrifying; Gal. v. 17, 24. The CELESTIAL LUMINARIES as lofty, illuminating, or refreshing, represent God, Christ, or his word, ordinances, ministers, people; Is. lx. 19; Rev. viii. 12; but as scorching or blasting, they represent afflictions, distress, persecutions; Rev. vii. 16; xvi. 8. VEGETABLES, plants, trees, corn, grass, flowers, represent Christ and his people, as divinely formed and influenced, comely, lively, fruitful, and useful, Cant. ii, iv, vi, vii; but figure out wicked men as in different stations, fruitful in wickedness, quickly blasted and destroyed by the wrath of God; Ezek. xv, xxxi. STONES figure out Christ and his people as prepared of God, precious, durable, firm, and useful in building the church; 1 Pet. ii. 4—6; Rev. xxi; but represent wicked men as insensible, obstinate, hurtful; Zec. vii. 12. MOUNTAINS represent Christ, his church, or ordinances, as lofty, openly exhibited, firmly fixed, and in their protecting, supporting, and satisfying fulness; Is. xxxii. 2; Joel iii. 18; but also figure out difficulties, opposition, and enemies, states, or cities; Rev. viii, xvii. WATER, rivers, seas, depths, floods, rain, dew; WIND, FIRE, as pure, purifying, pleasant, or useful, denote Christ, his Spirit, word, ordinances; Is. xxxii. 2; lxiv. 3, 4; Ezek. xxxvii. 9; Mat. iii. 11; but as ruinous or terrible, they denote fearful judgments, opposition, affliction; Ps. lxix. 1, 2; Jer. iv. 11. Of COLOURS, white represents purity, glory, freedom, priesthood, peace, victory; Rev. iii. 4: black or pale, terribleness, calamity, death, grief, filthiness; Rev. vi. 5, 8: green, comeliness, growth, fruitfulness, freshness; Cant. i. 16: red, scarlet, &c., what is terrible, bloody, murderous; Rev. vi. 4; Is. i. 18.

XII. Where Scriptures at first sight seem to contradict one another, we must by a serious consideration of them, labour to discover their harmony. But if we should not be able to reconcile them, we ought not to pronounce them irreconcilable, but rather attribute a deficiency to our own understandings. There can be no real contradiction, but when the differing passages mean precisely the same person or thing, and precisely in the same respect and circumstance: no such contradiction is to be found in Scripture. But where there seems to be one, either (1.) The same terms are used in a different sense in the differing texts. Thus Paul directs to work out our salvation with fear and trembling, i. e. filial fear and holy awe; Phil. ii. 12. John says, there is no fear in love;—perfect love casteth out fear; i. e. slavish fear; 1 John iv. 18. The Samaritans feared the Lord; i. e. with a slavish dread;—and yet feared not the Lord; i. e. with a child-like, sincere, and holy awe of him, or a right worshipping of him; 2 Kings xvii. 32—34. It is appointed for men once to die, i. e. a temporal death; Heb. ix. 27: and yet if any one keep Christ's sayings, he shall never see death, i. e. eternal death; John viii. 51. A man is justified, i. e. before God in his person and state, by faith without the deeds of the law; Rom. iii. 28; and yet by works a man is justified, i. e. before men, and not by faith only; James ii. 24. Hatred of others is very sinful; Tit. iii. 3, and yet to hate our nearest relations, i. e. to love them less than we do Christ, is our duty; Luke xiv. 26. Or (2.) The seemingly opposite texts really treat of different subjects. Thus the Spirit of truth guided the apostles into all truth, i. e. in their doctrine; John xvi. 13: and yet Peter erred, and was to be blamed, i. e. in his practice; Gal. ii. 11—18. John Baptist was not Elias, i. e. not the prophet who lived under Ahab; John i. 21: and yet was the Elias foretold by Malachi, i. e. one in the spirit and power of the ancient Elijah; Mal. iv. 5; Mat. xi. 11, 12, 14, 18; Mark ix. 11—15; Luke i. 17. Or (3.) In the seemingly opposite texts the same subject is considered in different parts or respects. Thus believers in Christ their head, as justified in his righteousness, and in respect of their new nature, and what they aim at and shall quickly obtain, are all fair without spot; Cant. iv. 7; Jer. i. 20; Num. xxiii. 21; 1 John iii. 9; v. 18: and yet in themselves, and with respect to remaining corruption in them, are all as an unclean thing,—carnal, sold under sin; Is. lxiv. 6; Rom. vii. 14. In respect of his divine nature, Christ and his Father are ONE; John x. 30; 1 John v. 7. In respect of his divine person he is his Father's equal and fellow; Zech. xiii. 7; Phil. ii. 6. But in respect of his manhood and mediatory office, his Father is greater than he; John xiv. 28: is his Master; Is. xlix. 3: his head; 1 Cor. xi. 3: his God; Eph. i. 3; John xx. 17: his Creator; Jer. xxxi. 22: his Portion; Psalm xvi. 5, 6. In respect of his divine nature, Christ is the Lord from heaven; 1 Cor. xv. 47: God over all; Rom. ix. 5. In his human nature he is the fruit of the earth; Is. iv. 2: the child born; Is. ix. 6. Or (4.) The seemingly opposite texts respect different times and places. Thus during Christ's humiliation, the Spirit was not, i. e. was not remarkably poured out; John vii. 39; and yet after Christ's ascension he was poured out;

Acts ii; 1 Thes. i. 5. Circumcision, and other Jewish ceremonies, were long necessary duties; Gen. xvii. 9, 10; Rom. iii. 1, 2. But after their abolition, by the incarnation, obedience, death, and resurrection of Christ, they became sinful rites; Gal. v. 2; iv. 9—11; Isa. lxvi. 3.

Most of the seeming contradictions in Scripture are found in the historical parts, where their connexion with the great subject or scope of Scripture is less considerable, and where the blunder of a transcriber, or of a printer, in a few letters, might be easily admitted, without really detracting from the honour of the oracles of God.—The apparent contradictions in the history appear owing to the same persons having different names, or the deed being done by different persons: to the one of which it is ascribed in one text, and to another in the other text; or deeds similar, being really different. Reckoning of time is sometimes from one period and sometimes from another; especially when some kings had for some years, a conjunct reign with their father, and then a separate reign by themselves. Round numbers of hundreds or thousands, are put for such as differed but little from them. What is not included in one reckoning is included in another, &c. Thus the sojourning of the Hebrews from the call of Abraham to leave his native country; Gen. xii. 1; to the deliverance from Egypt, was 430 years; Exod. xii. 40, 41; Gal. iii. 17; but from the birth of Isaac, to that deliverance, were but 400 years; Gen. xv. 13. Jacob and his descendants, at their going down into Egypt, were in all seventy persons; Gen. xlvi. 26, 27; Deut. x. 22; but excluding Joseph and his two sons, who were in Egypt before, and including eight of Jacob's daughters-in-law, they made seventy-five souls; Acts vii. 14. David, by Abishai and his army slew 18,000 Edomites who came to assist the Syrians; or 18,000 Syrians, and also 18,000 Edomites: Joab assisted in killing 12,000 of these, or killed 12,000 besides; 2 Sam. viii. 13; 1 Chr. xviii. 12; Ps. lx. title. The Ammonites hired 32,000 Syrians, besides the 1000 from Maachah; 33,000 in all; 2 Sam. ix. 6; 1 Chr. xix. 6, 7. Of the Syrian army were slain 7000, who fought in 700 chariots, and 40,000 horsemen, and as many footmen, or 40,000 horsemen who dismounted and fought on foot; 2 Sam. x. 18; 1 Chr. xix. 17. Adino, or Jashobeam, might slay in one battle 800, and in another 300; 2 Sam. xxiii. 8; 1 Chr. xi. 11. When David numbered the people, the men of Judah amounted to 470,000, who, with the 30,000 under their thirty mighties, made 500,000. The men of Israel amounted to 800,000 exclusive of the 288,000 standing troops, which, put together, make almost 1,100,000; 2 Sam. xxiv. 9; 1 Chr. xxi. 5; xxvii. 1—15. No more than three years of famine were threatened for David's numbering the people; 1 Chr. xxi. 12; but, had these been added to the three preceding years of famine for Saul's murdering the Gibeonites, they, together with the year of release, would have made seven; 2 Sam. xxiv. 13. David gave to Araunah, or Ornan, fifty shekels of silver for the thrashing-floor, and the oxen then sacrificed; 2 Sam. xxiv. 24: and afterwards bought the whole farm for six hundred shekels of gold, for the temple to be built on; 1 Chr. xxi. 25. Solomon had 4000 stables, in which were 40,000 stalls, ten in each; or he had 4000 stalls at Jerusalem, and 40,000 in all; 1 Kings iv. 26; 2 Chr. ix. 25. Hiram got 20 measures of oil for his family; 1 Kings v. 11; and 20,000 baths of oil for his artificers besides; 2 Chr. ii. 10. Solomon's workmen had 3300 subordinate overseers, and over these 300 more, in all 3600; 1 Kings v. 16; 2 Chr. ii. 18. The temple was founded in the 480th year of the deliverance from Egypt; 1 Kings 6. 1: therefore the 450 years mentioned Acts xiii. 20, must either mark the time from the birth of Isaac to the settlement in Canaan, or the years of oppression mentioned in the book of Judges, must be included in the rests; or some of the latter judges must have been contemporary. Each of the brazen pillars, at the entrance of the tabernacle, was almost eighteen cubits, which, being joined together, made thirty-five cubits for both; 1 Kings vii. 15; 2 Kings xxv. 17; 2 Chr. ii. 15; Jer. lii. 21. The brazen sea had ordinarily no more than two thousand baths of water in it; 1 Kings vii. 26; but if filled to the brim, it could have held 3000; 2 Chr. iv. 5. Solomon's fleet brought him from Ophir four hundred and fifty talents in all, of which 420 were clear gain, or they brought him 420 talents at one voyage, and 450 in another; 1 Kings ix. 28; 2 Chr. viii. 18. At least in Solomon's time, there was nothing in the ark but the two tables of the law; 1 Kings viii. 9; 2 Chr. v. 10; but the pot of manna and Aaron's budding rod were once in it, or rather placed in the fore-side of it; Heb. ix. 4. King Ahaziah began his reign in the twenty-second year of his age; 2 Kings viii. 26: and in the forty-second year of the royalty of his mother's family, to which he was so like in his conduct; 2 Chr. xxii. 2. The vessels of gold and silver were not made till after the temple itself was repaired; 2 Kings xii. 10, 14; but were afterwards formed of what metal remained; 2 Chr. xxiv. 11, 14. Jehoiachin's release was appointed on the 25th day of the month; Jer. lii. 31; but not executed till the 27th; 2 Kings xxv. 27. Of the two lists of the returning captives, in Ezra ii, and Neh. vii, the one may mark the numbers enrolled in order to return, and the other the numbers which actually returned.—To reconcile the apparent inconsistencies in the four Gospels, nothing more is necessary but to place the passages in their proper order, as is attempted in the subsequent CHRONOLOGY.

XIII. To obtain an exact knowledge of the Scripture, especially in its historical and prophetical parts, it is of great use to understand the GEOGRAPHY, which marks the situation of the places where the events mentioned took place, to understand the CHRONOLOGY, which marks the time when the events happened, and to understand the HISTORY of the nations, the fate of which the Scripture narrates or foretells. Without this knowledge our understanding of the histories or predictions of Scripture must be extremely scanty and confused, as we cannot perceive the events in their proper circumstances and connexions. To assist the reader with what is most necessary on these heads is the aim of the last two chapters of this Introduction.

XIV. To be capable of perusing the oracles of God, in their originals, with HUMILITY of mind, will open to our view, especially in the Old Testament, a scene of emphasis and glory, in thousands of instances, which cannot be exhibited in any translation whatsoever, and which no commentator observes.

CHAP. III.

OF THE JEWISH LAWS AND TYPES.

FOR many ages mankind seem to have had no other form of government, either civil or sacred, but that of the patriarchal kind. Fathers were at once kings and priests to their numerous descendants. When God thought proper to form a nation for himself, and separated them from the rest of the world, they appear, for the first four hundred years, to have had no other government of their own. While they were in Egypt they had elders; but these appear to have been nothing more than the wisest and gravest among them, or the heads of their tribes, who had no power or civil judicature: Ex. iii. 16; with xviii. 13, 18. Their officers were nothing but overseers of their tasks; Exod. v. 14.

When they came out of Egypt, God, who formerly stood related to them as their Creator and covenant God, became a kind of national King to them. In correspondence to this threefold character, he gave them laws, moral, ceremonial, and civil. As their King, he gave them laws concerning servants, retaliations, damages, inheritances, marriages, borrowing of money, wars, punishments, admission into places of power and trust, or even into the camp or congregation, &c.; Exod. xxi–xxiii; Lev. xviii, xix, xx, xxv; Num. v. 1, 2; xxvii, xxxiv, xxxv, xxxvi; Deut. xix—xxv. As their King, he directed the form of their encampment and marching in the wilderness; Exod. xiii, xiv; Num. i—iv, ix, x; directed their wars with the Amalekites, Midianites, and Canaanites; Exod. xviii; 1 Sam. xv; Num. xxxi; Deut. xx; Jos. vi, viii; and appointed their officers; Exod. iii, iv; Num. i, xi. Many things, which in another view were religious ceremonies, seem, in some respect, to have pertained to the form of the Jewish theocracy. The tabernacle, or temple, was the palace of their king; the oblations were his revenues or civil list; the priests and Levites, his courtiers and officers. Nor do I know but many of them were civil judges as well as ecclesiastical officers; even as our ruling elders in the church may lawfully be magistrates in the state.

To maintain the true religion constantly among them, and to prevent idolatry, which is at once so dishonourable to God and so destructive to the morals of mankind, and for securing their internal peace and happiness, he formed them into a nation uncommonly separated from the nations around. He even prohibited them to imitate their neighbours in the customs which they had observed in their false worship; as planting trees near altars; boiling kids in their mothers' milk; and perhaps sundry others; the unreasonableness of which we cannot now so clearly perceive. Idolatry and witchcraft, being at once the most presumptuous rebellion against the God of nature, and high treason against him as the King of Israel, were justly declared punishable by death in every Israelite or sojourning proselyte. To render their constitution firm, and to prevent their oppressing one another, he appointed the country which he gave them to be divided into 601,730 shares; to each warrior a share of about twelve acres of ground; and by the return of inheritances, once every fifty years, at the jubilee, he fixed these shares in their respective families. This secured a numerous body of freeholders, always ready to defend their country against every invader. And, while the Levites were dispersed through the nation for its religious instruction, their forty-eight cities and suburbs, which they held by divine right, at once accommodated them, and secured their persons and families as hostages for their good behaviour. Every tribe being independent in itself, their princes were captains in war, and magistrates in time of peace.

After their settlement in Canaan, every city had its particular judges, who held their courts, at least some of them, in the gates; Deut. xvi. 19; Judges. xi. 5, 6; Zech. viii. 16. Every tribe had its supreme and subordinate rulers, according to the plan of Jethro the Midianite; Exod. xviii; Deut. i. The chief rulers were called princes, or heads of thousands; Num. xxxii. 2; Jos. ix. 15; xvii. 4; Num. x. 4. Perhaps the seventy elders, mentioned Num. xi. were the sixty rulers of ten thousands, together with the twelve princes of the tribes; Num. i, vii. Of these, some think the Jewish sanhedrim or parliament was first constituted, and afterwards continued. But the utter silence of the Old Testament about any such court, when there was no king nor judge to govern the people; Judges xvii, xxi; and when the people generally followed their kings, either in idolatry or reformation, makes the existence of any such court in those times extremely doubtful. Whether most of their fifteen judges, after effecting the several national deliverances for which God raised them up, retired to a private life, as before, is not altogether evident.

The Hebrews' request of a king is represented as a rejection of their theocratical form of government; 1 Sam. viii. 7; xii. 17, 19; under their kings, especially after the division of the kingdom, we find but small vestiges of it Nay, except by David and Solomon, who were also prophets, we find scarcely anything good done by any of them, in which any sovereign on earth may not imitate them on proper occasions. Even when they were appointed by God to the government, they were called to their office by the people, as much as our British kings. They were installed in it by unction, at least where their title seemed dubious; 1 Sam. x. 1; xvi. 1; 1 Kings i. 30; 2 Kings xi. 12; xxiii. 3. They were crowned with a crown, somewhat like the high priest's mitre; 2 Sam. i. 10; 2 Kings xi. 12; Psalm xxi. 3. The principal subjects tendered them a kiss, importing allegiance; Psalm ii. 12: and the people by loud acclamations testified their subjection; 1 Sam. x. 24; 1 Kings i. 39. According to law none but a native Israelite could be king. Every king was to transcribe, for his own use, a copy of the Mosaic laws. He was to govern with equity and lenity. He was not to multiply to himself wives, horses, silver, or gold, but to depend on the assistance and protection of God in all his undertakings; Deut. xvi. 18—20; xvii. 14—20. Their great council, in which the supreme magistrate or his representative presided, had only power to enact regulations for executing the laws prescribed by God himself: nor, according to these rules do they seem to have had any power of levying taxes. Till the reign of Saul, the Hebrews had never any standing troops; but the 601,730 freeholders were obliged, on a proper call, to bear arms against the enemy at their own expense; Judges iii, vi, xx; 1 Sam. xi. Saul had but a few thousand standing forces; 1 Sam. xiii. 2; xxvi. 2; but David increased their number to 288,000: 1 Chr. xxvii. 1—15. Jehoshaphat increased those of Judah to 1,160,000; 2 Chr. xvii. 14—19.

It only remains to take notice of some of the CLASSES or SECTS mentioned in the Scripture history of the Jewish nation. As (1) The SCRIBES. The most honourable of these were the secretaries of state and war; 2 Sam. viii. 17; 2 Kings xviii. 18; xxii. 3; xxv. 19. The inferior scribes, were much like our writers to the signet, &c. 1 Chr. ii. 55. Many of the Simeonites, it is said, being scattered amongst the other tribes, kept public schools, and were scribes of the lowest form; Gen. xlix. 7. There appears to have been another kind of ecclesiastical scribes, who were preaching clergy, and expounded the law of Moses in their own way; Luke v. 17, 21; xi. 44. (2) RABBINS. The title of RABBI, in the earlier ages, only denoted such as were of superior rank and station; Job xxxii. 9; Esth. i. 8; Jer. xxxix. 3; xli. 1. But some ages before our Saviour's incarnation, the self-conceited doctors of learning began to assume it as a badge of literary honour; Mat. xxiii. 7, 8. (3) The PHARISEES were a very numerous sect. They pretended that the traditions of the elders were of, at least, equal authority with the written word of God. They affected to discover an uncommon sanctity in many painful austerities and trifling shows of devotion. They enlarged the fringes on the corners of their garments, and marked their foreheads with scrolls of parchment, called phylacteries, on which were inscribed some noted sentences of the law; Mat. vi, xxiii. (4) The SADDUCEES. They seem to have acknowledged the divine authority of, at least, the books of Moses; but denied the existence of separate spirits, and the resurrection of the dead. They denied the decrees of God, and pretended that men were absolute masters of their own actions, without any supernatural influence. Many of the rich and powerful were of this sect; Acts xxiii. 8; v. 17; but we never hear of one of them converted to the Christian faith. (5.) The SAMARITANS were the offspring of those heathens whom the kings of Assyria brought from the east, and planted in the country of the ten tribes. Their religion was a motley mixture of the heathen and the Jewish. They and the Jews generally hated one another to an uncommon degree; and in the days of our Saviour the Jews thought them all possessed by the devil; 1 Kin. xvii. 24—34; Ezra iv, v; Neh. ii, iii, iv, vi; Luke ix. 52, 53; John iv; viii. 48. (6.) The GALILEANS were a party headed by one Judas, who refused to submit to the Romans, or, to pay them any tribute; Luke xiii. 1; Acts v. 37. (7.) The HERODIANS were the flatterers of Herod the tetrarch of Galilee, who were ready to comply with whatever heathenish customs he introduced, in order to please his Roman friends; Mat. xxii. 16; Mark viii. 15.

The knowledge of the TYPICAL REPRESENTATIONS under the Old Testament dispensation is of much more importance; the whole of it being intended by God as a proper mean of ushering his Son into our world, and into his subsequent glory: every religious rite, every noted person and event, observable therein, may justly be considered as an emblem of what is spiritual, and as a TYPE, a FIGURE, a SUBSTANTIAL PREDICTION, of good things to come. This idea is strongly supported by the apostle's calling the Jewish ordinances shadows of good things to come, the body of which is Christ; Col. ii. 17; and by most of his Epistle to the Hebrews. To view the noted PERSONS, EVENTS, and RITUAL INSTITUTIONS, in relation to Jesus Christ and his New Testament and heavenly church, is indeed to apprehend them in a most amiable and engaging point of light. In this view we discern all the prophets bearing witness to our glorious and worthy Redeemer. Among these shadows of good things to come we may rank,

1. TYPICAL PERSONS, who, in their distinguished origin, their amiable qualities, their honourable stations, their peculiar work or call to it, their wise and faithful performance thereof, and remarkable success therein, represent Jesus, the Mediator of the New Testament and Saviour of men. In this light we may consider (1.) ADAM, in his immediate formation by God, his perfect likeness to God, his distinguished form, in which the spiritual and material substances of creation were connected; in his lordship over this sublunary world, his divine marriage, and in his parental and federal relation to mankind; Gen. i—v. Rom. v. 12—19; 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22. (2.) ABEL in the debasement of his name, the righteousness of his life, the excellency and acceptableness of his sacrifice; in his brother's hatred and murder of him, and the fearful punishment which ensued; Gen. iv. 1—16; Heb. xi. 4; xii. 24; 1 John iii. 12. (3.) ENOCH, in his self-dedication to God, upright walking with him, clear prediction of the last judgment and imbodied translation to heaven; Gen. v. 22—24; Heb. xi. 5; Jude 14, 15. (4.) NOAH, as the comforter of his friends, the upright favourite of his God, the erector of the ark, the saviour of his family and animals, the acceptable sacrificer to God, the covenant-head of those who repeopled the new world, and the predictor of their different fates; Gen. v—x. Heb. xi. 6; 1 Pet. iii. 19, 20. (5.) MELCHIZEDEK, in the secresy of his genealogy; in his immediately divine instalment in the priesthood; in his relation to an accursed people as their priest and king; in his having no official successor; in his superiority to and blessing of Abraham; and in his generous refreshment of the victorious but weary troops; Gen. xiv. 18—20; Ps. cx. 4; Heb. vii. 1—11. (6.) ABRAHAM, in his divine call to leave his native country; in his firm trust in, ready obedience to, and high favour with God: in his meekness, his kindness, and his boldness, in favour of Lot, his injurious friend; in his perfect equity and extensive usefulness to his neighbours; in his covenant headship over his long promised and marvellously produced seed; and in the extraordinary oblations, whereby he confirmed it; and in the distinguished tempers and fate of those born in his house; Gen. xii—xxv. Ps. cv. 6—15; Acts vii. 2—8; Rom. iv; Gal. iii. 6—18; iv. 22—31; Heb. xi. 8—19. (7.) ISAAC, in his long predicted, much desired, and marvellous birth; in his early enduring of persecution; in his voluntary oblation of himself to God, a source of great blessings to himself and his seed; in his happy marriage to his Gentile kinswoman; and in the long desired birth, different tempers, and states of his children; Gen. xxi—xxvii. Gal. iv. 26—29. (8.) JACOB, in his noted uprightness; his acquirement of the birthright and blessing; his manifold troubles, and divine support and comfort under the same; his prevalent wrestling and powerful prayers; his numerous offspring, and the extensive blessings he left them; Gen. xxv—xxxv. xlvi—l. Hos. xii. 3; iv. 12. (9.) JOSEPH, as a darling son, marked with princely apparel; a hated, but prudent and affectionate brother; a trusty, wise, and successful servant; an inspired interpreter and prophet; a resolute resister of temptation; a patient sufferer of trials unnumbered, and through them highly exalted and singularly blessed; and, in fine, as the preserver of nations, the advancer of his master's kingdom and nourisher of his father's family; Gen. xxx. 22—24; xxxvii, xxxix—l. Ps. cv. 16—22; Acts vii. 9—18. (10.) JOB, in his remarkable piety, integrity, humility, and usefulness; in his original happiness and wealth; in his sudden and sovereign reduction to depths of misery and wo; in his manifold and grievous sufferings from every quarter, hell, earth, and heaven; his remarkable patience under them, and his restoration at last to redoubled glory and wealth; Job i—xlii. Ezek. xiv. 14; Ja. v. 11. (11.) MOSES, in his honourable but hazardous birth, his marvellous preservation, his manifold trials and patience under them; in his solemn call to his extensive office of deliverer, mediator, extraordinary priest, unparalleled prophet, honoured lawgiver, and king in Jeshurun, in his incomparable intimacy with God; and in his meekness, disinterestedness, fidelity, and zeal, in the discharge of his work; Ex. ii. to Deut. xxxiv. Ps. cv. 26, 27; lxxvii. 20; Acts vii. 20—40; Heb. xi. 23—29. (12.) AARON, as a renowned saint, an eloquent orator, a holy prophet, a great high priest, a covenant-head and common parent of priests unnumbered; in his solemn call to and investiture in his office of priesthood, and the confirmation thereof by miracles of mercy and wrath; in his laborious, faithful, and affectionate discharge thereof; and at last, in his voluntary death on mount Hor, leaving his sacred vestments to his son; Ex. iv. 14—16; viii—x, xxviii, xxix; Lev. viii, ix, x; Num. xvi, xvii, xx. (13, 14.) BEZALEEL and AHOLIAB, as the divinely called, singularly qualified, faithful, laborious, and successful framers of a tabernacle for the symbolic residence of God; Ex. xxxi, xxxvi—xl. (15.) PHINEHAS, in his divinely directed, though uncommon zeal for God, and his nation; in his honourable reward of victory, peace, and everlasting priesthood; and in his covenant-headship over his priestly posterity; Num. xxv, xxxi; Ps. cvi. 30, 31. (16.) JOSHUA, in his name pregnant with salvation; his education under Moses the lawgiver; his solemn call and repeated encouragement from God to his work, and his diligence therein; his miraculous assistance, diversified exploits, marvellous conquests, and wise distribution of the promised Canaan to God's chosen people; and in his zeal and care to establish among them the true worship and service of God; Ex. xvii. 10, 13; Num. xiii. 13, 16; xiv. 6—10, 30; xxvii. 15—23; Deut. xxxi. 1—8; Jos. i—xxiv. Acts vii. 45; Heb. 4. 8. (17.) GIDEON, in his original meanness, his lovely humility and meekness; his clearly divine, solemn, and miraculously attested, call to deliver Israel; his amazing success by unlikely instruments; his care to reform his nation, maintain peace with his friends, and punish his contemners; Judg. vi—viii. 1 Sam. xii. 11; Heb. xi. 32—34. (18.) SAMSON, in his preternatural birth, his solemn separation to the service of God, his marvellous exploits, the men of Judah's betrayment of him into the hand of his enemies; and, in fine, his voluntary death for the ruin of his people's destroyers; Judg. xiii—xvi. Heb. xi. 32—34. (19.) BOAZ the Bethlehemite, in his abundant wealth, his humble and affectionate mind, his divinely directed and honourable marriage to a destitute Gentile widow, and the happy issue thereof; Ruth i—iv. (20.) SAMUEL, in his marvellous birth, his early dedication to God, his solemn call to and faithful service of God, as the prophet and deliverer of Israel, and in the remarkable vengeance which overtook the nation for rejecting him; 1 Sam. i—xxxi. Heb. xi. 32—34. (21.) DAVID, in his fidelity, patience, meekness, zeal, eminent devotion, firm faith in, and high favour and familiarity with, God, and in his triple unction and call to this office; in which he was at once the Psalmist, prophet, and monarch of Israel, and a head to the heathen around; in his covenant-headship over his royal posterity; in his unnumbered and grievous afflictions from every side, and his holy resignation thereto; in his marvellous exploits, and almost ever-successful wars with the enemies of his nation; in his astonishing care to order the church, and his expensive preparations for building the temple of God; 1 Sam. xvi—xxx. 2 Sam. i—xxiv. 1 Kin. i, ii; 1 Chr. iii, xi—xxix. Ps. ii—cl. Acts xiii. 22. (22.) SOLOMON, in his dearness to God; in his early and solemn enthronement; his charge from, and benediction by his father; in his astonishing wisdom, wealth, and renown; in the extent, order, peace, and happiness of his kingdom; in his expensive, skilful, and laborious erection of a magnificent temple for God, and in his solemn dedication thereof by sacrifices and prayer; 2 Sam. xii. 25; vii. 12—16; 1 Chr. xvii. 11—15;—xxii, xxviii; 2 Chr. i—x; 1 Kin. i—x; Ps. lxxii, cxxxii. (23.) ELIJAH, in his debased appearances, fervent zeal, effectual prayers, discriminating sacrifice, miracles of mercy and judgment, power over the nations, imbodied translation to heaven, and the fearful vengeance which overtook his opposers of the family of Ahab, according to his predictions; 2 Chr. xxi. 12—15; 1 Kin. xvii—xix, xxi; 2 Kin. i, ii; Luke iv. 25, 26; Jam. v. 17, 18. (24.) ELISHA, in his solemn call to his prophetical function, and ready compliance therewith; his plentiful endowment with the Spirit of God, numerous miracles of mercy and judgment, usefulness to his nation, the manifold injuries he received, and the fearful resentments thereof by his God; 1 Kin. xix. 19—21; 2 Kin. ii—ix; xiii. 14—21; Luke iv. 27. (25.) JONAH, in his exposure to the raging storm and billows, his burial alive in the whale's belly, and resurrection therefrom on the third day; and in the success which attended his subsequent ministration among the Gentiles; 2 Kin. xiv. 25; Jonah i—iv; Mat. xii. 39—41. (26.) ELIAKIM, in his succession to a traitor in office; his distinguished authority and faithful exercise thereof, for the honour of his master and advantage of his nation; Is. xxii. 20—24. (27.) DANIEL, in his renowned piety and uprightness; his high favour with God; his distinguished wisdom, and uncommon revelations of God's purposes; his powerful prayers; his advancement to high honours, through exile, debasement, and trouble; and in the terrible vengeance which overtook his malicious persecutors; Dan. i—xii; Ezek. xiv. 14; xxviii. 3. (28.) ZERUBBABEL, in his dearness to God; his leading his people from Babylon to Canaan; and in his rebuilding the temple by weak means, and notwithstanding much opposition: Ezra i—vi. Zec. iv. 6—10; Hag. i. 14; ii. 23. (29.) JOSHUA the high priest, in the resistance he received from Satan; the divine changing of his apparel; in the contempt which he and his fellows endured; and in their subsequent crowns of honour, and their fellowship with angels; Zech. iii, vi. Ezra v. 2. (30.) JOHN BAPTIST, in his divinely predicted, preternatural, and gladdening birth; his early and eminent sanctity of nature and life; and in his solemn call to his work of reformation; his zeal, fidelity, and success therein; and in his martyrdom in the cause of truth; Mat. iii, xiv; Luke i, iii; John i. iii. These did all prefigure Jesus Christ in everything, in his person, state or conduct, correspondent with these things.

II. TYPICAL CLASSES or ORDERS of men, which prefigured Jesus Christ, and his gospel ministers or people, in their stations, endowments, work, and reward. Thus (1) The ISRAELITES IN GENERAL, in the meanness of their extract; the supernatural manner of their production from Abraham; their long continued paucity and weakness; their obstinacy and wickedness, and frequent murmurings and rebellions; their manifold distresses, wanderings, and enemies; and especially in God's federal betrothing of them to himself in their progenitors; marking them with his sign of circumcision; separating them to himself as his peculiar people, children, and servants; bestowing upon them his peculiar protection, provision, direction, laws, ordinances, promises, and country; and his increasing them into a multitude of nations; were figures of the saints, particularly in the gospel church; Heb. xi. 11, 12; Ex. i, ii, xiii, xiv, xvi, xvii, xix; Num. i—xxxvi; Deut. iv—ix—xxvi. 5—9; Rom. ix. 4, 5, &c. (2) The FIRST-BORN HEBREW MALES, as memorials of an accomplished redemption from Egypt; as the beginning of their fathers' strength, and preservers of their honourable name; as heirs to a double portion of their inheritance, and their principal blessing; as heads (if not priests before the law) to their brethren; as the honour of their families, and means of sanctifying them to God and procuring his blessing thereon; prefigured Jesus Christ, and were emblems of his chosen saints; Ex. xiii. 2, 11—16; xxii. 29; xxxiv. 19; Num. iii. 45—51; viii. 16; Deut. xxi. 16, 17. (3) The KINSMEN-REDEEMERS, in their necessary nearness of kin, that the right of redemption might be theirs; in their recovering their friends' inheritance, if mortgaged; redeeming his person, if enslaved; avenging his blood, if he had been murdered; and in marrying his widow, and raising him up an honourable seed, if he died childless; prefigured Jesus Christ in our nature, purchasing our happiness, avenging our blood upon Satan and our lusts, redeeming our persons; and, by union and communion with them, rendering us fruitful in good works; Lev. xxv. 25; Num. xxxv. 19—28; Ruth iv. 1—10. (4) The YOUNGER UNMARRIED BROTHERS of a Hebrew who died childless, in their obligation to espouse their brother's widow, and raise him up an heir to his estate, and their exposure to contempt if they refused, represent ministers and professors of the Christian church, who, by communion with the church, must either raise up a spiritual seed to Jesus their departed Brother, or expose themselves to everlasting shame and contempt: Deut. xxv. 5—10. (5) The VOLUNTARY BOND-SERVANTS, who, from love to their master and family, refused to go free at the end of their term, and had their ear fastened to his door-post, in token of their engagement to perpetual service, figured out Jesus Christ, as, from love to God and his people, voluntarily engaging himself in the perpetual work of our salvation, and his people, as constrained by his love to perpetual obedience; Ex. xxi. 5, 6; Deut. xv. 16, 17. (6) The SOJOURNING STRANGERS, not Canaanites, in the tender care taken of them; in their free access to the oracles and ordinances of God, and to the cities of refuge; represented the free and abundant access of the Gentiles to the gospel church, and their high privileges therein; Ex. xxii. 21; xii. 48, 49; Lev. xix. 10; Num. xv. 4; xix. 10; xxxv. 15, &c. The HANGED MALEFACTORS of Israel in their accursed death and speedy burial, figured out our Redeemer as clothed with our guilt and curse; crucified for the expiation of our crimes; and decently interred, without delay, to mark that the law was satisfied for our sin; Deut. xxi. 22, 23. (8) The HEBREW JUDGES, in their solemn call to deliver their people from that misery which their sins had procured; in their divine qualification for their work, and success therein; prefigured Jesus, our necessary, divinely called, well-qualified, and successful deliverer; Judg. ii—xvi; 1 Sam. i—vii; xii. 11; Neh. ix. 27. (9) The HEBREW KINGS of David's family as introduced by the Israelites' rejection of God's immediate government; as taken from among their brethren; as divinely called to, and secured in, power by a perpetual covenant; as installed by unction, coronation, kisses, and shouts of subjection; as copying out the law of God for themselves, and constantly attending to it as the rule of their administrations; as charged not to trust on carnal supports nor wallow in fleshly pleasures; as sitting on the Lord's throne, and ruling the Lord's people, but never exalting their heart above them; and as fighting the Lord's battles, and extirpating his accursed enemies; represented Jesus Christ, as the mediatorial King of his church; and his saints, as made kings unto God; 1 Sam, viii, xiii, xv; xvi. 1—13; 2 Chr. xi, xii; 1 Kin. i. 39; 2 Kin. xi. 12; xxiii. 30. (10) The HOLY PROPHETS, in their divine mission to, furniture for, and direction in, their work; and in their diligence, fidelity, and zeal in it; explaining God's laws, attesting his truths, revealing his purposes, announcing his promises and threatenings, and directing his people; in being often signs and wonders to men; and in suffering much abuse and persecution from them, and in God's fearful resentment thereof; represented Jesus Christ, and his gospel ministers and saints; Is. vi; Jer. i; Ezek. ii—xi; Heb. i; Is. i, to Mal. iv; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 15—17; Mat. xxiii. 34, 35. (11) The NAZARITES, in their voluntary separation from others and solemn dedication to God; in the honourable length of their hair; in their abstinence from everything intoxicating and polluting; in their exact fulfilment and solemn finishing of their vow; figured out Jesus, his ministers, and his people, as solemnly, and yet voluntarily, set apart to their sacred work; as constant and increasing in their manifested subjection to God; making known their moderation to all men; and as, amidst debasement and troubles, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord; and at last finishing their course in a manner thankful, solemn, and highly honourable to God; Num. vi; Judg. xiii. (12) The NETHINIMS, i. e. given ones, which consisted of the Gibeonites, and such others as were devoted to the lower services of the tabernacle or temple, in drawing water to wash the sacrifices, or hewing wood to burn them; in their voluntary subjection, their mean employment, and yet distinguished nearness to God; represented our devoted, condescending, and debased Redeemer, approaching to, and enjoying remarkable fellowship with God in the service of his church, and his ministers and saints; Jos. ix. 22—27; 1 Chr. ix. 2; Ezra ii. 58. (13) The LEVITES, in their honourable separation to the service of God, as a reward of their zeal against the worshippers of the golden calf; in their standing in the room of the first-born Israelites; in their being appointed to their work for preventing plagues on the Hebrew nation; in their early enrolment in the sacred lists, from a month old; in their solemn instalment in their office, by washing, waving, and diversified oblations; in their extensive labour, watching and bearing the tabernacle and its furniture, assisting the priests in the sacrifices, teaching the people, &c., during the vigour of life, and then retiring to an honourable rest; and in their large allotment of cities and incomes, though by far the smallest of the HEBREW tribes; prefigured Jesus, as the solemnly installed, the once debased, but faithful Servant of his Father, in all the concerns of his church; and were emblems of his ministers and saints, in their labours of love and their ample reward; Ex. xxxii. 27—29; Deut. xxxiii. 8—11; Mal. ii. 5, 6; Num. iii, iv, viii, xviii; xxxv. 1—8; Deut. xii. 11—19; xiv. 27—29; xviii. 6—8. 2 Chr. xvii. 8, 9; xix. 8; xxix—xxxi; Neh. viii. (14) The AARONIC PRIESTS, in their attested descent from Aaron; their unblemished bodies; their separation from their brethren; their temperate diet, moderate mourning, and honourable marriage; their plain, but pure and sacred apparel; their divine call, and solemn attestation thereof by miracles of mercy and wrath; their solemn consecration to their office, by washing, enrobing, oblations, unctions, and feasting; and in their extensive work of rearing and unrearing the tabernacle in the wilderness, taking care of the sacred furniture, offering all the gifts and sacrifices of their nation, burning the incense, placing and removing the show-bread, lighting and dressing the sacred lamps, blowing the silver trumpets, teaching and blessing the people, judging of their leprosies, purifying the unclean, encouraging the people in their battles; and, in fine, in their plentiful and sacred reward; prefigured Jesus in his honourable pedigree, perfect purity, absolute fitness for his work, solemn call to it, and instalment therein, and his faithful and complete discharge thereof, issuing in a glorious, abundant, and everlasting reward; and they were also emblems of his ministers and saints; Heb. v. 1; Ezra ii. 62, 63; Lev. xxi, xxii. 1—13; xxiv. 5—9; i—x, xii—xv; Ex. xxix; xxviii. 40—43; 2 Chr. xiii. 10, 11; Num. iv. 5—16; vi. 23—26; viii. 2, 3; x. 1—10; xv—xviii, xxviii, xxix; Deut. xvii. 8—13; xviii. 1—5; xx. 1—4. (15) The HIGH PRIEST, in his peculiar dignity; his government of the other priests; in his double suit of sacred vestments, the simple and golden; his plentiful unction; his never defiling himself, nor leaving the sanctuary; his espousing none but an honourable virgin; his performing the whole work of the annual expiation, purifying the sanctuary and its furniture, entering within the vail and returning to bless the people; prefigured Jesus, the sole High Priest of our profession, in his unparalleled excellency, dignity, and purity; his Headship over his people; his robes of manhood, mediatorial office, and righteousness; his divine call to, and full preparation for his work, by the abundant influences of the Holy Ghost; his perfect attachment to, and attendance on that work; his communion with chosen and sanctified persons and pure churches; his making a full atonement for our sins, and bringing in an everlasting righteousness; and his entering into heaven by his own blood, that he might thence return to bless men in the gospel dispensation and last judgment; Exod. xxviii. 1—39; xxix. 6; Lev. xxi. 10—12; viii, ix, xvi.

III. TYPICAL EVENTS, or transient things, which prefigured Jesus, and the great events of our redemption by him. (1.) NOAH'S ARK, in its divine contrivance, appointment, and plan; in its firmness, strength, and fitness, to swim through swelling floods, and to protect from deluging rains; in its capacious and regular stories, rooms, and entrance; in its illumination only from above; in its being the sole means of saving a few persons and animals from the overflowing deluge; in its saving the cargo which God directed into it, by the exposure of itself; and, in fine, firmly settling on its lofty rest; represented Jesus, in his diversified offices and states, as the sole means of saving an elect world committed to him by God from the overflowing deluge of infinite wrath; and is a figure of his body the church, without the limits of which none can be saved; Gen. vi—viii; Heb. xi. 7; 1 Pet. iii. 20, 21. (2.) JACOB'S LADDER, erected in the wilderness, and reaching from Jacob on earth to a promising JEHOVAH in heaven, and occupied by angels ascending and descending thereon; represented Jesus, as the Son of Jacob in his manhood, and, of JEHOVAH in his divine person; in his different states of debasement and exaltation as the Mediator between God and men, ministered to by angels himself, and in whom they ministered to us; Gen. xxvii. 11—15; John i. 51. (3.) MOSES' BUSH; low, earthly, and combustible; burning, but not consumed; represented Jesus' manhood; low and weak in itself, inhabited by his fulness of Godhead, and exposed to the fierceness of his Father's wrath, but not consumed; and his church, under fiery tribulations, but not destroyed, because inhabited by a promising God; Exod. iii. 2—10; Acts vii. 30—34. (4.) The PILLAR OF CLOUD AND FIRE, which conducted the Hebrews in the wilderness, in its form; its seasonable origin; its hovering over the erected tabernacle; in its bedewing, enlightening, protecting and directing influence; and in the many oracular instructions received from thence; marked out Jesus Christ, and his gospel ordinances; Exod. xiii. 20—22; xiv. 20; xl. 34—38; Num. ix. 15—23; x. 33, 34; Neh. ix. 14, 19; Psalm cv. 39; 1 Cor. x. 2. (5.) The TREE discovered by God, and cast by Moses into the bitter waters of Marah for sweetening them, represented Jesus, found out by God, made under the law, and crucified for us, sweetening everything awful, bitter, and troublesome; Exod. xv. 22—25. (6.) The MANNA, divinely formed, marvellous in virtue; given freely, seasonably, plentifully, daily, early, and abundantly, to ill-deserving and even contemning murmurers, ready to perish; and gathered by all daily and early; shared equally; carefully prepared; speedily and regularly eaten: a golden potful of which was preserved for a lasting memorial in the Holy of holies, represented Jesus as the bread of life, given to sinners of mankind in the gospel, and gathered and eaten by a true faith; and of which there is a plentiful memorial contained in gospel ordinances; Exod. xvi; Num. xi. 4—9, 31—33; xxi. 5, 6; Neh. ix. 15, 20; John vi. 32—57. (7.) The ROCKS of Rephidim and Kadesh, as smitten by Moses' rod, and emitting streams of water sufficient for all the Hebrew millions, and following them in their way through the wilderness, represented Jesus, as obeying and suffering under Moses' law, that thence might issue forth streams of redeeming love, blood, spirit, and truth, for the life and comfort of sinners of mankind; Exod. xvii. 1—7; Num. xx. 1—11; Neh. ix. 15, 20; Psalm lxxviii. 15, 16; cv. 41; cxiv. 8; 1 Cor. x. 4. (8.) The WELL DUG by the nobles of Israel on the border of Moab, at Moses' direction, represented Christ as the fountain opened in the gospel, by the prophets and apostles, for the purification and comfort of his people in this world; Num. xxi. 16—18. (9.) The CLUSTER of GRAPES, brought by Caleb and Joshua from Eshcol, might figure out his unnumbered excellencies, blessings, promises, gifts, and graces, brought near in the gospel, and exhibited to men as evidences of the plenty which is to be enjoyed in the Canaan above; Num. xiii. 23, 24. (10.) While AARON'S BUDDING ROD, laid up in the foreside of the ark, marked the divine appointment, the constant succession, and ever useful labours of the Aaronic priests, it represented Jesus the ever flourishing and fruitful branch of the Lord; and the gospel rod of his strength, as the demonstrative evidence of his call to his high priesthood; Num. xvii. Psalm cx. 2. (11.) The BRAZEN SERPENT, appointed by God, framed by Moses, and lifted up on a pole, that the serpent-bitten Israelites might be healed by looking to it, represented the Almighty Jesus, in the likeness of sinful flesh, fulfilling Moses' law, and lifted up on the cross and in the gospel, as the divinely appointed, the easy, the accessible, the universal, and infallible Saviour and medicine of sinful men, who look to him by faith; Num. xxi. 4—9; John iii. 14—17. (12, 13.) The POOLS OF BETHESDA and SILOAM, occasionally noted for their healing virtue, might figure him out as the miraculous healer of maimed, withered, lame, diseased, and blind sinners; John v. 1—4; ix. 6, 7; Zech. xiii. 1; Is. viii. 6. (14, 15.) The DELIVERANCE of the Hebrews from Egypt and Babylon, in the time and manner fixed by God's promise, and notwithstanding much opposition, prefigured Jesus' promised, seasonable, marvellous, all-powerful deliverance of the nations from their misery under heathenism or popery, through his erection or re-establishment of his gospel church; and are emblems of men's deliverance from an unregenerate state; Exod. xiv; Ps. lxxviii, cvi; Ezra i, ii. (16.) The TRAVELS of the Hebrews in the wilderness, amidst sins, judgments, trials, mercies, and revelations unnumbered, and their marvellous ENTRANCE into Canaan, were typical of the diversified fates of the gospel church, and her marvellous entrance into her millennial and eternal rest; Exod. xv. to Deut. xxxiv; Neh. ix. 15—28; Ps lxxviii. 14—54; cv. 39—43; cvi. 14—33; Josh. i—v. (17.) Their divinely directed and wonderfully successful WARS, in the conquest or preservation of Canaan, were typical of the manifold struggles of the gospel church to extend her boundaries or maintain her privileges; and emblematical of the saints' spiritual warfare on earth; Exod. xvii. 8—16; Num. xxi. 1—3, 21—35; Josh. vi—xii; Judg. i—xvi; 2 Sam. v, viii, x, &c.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS ORDINANCES; many, if not most of which, pertained to their civil as well as to their ceremonial system. These, in general, directed them to live as a people separated to the Lord, and who in all things, even the most minute, were zealous for his honour. (1.) To mark them Abraham's seed, distinguished from all others; to seal with them the covenant of grace, and their peculiar relation to God; to prefigure Jesus Christ, as shedding his blood for his people; and to represent our spiritual regeneration and mortification; every man-child was, under pain of death, to be CIRCUMCISED on the eighth day; Gen. xvii. (2.) To mark that nothing should be rashly, or in an improper condition, given to the Lord, no animal, however clean, was to be offered till it was at least seven days old; Exod. xxii. 30. The fruit of trees was held polluted for the first three years, and only on the fourth year given to the Lord, after which it was the lawful property of its owner; Lev. xix. 23—25. The price of a dog, or the hire of a harlot, or anything else unlawfully gotten, was never to be offered to the Lord; Deut. xxiii. 18; Isa. lxi. 8. A bond-woman defiled, having nothing of her own, was to bring no trespass-offering, but to be scourged for her fault; Lev. xix. 20—22. (3.) To mark a regard to the Lord's oblations, and to Jesus' death, thereby represented, none might eat of any blood, or of the fat of any cattle, sheep or goats; Lev. xvii. 6; vii. 23—27. (4.) To excite the Jews to the utmost purity in all manner of conversation, none might eat of clean beasts which had been torn, or had died of themselves; Lev. xvii. 15; Deut. xiv. 21; and every one was to ease nature at a proper distance, and cover the excrements; Deut. xxiii. 12—14. (5.) To prevent symbolizing with heathenish and inhuman superstition, and to animate the most tender compassion, none might cut his flesh, or make himself bald, in mourning for deceased friends; Lev. xix. 27, 28; Deut. xiv. 1. None might boil an animal in its mother's milk, or slay the dam along with her young; Exod. xxiii. 19; xxiv. 26; Deut. xiv. 21; xxii. 6, 7; Lev. xxii. 28. Nor was the mouth of an ox, while treading out the corn, to be muzzled; Deut. xxv. 4. (6.) To teach them the hurtfulness of improper mixtures of persons in societies; or of works and grace; or of ordinances of God and inventions of men; no eunuchs, bastards, Ammonites or Moabites, were to be admitted into any share of the Hebrew government; Deut. xxiii. 1—8. No Israelite might wear a garment proper to the other sex; Deut. xxii. 5. None might wear a garment of woollen and linen; Deut. xxii. 11. None might sow his field with a mixture of divers seeds; Deut. xxii. 9. None might plough with an ox and an ass yoked together; Deut. xxii. 10; nor gender his cattle with divers kinds; Lev. xix. 19. (7.) To mark the most disinterested love and tender compassion towards mankind, and to figure out the rich abundance of Jesus' redeeming grace, no servant who had fled from a hard master was to be delivered back to him; Deut. xxiii. 15. No captive maid was to be married, till she had remained a month to prepare herself, and bewail the loss of her parents; Deut. xxi. 10—14. No man betrothed or newly married, or who had newly built a house or planted a vineyard, was required to attend in war; Deut. xx. 5—7; xxiv. 5. None might lend money upon usury to a poor Hebrew, if to any Hebrew at all; or render him a bond-servant; Lev. xxv. 36, 37; Deut. xxiii. 19. None might reap the corners of his field; nor glean those of his vineyard; nor shake his fruit trees a second time; nor bring home a sheaf which he had once forgotten in the field; but all was to be left to the poor, to the stranger, to the fatherless, and the widow; Lev. xix. 9, 10. (8.) Not only to deter from every indulgence of fleshly lust, but to mark the fearful end of those who hypocritically join themselves to the church, or who dishonour Jesus by their scandalous and continued outbreakings, the woman, who falsely imposed herself upon a husband as a virgin, was to be publicly stoned; Deut. xxii. 21; and a priest's daughter who played the harlot was to be burnt; Lev. xxi. 9. (9.) To animate them to a constant gratitude for mercies received, and a regard to the commandments of God, every Hebrew's upper garment was marked with a blue fringe, commemorative of the redemption from Egypt, and of his obligation to obey the law of Moses; Num. xv. 37—41.

V. TYPICAL PLACES, which were ceremonially holy, but in different degrees. Canaan was holy in the lowest degree; the cities of refuge in the second; Jerusalem in the third; Mount Sion in the fourth; and the tabernacle and temple in the highest. In the more sacred places God symbolically dwelt: thither his offerings were brought; there his festivals were kept; and thence his oracles were to be sought; Deut. xii. 5—7; Ps. lxxxvii, cxxii, cxxxii. (1.) CANAAN, as the wonted residence of ejected sinners; as a land divinely chosen for God's favourites; long promised, freely bestowed, and graciously inspected by the eye of God; a land orderly allotted to God's chosen people, brought thither by miracles unnumbered; a land singularly nourished by the influences of heaven, and fruitful in everything necessary for subsistence and delight; and, to crown all, the sacred residence of JEHOVAH, and of the ordinances of his grace—but how despised, and come short of, through unbelief!—prefigured the state of the New Testament church, and of the celestial happiness; and was an emblem of our new-covenant state of union to, and fellowship with Jesus Christ; Gen. xv. 18—21; Exod. iii. 8, 17; vi. 8; Num. xiv. 7, 8; Deut. vi. 10, 11; viii. 7—10; xi. 9—12; Neh. ix. 25, 35; Ezek. xx. 6, 15; Ps. cvi. 24; Heb. iii. 19. (2.) The CITIES OF REFUGE, in their names; and as being near to the borders of the heathen, and easily accessible to every man-slayer; as Levitical cities of instruction; as perpetually having their gates open, with excellent roads leading to them; and in the protection and peace which they secured for the refugees who remained in them till the death of the high priest; represented Jesus Christ, as the all-renowned, near, accessible, completely furnished, and everlasting refuge of sinful men, Jews and Gentiles, in which they receive spiritual light, life, liberty, peace, and safety; Num. xxxv. 6—34; Deut. iv. 41—43; Josh. xx, xxi (3.) JERUSALEM, in its name marking peace and perfection discerned and possessed; in its stable foundation, compact form, beautiful appearance, and strong fortifications; and as a city chosen of God, holy, healthy, rich, renowned, royal, populous, and privileged; prefigured the gospel church below, and the heavenly Jerusalem above; Ps. xlviii. 1—4; lxxvi. 2; cxxii. 2—9; cxxv. 2; Josh. xv. 63. (4.) MOUNT ZION, in its beautiful situation; its extensive and pleasant prospect; its unshaken stability; its joyous dwellings; its protection by and dearness to God, as the peculiar residence of himself and his chosen kings of David's family; was also an emblem of our fixed and glorious new covenant state, and a figure of the gospel church, and of the heavenly glory; 2 Sam. v; Ps. xlviii. 2—4; lxxvi. 1; lxxviii. 68, 69; cxxv. 1. (5.) The TABERNACLE, appointed for God's peculiar residence, was thus formed; a court 61 yards long, and about half as much in breadth, was enclosed by a linen hanging, perhaps of net-work, about nine feet in height, suspended by silver hooks on fifty-six brazen pillars, fixed at bottom in large sockets of the same metal. The sole entrance from the east was twelve yards wide, but hung over with a fine vail of embroidered linen suspended on four pillars; here, under the sky, stood the brazen altar and laver, at a small distance from the entrance of the sanctuary: hither every clean Hebrew, or proselyte, might come with his oblations. At the west end of this court stood the tabernacle, which was a close tent in form of a house, standing from east to west: its length was about 54¾ feet, its breadth 18¼, and its height as much: it was erected by forty-eight strong boards of shittim-wood overlaid with gold, fixed at bottom, in ninety-six large sockets of silver, and bound together by five cross bars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold; over these was spread a fourfold covering, of embroidered linen, of hair cloth, of strong leather, and of rams' skins dyed red, all properly connected by clasps or buttons. Its whole east end served for an entrance, and was hung with a vail of embroidered linen, suspended by golden hooks on five pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold. This tent was divided into two apartments: the first, called the sanctuary or holy place, was in length 36½ feet, and in breadth or height half as much. Into this only the clean priests might enter; and in the west or inner end of it stood the golden candlestick, altar of incense, and table of show-bread. Beyond, and separated from this by another vail of embroidered linen, suspended on four pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold, and fixed in sockets of silver, was the ORACLE or MOST HOLY PLACE; a square room of 18¼ feet, into which only the high priest might enter on the day of expiation; and where the ark, with its furniture, and the cloud of glory overshadowing it, had their residence. The tabernacle was solemnly consecrated at its erection, and every year was sanctified anew on the day of expiation. After it had been long carried from place to place, all that was important of it was lodged in Solomon's temple. It represented Jesus Christ, the free, but altogether pure and precious gift of God, in his marvellous form, but much unseen excellencies; in the order and connexion of his offices, states, and everything else; as having in himself all fulness of atoning, purifying, enlightening, interceding, nourishing, law-magnifying virtue; as well-pleasing to God; and as being the sole Mediator, in whom God and his people have fellowship one with another. It also represented the church in her divine plan, her pure and precious materials, connected by the wisdom of God; in her different states, filled with all the fulness of Christ, consecrated by his blood and Spirit, and formed for his service; and, at last, in all her true members and important concerns, fixed in the heavenly temple; Exod. xxv—xxvii; xxx. 26—29; xxxvi—xl; Num. iii, iv; Josh. xviii. 1. (6.) The TEMPLE stood on mount Moriah, towards the south-east of Jerusalem, in a large court, surrounded by a high wall, and divided into two parts; the INNER for the priests and Levites, and the OUTER for the clean Israelites. Its plan was divine, and the preparations for it were immense. It was a very magnificent structure. The wall of it consisted of alternate rows of cedar-wood and hewn stone, probably polished marble. The whole inside, floor, walls, and roof, was overlaid with gold, and curiously marked with figures of cherubim and palm trees. On the outside of the wall were reared, in three stories, ninety chambers for accommodating the attending priests. Just before the entrance, or east end, stood the brazen altar, 36 feet square, and 18 feet high, with a large brazen sea, and ten lavers, for washing the priests and sacrifice. The entrance was a porch of 36 feet from north to south, 18 from east to west, and 219 high, in the form of a steeple. On each side of the porch was a magnificent pillar, almost 33 feet high, and curiously adorned with chapiters and figured pomegranates. Beyond this porch was the sanctuary, and apartment of 73 feet in length, 36½ in breadth, and 54¾ in height. Here, at the west end, stood ten, if not eleven, golden candlesticks, each with seven branches; as many tables of show-bread, with twelve loaves on each; and a large altar of incense between the two rows of candlesticks and tables. To the westward of this apartment, and separated from it by a fine partition and vail, was the HOLY OF HOLIES, a square room of 36½ feet in length, and breadth, and 54¾ in height. Here, amidst thick darkness, stood the ark with its furniture; to which Solomon added two new cherubim of olive tree, the wings of which stretched the whole breadth of the house over it. It also was solemnly dedicated by sacrifices and prayer; and was annually purified on the great day of expiation. It prefigured Jesus Christ and his church in their more glorious and exalted state. It typified his manhood, as the divinely planned, curious, pure, and glorious residence of his Godhead; typified his person, as the glorious, fixed, and lasting means of our fellowship with God; typified the church, as formed by manifold oracles, ordinances, and members, to be the residence of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and typified heaven itself, in its glorious fulness of redemption, and as the honoured mansion of complete and immediate fellowship with God; and it was an emblem of every particular saint, whose soul and body are, by Jesus, built up and consecrated as temples to God; 1 Kings vi—viii; 1 Chr. xxii—xxvi; xxix. 1—9; 2 Chr. iii—vi.

VI. The TYPICAL or SACRED UTENSILS were (1.) The ARK. It was a chest made of shittim wood, very fine, and almost incorruptible, overlaid with gold; 4 feet 7 inches in length, 2 feet 9 inches in breadth, and as much in height. At the top it had a golden cornice round about its lid, called the mercy-seat, because the symbol of the divine presence rested on it, which was of pure gold. Out of the ends of this lid were hammered two golden cherubim, which, with their expanded wings, covered the whole mercy-seat, while they seemed to pore upon it. Within this ark were reposited the two tables of the moral law; and in some other place of it the golden pot full of manna, Aaron's budding rod, and a copy of Moses' law. Being consecrated by an unction of blood and oil, it ordinarily stood on the floor at the very west end of the Holy of Holies. But in the wilderness, and even afterwards, it was, when necessary, carried about by means of staves fixed in its golden rings. None but priests might see it, under pain of death. By means of it the Israelites' passage through Jordan was opened, the lofty walls of Jericho were brought down, the Philistines and their idol were plagued, the curious Bethshemites were slain, and the family of Obed-edom were blessed. It represented Jesus Christ God-man, to the astonishment of angels and men, fulfilling all righteousness, glorifying and delighting his Father to the highest, and containing in him every memorial of JEHOVAH'S kindness; everything necessary for the instruction, confirmation, and nourishment of his people; and who, being consecrated to his work, and carried about in the gospel, directs their journeys, blesses those who sincerely receive him, overcomes their enemies, opens their passage into their promised rest, and punishes such as profanely abuse him; Exod. xxv. 10—22; xxxvii. 1—9; xl. 9, 35; xvi. 33, 34; Num. xvii. 10; Deut. x. 3—5; Lev. xvi. 2; Josh. iii. 11—17; vi. 14—20; 1 Sam. v; vi. 19; 2 Sam. vi. 11; 1 Kings viii. 4—12. (2.) The TABLE OF SHOW-BREAD was formed of shittim-wood overlaid with gold. It was 3 feet 8 inches in length, half as much in breadth, and 2 feet 9 inches in height; and had at top a double cornice of gold, to preserve the loaves from falling off. When necessary, it was carried by staves of shittim wood fixed in rings of gold. It had the same form of consecration as the ark. It stood in the north-west corner of the sanctuary. Upon it stood, in two rows, twelve loaves of show-bread, one for each Hebrew tribe, with some frankincense on them. The old ones were removed every sabbath, and given to the priests for food, and new ones put in their place. Solomon made ten new golden tables; five of which were placed on each side of the golden altar, on each of which were placed twelve loaves. This table and its furniture prefigured Jesus Christ presenting all his chosen tribes, in every generation, before God in his intercession; or the gospel, as presenting him and his fulness to his people, chiefly on the weekly sabbath; Exod. xxv. 23—30; xxix. 31; xxx. 27; xxxvii. 10—16; xl. 22; Lev. xxiv. 5—9; viii. 31; 1 Kings vii. 45; 2 Chr. iv. 8; Mat. 12. 4; Heb. ix. 2—21. (3.) The ALTAR OF INCENSE—so called, because frankincense was daily burnt thereon while the burnt-offerings were consumed by sacred fire on the brazen altar—was formed of shittim-wood overlaid with gold. It was four-square, almost 22 inches in length and breadth, and twice as much in height. Whether its top was a golden grate I know not: it is certain it was surrounded with a golden cornice, which prevented the falling of any incense from it. It had spires or horns at the four corners of it; and was portable by staves of shittim-wood fixed in its golden rings. It was consecrated by an unction of blood and oil; and had its horns annually tipt with the blood of the general expiation. Solomon seems to have made a new one of cedar-wood, perhaps larger than that of Moses. It stood in the middle at the west end of the sanctuary, over against the mercy-seat. It represented Jesus Christ appearing before God in our nature in his intercession, and presenting our services to him, Ex. xxx. 1—10; xxvii, 34—38; xxxvii. 25—29; 1 Kin. vi. 20; Rev. viii. 3, 4. (4) The GOLDEN CANDLESTICK consisted of almost 114 pounds weight of gold, beaten out into seven branches adorned with knops and flowers. It stood on the south side of the golden altar; and, being daily supplied with sacred oil, and its lamps lighted and trimmed by the priests, was the sole illuminator of the sanctuary. Solomon made ten golden candlesticks, and placed five of them on each side of the sanctuary. It represented Jesus Christ, who hath the seven spirits of God, as the sole enlightener of his church; and his church as the enlightener of this dark world; Ex. xxv. 31—40; xl. 22—25; Lev. xxiv. 1—4; Num. viii. 1—4; 1 Sam. iii. 3; 1 Kin. vii. 49; 2 Chr. iv. 7. (5) The BRAZEN LAVER was a large vessel, holding water for the priests to wash their hands or feet, or the sacrifices, while they were occupied in their work at the tabernacle or temple. It stood near to the entrance of the sanctuary. Solomon formed ten new lavers, each capable of containing about 307 gallons, five pints, English wine measure; five of which he placed on each side of the entrance to the sanctuary upon bases of curious workmanship. He also formed a still larger vessel, called the BRAZEN SEA, which, upon occasion, could hold 23,029 gallons, five pints, which he placed upon 12 brazen oxen, three looking towards each quarter. This represented Jesus Christ, as the fountain opened for the purification of his people, exhibited in the gospel by the twelve patient, pure, and laborious apostles, and other ministers; Ex. xxx. 17—21; xxxviii. 8; Lev. viii. 10, 11; 1 Kin. vii. 23—40; 2 Chr. iv. 2—6, 14, 15; Heb. ix. 21. (6) The ALTAR, upon which the Lord's part of the sacrifices and meat-offerings was burned. Before the flood we read of no altars at all. Before the erection of the tabernacle the altars appear to have been formed of earth, or unhewn stones; and such were afterwards used on some particular occasions. They represented Jesus in his debased state, but capable of enduring the flames of his Father's wrath. That which Moses formed consisted of shittim-wood overlaid with brass. It was about 9 feet square, and 5½ feet high. Its top was a brazen grate, through which the ashes of the oblations fell into a pan below. At each corner it had a brazen spire, or horn, which protected man-slayers. It was carried about, when necessary, on staves of shittim-wood overlaid with brass. The new altar which Solomon built for the temple, was 36½ feet square, and its height 18¼ feet. It had an easy access on the east side. After the captivity, a large pile of stones appears to have supplied the place of it. This altar was consecrated by an unction of blood and oil. It represented Jesus Christ, in his debased state, as our infinitely valuable Mediator, all-sufficient atonement, and never-failing refuge from God's wrath; through whom we have access to, and nourishment from God; and our persons and services are rendered acceptable in his sight; Ex. xxvii. 1—9; xxix. 36, 37; xxxviii. 1—7; 1 Kin. vii. 50; 2 Chr. iv. 1; Ezra iii. 3; with Gen. viii. 20; xii. 7; xxxv. 1, 3; Ex. xx. 24, 25; Num. xix. 3; Deut. xxi. 4; Josh. viii. 30—35; Judg. vi. 24; 1 Sam. vii. 6; 2 Sam. xxiv. 25; 1 Kin. viii. 63, 64; xviii. 30, 32. (7) For calling together the Hebrew assemblies, for announcing their journeys in the wilderness, for encouraging them in their battles, for proclaiming their festivals, or for triumphing on them by a solemn sound over the sacrifices, Moses made two SILVER TRUMPETS for the priests. Solomon increased the number to 120. These represented the gospel, by the preaching of which sinners are gathered to Jesus, animated to their spiritual pilgrimage, encouraged in their Christian warfare, and have their liberties and spiritual feasts announced: and of which the great subject is Christ and him crucified; Num. x. 1—10; 2 Chr. v. 12; Ps. lxxxi. 1, 2; lxxxix. 15. (8) The STANDARDS of weight and measure, kept in the sanctuary, might represent Christ's word and his perfect pattern; Ezek. lv. 9—12; Ex. xxx. 13.

VII. TYPICAL OBLATIONS. Immediately after the fall, God appears to have instituted sacrifices. With the skins of sacrificed animals our first parents were clothed by him; Gen. iii. 21. Abel's offering of a sheep, Noah's oblations of animals and fowls, Abraham's oblation of a ram instead of Isaac; Gen. iv. 4; viii. 20; xxii. 13: Job's offerings for his children, and his friends' oblations for themselves; Job i. 5; xlii. 8; are the most noted sacrifices we read of during the first 2513 years of the world. Never, till in the federal transaction between God and Israel, Ex. xxiv, do we read of any sacrifices besides burnt-offerings. (1) God having separated the Hebrews for a people to himself, exceedingly extended, and expressly inculcated the law of typical oblations; including SACRIFICES, in which there was a destruction of the animal life to the honour of God; and GIFTS, in which no life was destroyed; as in meat-offerings, drink-offerings, soul-ransom money, tithes, &c. While these oblations were intended as an acknowledgment that the Hebrews held all their property from God, they were typical of Jesus Christ, offered to God, and useful to men, and generally represented the moral duties of ministers and people. The animals, as living, eatable, clean, tame, social, valuable, male, and in the prime of life, &c., and the fine flour, marked out the necessary excellency in Jesus Christ and his people, and their services. The voluntary manner in which they were offered represented the willing and cheerful obedience of Christ and his people. The presentation thereof, at the door of the tabernacle, imported dedication to God, and acceptableness, through Christ's person and mediation. The laying on of the offerer's hands imported the transferring of guilt on the sacrifice, and the devoting it to God. The slaughter of the animals represented the death of Christ, that the offerer ought thus to have suffered, and our surrender of our life to his service. The sprinkling of the blood round about the altar or towards the mercy-seat, &c., marked the divine virtue of Christ's blood to satisfy an offended God, and purify the whole church. The washing of the sacrifice, or any part of it, marked the perfect purity of Christ, in which his people ought to imitate him. The burning of the whole or part of the oblation represented the sufferings of Christ and his people. The holy fire denoted the wrath of God preying upon Christ, and holy love flaming in Christ and in his people. The parting of the oblations between God and the priests, or, in some cases, also the people, imported that the obedience and suffering of Christ, and even of his people, at once glorify God, and bring advantage to men.

These oblations were (1) BURNT-OFFERINGS, so called, because the flesh was wholly burnt. These were the most dignified, as well as the most ancient and the most frequent, being offered on eight or nine stated times, and as many particular occasions; nay, repeatedly offered every day. Except when poverty obliged a man to offer birds, they were always to be of male cattle, sheep or kids. Being presented at the door of the tabernacle, and by the laying on of hands, charged with the offender's guilt, they were slain, and the flesh being rendered all pure, burnt on the altar; the blood was sprinkled round about it; and the skin given to the priest. A meat-offering and drink-offering always attended them. They represented Jesus Christ, by the complete sacrifice of himself, honouring all his Father's perfections, that his people might obtain spiritual clothing, nourishment, and comfort; Lev. i. 2, 13; vi. 8—13; vii. 8; xxii. 19—27; Num. xv. 1—16; xxviii, xxix. (2) The SIN and TRESPASS-OFFERINGS were never merely voluntary. Their matter was regulated according to the station, crime, or ability of the offerer. A bullock was offered for a priest, or for the congregation, or for their rulers; the fat was burnt on the altar; the rest of the animal burnt without the camp; and the blood partly sprinkled on the golden altar, or towards the mercy-seat; and the rest poured at the bottom of the brazen altar. In other cases, the priest had the flesh for his share, and the blood, except of the expiation goat and leper's trespass-offering, was sprinkled on the horns, and round about the bottom of the brazen altar; but a very poor man offered an omer of fine flour, and a suspected adulteress an handful of barley meal without any frankincense. They represented Jesus Christ, divinely charged with our sins, and dying in our stead for the satisfaction of God's justice, and for advancing his own and his people's happiness; Lev. iv, v; vi. 1—7, 24—30; vii. 1—11; xvi; Num. xv. 22—31. (3) PEACE-OFFERINGS thanked God for mercies received, and obtained mercies desired, or paid vows. They might be either of a male or female of the herd or flock, as the offerer pleased. The fat was burnt to the Lord; the right breast and shoulder, cheeks and maw belonged to the priests; and the rest was returned to the offerer, to make a feast thereof with his friends; which, if a thank-offering, it behoved them to eat the same day; and in other cases, on that and the next day. These offerings represented Jesus Christ as purchasing for us everlasting peace and prosperity, to the honour of his Father, the joy of ministers, and the speedy comfort of saved men; Lev. iii; vii. 11—21, 28, 34; Deut. xviii. 3. (4) The MEAT-OFFERINGS, whether offered separately by themselves, or as appendages to burnt-offerings, peace-offerings, trespass-offerings, or to the kid and lamb sin-offerings, consisted of fine flour, frankincense, oil, and salt. Whether they were baked or fried, or not, a part thereof was burnt on the altar to the Lord, and the rest belonged to the priests. They represented Jesus Christ, the most excellent fruit of the earth, prepared by dolorous sufferings to be the everlasting joy of JEHOVAH, and delightful nourishment of his chosen people; Lev. ii. 6, 14—23; vii. 9, 10; Num. xv. 1—16; xviii. 9, 10. (5) The DRINK OFFERINGS of wine were scarcely ever used alone, but attended the meat-offerings. Part of the wine was poured out to the Lord on the altar, and the rest was given to the priests. They represented that fulness of consolation which flows from Jesus' offering of himself for us, and our feeding on him by faith; Ex. xxix. 40; Num. xv. 1—16; xxviii, xxix. (6) The HOLY ANOINTING OIL was formed by pounding together myrrh, cinnamon, cassia, calamus, and olive oil. By an unction of it the priests and holy utensils were consecrated to their sacred work; and on nothing else might it be put, or any ointment made like unto it, under pain of death. It represented the Holy Ghost in his manifold precious virtues, by whom Jesus Christ, his ministers, people, and ordinances, are consecrated to, and fitted for their respective uses; Ex. xxx. 22—33. (7) The SOUL RANSOM MONEY, of which every man, poor or rich, was to give half a shekel when the congregation was numbered, if not once every year, that there might be no plague among them, represented Jesus Christ as a ransom, equally given for both poor and rich, to prevent the infliction of God's wrath on his people; Ex. xxx. 11—16; xxxviii. 25, 26. (8) The FIRST-FRUITS of animals, vegetables, dough, wool, &c., which were partly assigned to the Lord, and partly to the priests, represented Jesus Christ as the great honourer of God, and the sanctifying head of his people; and represented his people as the glory and preservers of nations and churches; Ex. xiii. 12—16; xxii. 29, 30; Lev. xxii. 27; Num. xviii. 12—18; xv. 17—21. (9) To commemorate the Israelites' living in the wilderness on tenth deals of manna, their limited meat-offerings were all proportioned by tenth deals; Num. xv. 1—16. For the same reason the share, which the Lord demanded of their crop, was measured by TENTHS or TITHES. One tenth of their whole income from their fields, &c., was assigned to the Levites in general, who gave a TENTH part thereof to the priests. A second TENTH of their incomes was appointed to be spent in feasting the poor, &c., at the sacred festivals. At least every third year, ANOTHER TENTH, or perhaps the SECOND TENTH, was to be given to the Levites and the poor at their homes. These TITHES figured out Jesus Christ as the abundant provision of his people; and his people as the abundant means of his satisfaction and delight. They represented the duty of our devoting a considerable part of our incomes to the Lord, and of maintaining his faithful ministers in a decent manner; Num. xviii. 20—32; Deut. xiv. 22—29. (10) DEVOTED things or persons assigned to the Lord by voluntary vow, more or less solemn. Nothing belonging to the Lord by an antecedent claim, as first-fruits, tithes, &c., might be devoted. Nothing devoted might be redeemed back, without paying a fifth part more than the priest's estimation of its worth. And nothing devoted under a curse could be redeemed at all. These gifts represented Jesus Christ and his saints voluntarily, deliberately, and irrevocably devoted to the service of God; Lev. xxvii.

The WAVE and HEAVE-OFFERINGS were not different from what we have mentioned, but were either less sacred oblations, or but a part of the more sacred. Thus the right shoulder and breast, fat, kidneys, &c., of the priest's ram of consecration, with the loaf, the cake of oiled bread, and wafer of unleavened bread, which attended it; Ex. xxix. 22—26; Lev. viii. 25—29; the right shoulder and breast, and perhaps the fat, of all peace-offerings, with the leavened loaf of the thank-offering; Lev. vii. 30; x. 15: the lepers' trespass-offering with its attendant log of oil; Lev. xiv. 12, 24: the jealousy-offering; Num. v. 25: the sheaf or omer of ripe ears at the feast of unleavened bread; Lev. xxiii. 15: the two loaves at Pentecost, and their attendant peace-offering; Lev. xxiii. 19, 20: the first of the dough; Num. xv. 19, 21: the tithes; Num. xviii. 24—30: the Lord's tribute of the spoil of Midian; Num. xxxi. 29, 41; were heaved up towards heaven, or waved towards the four winds, in acknowledgment of their coming from God, and in token of devoting them to his service, who is the Most High, and everywhere present JEHOVAH.

More abundantly to represent Jesus Christ in his person, his righteousness, and the virtue of them, two or more of the simple sacrifices were often joined together. Thus, for the consecration of the Levites, for the purification of a defiled Nazarite, for the purification of a woman polluted by child-birth, for the purification of one cured of a running issue, and for a congregational sin of ignorance or bird-expiation, a burnt-offering and a sin-offering were connected; Lev. v. 7; xii. 6, 8; xv. 14, 30; Num. viii. 12; vi. 11; xv. 24. For the consecration of priests, a sin-offering, burnt-offering, and ram of consecration, i. e. a kind of peace-offering; Ex. xxix; Lev. viii, ix. For a Nazarite after finishing his vow, a sin-offering, burnt-offering, and peace-offering; Num. vi. 14. For the purification of a healed leper, a bird-offering, a burnt-offering, a sin-offering, and a trespass-offering, Lev. xiv. 6—20. For dedicating the Mosaic altar, burnt-offerings, sin-offerings, peace-offerings, twelve days repeated; Num. vii. For dedicating Solomon's temple, large burnt-offerings and peace-offerings; 1 Kin. viii. 63, 64. For dedicating Zerubbabel's temple, burnt-offerings, sin-offerings, and peace-offerings; Ezra vi. 16. At Pentecost, a burnt-offering, sin-offering, and peace-offering; Lev. xxiii. 15—21; Num. xxviii. 26—31. At the other monthly and annual festivals, a burnt-offering and sin-offering; Lev. xxiii; Num. xxviii, xxix.

VIII. TYPICAL OR SACRED SEASONS. (1) To be a constant mean of Israel's fellowship with God, and to represent Jesus Christ as predestinated before the foundation of the world, and in these last times offered for all the elect, to be the constant nourishment of their souls, and daily mean of their access to God and familiar intimacy with him—a lamb, bought with the public money, and charged with the guilt of all the tribes, by the laying on of the hands of the stationary men who represented them, was offered for the nation every morning about nine o'clock, while the incense was burnt on the golden altar, and the people prayed in the court; and another in the afternoon; with their respective meat-offerings and drink-offerings; Ex. xxix. 38—45; Lev. vi. 9, 12; Num. xxviii. 1—8, &c. (2) To prefigure the evangelical and celestial rest, and more abundant manifestation of Jesus Christ therein, not only was every SABBATH to be observed as a day of rest from all manner of work, and used in the exercises of devotion, but thereon the morning and evening sacrifices were doubled; Ex. xxxi. 12, 17; xxxv. 2, 3; Num. xv. 32, 35; xxviii. 9, 10. (3) To thank God for the merciful alterations of the moon, and changing of the seasons; to expiate the sins, and make grateful acknowledgment of the mercies of the finished month, and to supplicate the continuance of these favours, and to represent the renovation of all things to infinite advantage by Jesus' incarnation and mediation, and the happy and extensive discovery and virtue of himself and his work in the evangelical and eternal state; the DAY OF THE NEW-MOON'S APPEARANCE was celebrated by abstinence from the servile labours of ploughing, sowing, &c., and a large burnt-offering of two bullocks, one ram, and seven lambs; and a sin-offering of one kid was offered for the congregation; over which sacrifice the priests blew with the silver trumpets; Am. viii. 5; 2 Kin. iv. 22; Num. xxviii. 11—15; x. 10; Ps. lxxxi. 1, 2. (4.) To commemorate the Hebrews' deliverance from Egypt; to seal the covenant of grace with the genuine seed of Abraham; to prefigure our redemption through the slaughter of Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God, in the end of the world, by the rulers and people of Judah at this very season of the year; and to represent our safe and delightful feeding on him by faith and with godly sorrow; the PASSOVER was yearly observed on the 14th day of that month in which they came out of Egypt; which, for commemoration of that deliverance, was appointed to begin their sacred year, and answered nearly to our month of March. A male lamb or kid of a year old, was taken, sacrificed, or at least slain; its blood sprinkled on the door-posts and upper lintel, as a means of preservation from the angel who destroyed the first-born of the Egyptians; and the flesh of it being roasted, without breaking a bone thereof, was eaten that same night by about twelve or twenty in a company, with unleavened bread, bitter herbs, and pious conference. Such as could not observe it that very day did it on that same day in the following month; Ex. xii; Lev. xxiii. 5; Josh. v. 10; Deut. xvi. 1—7; Num. ix. 9—14; xxviii. 16; 2 Chr. xxx. 1—20; xxxv. 1—18. (5) To commemorate the Israelites' affliction and coarse fare in Egypt, and their sudden deliverance therefrom; to commemorate their seven days' travels before they got through the Red Sea; to prefigure the low and afflicted, but devout life of our Redeemer and of his saints on earth; and to prefigure the fate of his gospel church; the FEAST OF UNLEAVENED BREAD was observed on the seven days which followed the passover; on the first and last of which no servile work of ploughing, sowing, or the like, was transacted. No bread but unleavened was eaten upon any of the seven. On each of them two bullocks, one ram, and seven lambs, were offered for a burnt-offering, and a kid for a sin-offering for the congregation. The silver trumpets were blown over the burnt-offering, while it lay on the altar; Exod. xx. 17—20; xiii. 4—10; xxiii. 14—17; xxxiv. 18; Lev. xxiii. 6—8; Deut. xvi. 8; Num. xxviii. 17—25. To sanctify the approaching harvest, and prefigure the resurrection of Jesus Christ, our great sacrifice from the dead on that very day of the year, and the effectual spread of the gospel which followed it, a sheaf of barley was publicly reaped, thrashed, and winnowed: an omer of the meal or ears, being waved and heaved along with frankincense and oil, part of it was burnt on the altar along with a lamb for burnt-offering, and part of its double meat-offering; Lev. xxiii. 9—14. (6) To give thanks for their quiet possession of Canaan, and for the mercies of the finished harvest; to commemorate the publication of the law from mount Sinai; to prefigure the effusion of the Holy Ghost after our Saviour's ascension, and the amazing spread and influence of the gospel by means thereof, was the festival of PENTECOST observed; i. e. of the fiftieth day after the passover, about our Whitsuntide. No servile work was done thereon. Besides the ordinary festival sacrifice of two bullocks, two rams, and seven lambs, for a burnt-offering, and a kid for a sin-offering, another sacrifice was offered of one bullock, two rams, and seven lambs, for a burnt-offering, a kid for a sin-offering, and two lambs for a peace-offering, along with two leavened loaves, each containing a tenth deal of fine flour; as the first-fruits of their finished wheat harvest. In presenting this oblation, they made a solemn acknowledgment of the original meanness of their nation, and of God's gracious fulfilment of his promises to them; Ex. xxiii. 14—17; xxxiv. 22, 23; Lev. xxiii. 15—21; Num. xxviii. 26—31; Deut. xvi. 9—12; xxvi. 1—11. (7) To commemorate the creation of all things at this season; to thank God for the mercies of the finished civil year, and to obtain mercies for the year now commencing; to prepare the people for the great day of atonement; and especially to prefigure the joyful and efficacious spread of the gospel of our crucified Redeemer, was the FEAST OF TRUMPETS observed on the first day of the first civil, but seventh sacred month. No servile work was done thereon. To the new-moon offering above mentioned was added another sacrifice of one bullock, one ram, and seven lambs for a burnt-offering, and a kid for a sin-offering. The silver trumpets, or others of rams' horns, were blown over the burning sacrifices from morning till night; Num. xxix. 1—6; x. 10. (8) Perhaps to commemorate the fall of man on this day of the year, or to commemorate God's reconcilement to Israel after they had worshipped the golden calf, or contemned Canaan; but chiefly for expiating the sins of the preceding year, and to prefigure Jesus' debased and laborious course of obedience and suffering as the sole mean of atonement for a guilty world before God, the ANNUAL EXPIATION was observed on the 10th day of this month. No manner of work was to be done thereon more than on the Sabbath. All the Hebrews observed it in solemn fasting and affliction of their souls. After the daily sacrifice of a lamb, for a burnt-offering, and the festival sacrifice of one bullock, one ram, seven lambs, for a burnt-offering, and a kid for a sin-offering, were finished, the high priest, washed in water, and mostly dressed in his plain garments, performed the whole work of sacrificing peculiar to that day. For himself and his fellow-priests he offered a bullock for a sin-offering. Having carried some incense into the Holy of Holies, and kindled it before, perhaps on the west side of the ark, he carried in part of the bullock's blood, and sprinkled it amidst the smoke of the incense, once towards the top, and seven times towards the foreside of the ark. Of the two goats for a sin-offering for the whole nation, one chosen by lot was offered: part of its blood was carried into the most holy place, and sprinkled once towards the top, and seven times towards the front of the mercy-seat, to make atonement for the oracle and sanctuary, which was ceremonially polluted by the sins of the worshippers who attended at it. The rest of the blood of the goat, mingled with part of the blood of the bullock, was sprinkled towards both sides of the sanctuary. The horns of the golden, and I suppose also of the brazen altar, were tipt therewith seven times. The other goat, after being charged with the guilt of the nation, confessed to God over his head, was dismissed by a fit person into the wilderness. Two rams, one for the priests, and another for the people, were then offered for burnt-offerings; along with the fat of the bullock and goat of the sin-offerings; the flesh of which was burnt without the camp. The high priest then solemnly blessed the people; Num. xxix. 7—11; Lev. xxiii. 26—32; xvi. (9.) To commemorate the Israelites' safe dwelling in their tents for forty years in the Arabian wilderness; to show their thankfulness to God for their happy enjoyment of their fruitful country; to prefigure Jesus' tabernacling in our nature, and through his whole life solemnly offering up himself an infinitely valuable sacrifice to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of his people; to prefigure the state of the gospel church, the abundant manifestation and virtue of a crucified Redeemer therein, and the noted rest and joy of the apostolic and millennial periods; and to represent the believers' pilgrimage on earth, and at last happy entrance into heaven; was the FEAST OF TABERNACLES celebrated by all the Israelites, at the place where God's tabernacle or temple stood, on the 15th and seven following days of the seventh sacred and first civil month. The first and last days thereof were solemn convocations, on which no servile work was done: the people dwelt in booths formed of olive branches, &c.; and sin-offerings, and large, but constantly decreasing burnt-sacrifices, were offered on each of the days for the Israelitish nation; Lev. xxiii. 33—43; Deut. xvi. 13—15; xxxi. 10; Neh. viii. 13—18; Num. xxix. 12—38. The law was read with peculiar solemnity at the feast of tabernacles, &c.; and it was only at THIS FEAST, the PASSOVER or feast of unleavened bread, and PENTECOST, that all the males of Israel, capable of travelling, were obliged to attend; Ex. xxiii. 14—17; xxxiv. 22, 23; Deut. xvi. 16. (10.) For securing solemn instruction to the Hebrew nation; for relief of the poor, especially such as were in debt; and to mark Canaan the Lord's peculiar and rightful property; to manifest that not its fruitful soil, but God's providence was their security for a supply; and to prefigure our spiritual redemption, liberty, and rest, through Jesus Christ, particularly in the New Testament church and heavenly state; the SEVENTH YEAR, beginning with the seventh sacred month, when the fields were quite clear of their crop, was observed as a sabbath. The fields lay uncultivated; their spontaneous growth was common property, but chiefly belonged to the poor. And the debt which one Israelite owed to another was forborne if not remitted, Lev. xxv. 2—7; Deut. xv. 1—18; xxxi. 10. (11.) To keep the property of their respective shares of Canaan fixed in the Hebrew families, and to keep their genealogies clear till Christ should come; to prevent perpetual oppression, poverty, and bondage, or even undue hastening to be rich; but chiefly to prefigure our redemption by Jesus Christ in the evangelical and celestial state of the church; that year, which, beginning on the 10th day of the seventh sacred month, i. e. the fast of expiation, consisting partly of the 49th, and partly of the 50th year, was observed as a JUBILEE of rest. It was proclaimed by sound of trumpet through the whole country; perhaps most of the inhabitants joined in the solemn sound. The fields lay uncultivated. The spontaneous growth belonged chiefly to the poor. Every debt which one Israelite or proselyte of the covenant owed to another was absolutely and finally remitted. Slaves and prisoners were set free. Estates which had been sold reverted to their original proprietors; and hence the nearer to the approaching jubilee a sale took place, the price of lands was so much the lower; Lev. xxv. 8—55.

IX. TYPICAL PURIFICATIONS. If a Hebrew, under ceremonial uncleanness, ate of the sacred oblations; if he ate any blood, or any fat of sacrificeable animals; if he contemned the ordinance of circumcision, the passover, or water of separation; or if he were chargeable with murder, adultery, or any other presumptuous sin; no means of purification or of atonement were left him,—an awful hint to presumptuous contemners of Jesus Christ or his oracles and ordinances; that for them is reserved nothing but everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; Num. xv. 30, 31; 1 Sam. iii. 14. But (1) If a wife were suspected of adultery, the case was cleared by a solemn adjuration of her before God by the priest; a coarse-offering of barley-meal, to bring sin to remembrance; and a drinking of holy water, impregnated with dust of the sanctuary, and with ink which had marked the curse due to adultery. If she were guilty, this draught made her thighs to rot, and her belly to swell; if she were innocent, it rendered her healthy and fruitful,—an awful token of God's detestation of adultery, and every approach thereto, or ill-grounded suspicion thereof! and that, by the effect of Jesus' death and word, and of afflictive providences on their hearts, the hypocrisy or sincerity of professors is much tried in this life; and that dreadful shall be the trial and punishment of hypocrites at last; Num. v. (2) Not only was the general pollution of the Hebrew nation, and of the tabernacle, temple, and ordinances, which they had infected, annually purged by the GREAT EXPIATION already mentioned; but when murder was committed, and the murderer unknown, an unyoked heifer, brought by the nearest magistrates, was slain in a rough valley over running water. The magistrates, washing their hands over the slain heifer, solemnly protested their innocence of the crime, and their ignorance of the criminal; and the priests present supplicated forgiveness.—A figure this of our redemption through the death of Jesus Christ, the seed of the woman, in the rough valley of this world, and the influence of his pure and purifying Spirit, as connected therewith: Deut. xxi. (3.) In DEFILEMENT contracted from HOLY THINGS, the high priest, who offered the goat of the GREAT ANNUAL EXPIATION, and sprinkled its blood; he who led the scape-goat into the wilderness, or who burnt the flesh of sin-offerings for priests or the congregation; was purified by a simple washing in water; Lev. iv. 16, 24—28. The brazen pot, in which the flesh of other sin-offerings was boiled, was purified by washing and rinsing; but, if it were an earthen vessel, it could not be cleansed at all; Lev. vi. 28. The priest, who killed the red heifer; and he who casts the cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet wool, into the fire, with her flesh; he that burnt her flesh; he that carried her ashes and laid them up in a clean place; he who sprinkled the water of separation, or even touched it; had to wash himself or clothes, if not both, and remain unclean until the even; Num. xix. 7, 8, 10, 21, 22. (4.) In DEFILEMENT contracted from UNCLEAN ANIMALS, which are emblems of wicked persons, he who touched their carcass was unclean until the even; and he who bore their carcass, or ate thereof, had to wash his clothes, and remain unclean until the even; Lev. xi; Deut. xiv. (5.) While circumcision ceremonially purged the original defilement of the child, Gen. xvii. 9—14; Josh. v. 2—8; the DEFILEMENT contracted by the mother IN CHILD-BIRTH, after remaining therein for a time, and twice as long in the case of a female child as in that of a male, was removed by a burnt-offering and a sin-offering; Lev. xii. (6.) In purging the DEFILEMENT contracted by LEPROSY, which required so much circumspection in the priests judging of it, and which represented sinful corruption reigning or raging in persons, families, or nations, the leper was seven times sprinkled with a mixture of water and of the blood of the slain bird: he shaved off all the hair on his flesh, and washed his body and clothes; and, though admitted to the camp, was for seven days restrained from entering his own house: on the seventh day he again shaved off all the hair on his flesh, and washed his body and clothes; on the eighth day he offered a trespass-offering, a sin-offering, a burnt-offering, and a log of oil. The priest touched the extremities of the leper's body with part of the blood of the trespass-offering. After sprinkling part of the oil seven times towards the tabernacle, he, in like manner, touched the extremities of the body of the healed leper therewith, and poured another part of it on his head. Thus his purification not a little resembled the consecration of the high priest. The leprous house was purified by a sevenfold sprinkling of bird's blood mingled with running water; Lev. xiii, xiv. And, if a man had but a scab suspected for a leprosy, he had to wash his clothes; Lev. xiii. 6. (7.) In DEFILEMENT contracted from RUNNING ISSUES, which represented the scandalous eruptions of indwelling lusts, which are extremely infectious, the person, when healed, continued seven days in his purification; he washed his body and clothes in running water; and on the eighth offered two-turtle doves, or two young pigeons, the one for a sin-offering and the other for a burnt-offering. He who touched the flesh or the bed of the person who had the issue, or had sat on his seat, or been spit upon by him, had to wash his body and clothes, and remain unclean until the even He who but touched what had been under the unclean person, had to remain unclean until the even, if not also to bathe himself and wash his clothes. The vessel of earth, which had been touched by the unclean person, was to be broken, and that of wood to be rinsed in water; Lev. xv. (8.) To purge out the DEFILEMENT contracted from DEAD BODIES, which represented a heart dead in sin and a fallen covenant-head, a red unyoked heifer was to be slain without the camp, even for the next in dignity to the high priest. Her blood was seven times sprinkled towards the tabernacle. Her flesh, and the rest of her blood, and even her excrements, were burnt, together with cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet wool; and the ashes were laid up in a clean place without the camp. Of these ashes, mingled with running water, the water of purification was formed. He who touched a dead body, or any part of it, or a grave, remained seven days in his uncleanness. He was to be sprinkled with the water of purification on the third and seventh day, by a clean person with a bunch of hyssop: on the seventh day he had to wash himself and his clothes. The house or tent in which a person had died, and all the vessels in it, remained unclean seven days, and were purged by the sprinkled water of purification: and even he who touched anything which the unclean person had touched, was rendered unclean until the even; Num. xix. These PURIFICATIONS represented our spiritual cleansing from the sin of our holy exercises;—the sin of our fellowship with wicked men;—the sin of our original corruption, or natural actions;—the sin of our indwelling lusts, or infectious outbreakings, by the sacrifice, blood, and Spirit of Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God, and Seed of the woman, continually applied to our conscience, heart, and practice, while we live in this world.

CHAPTER IV.

A SHORT VIEW OF THE GEOGRAPHY AND HISTORY OF NATIONS; NECESSARY FOR THE RIGHT UNDERSTANDING OF THE HISTORICAL, AND ESPECIALLY THE PROPHETICAL PARTS OF SCRIPTURE; THE CORRESPONDENT TEXTS OF WHICH ARE, ALL ALONG, GENERALLY QUOTED, AND OUGHT TO BE CAREFULLY COMPARED.

CHALDEA and CANAAN are the countries on earth, the situations of which claim our particular regard; and to these the respective bearings of other countries has somewhat peculiarly important. CHALDEA was situated mostly to the westward of the river Euphrates, between the 31st and 35th degree of north latitude, and in the 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th, and 49th of east longitude from London. It had Northern Arabia on the west, Persia on the east, Assyria on the north-east, and Mesopotamia on the north-west. Through these territories ran south-eastward into the Persian gulf, the famed rivers of Euphrates and Hiddekel, or Tigris. Here, about the 32d degree of north latitude, God created man and planted the garden of Eden, upon the banks of the united stream of the rivers just mentioned; and which, a little below, was divided into the two rivers of Pison on the west, and Gihon on the east; Gen. ii. 8—14; 2 Kin. xix. 12, 13; Eze. xxvii. 21. The spot was not only extremely delightful in itself, but adapted for the spread of mankind from thence into the rest of the world. From the wood of which Noah built his ark, one is tempted to think that it was formed in this country. Not long after the flood, we find the bulk of mankind in the plain of Shinar, and building the tower of Babylon; which could scarcely be 150 miles to the north-westward of Eden; Gen. xi 1—9. Here Nimrod erected the first kingdom that we know of on earth. Not long after, Ashur, a descendant of Shem, erected another at Nineveh, about 150 miles to the north-east, on the river Hiddekel; Gen. x. 9—12.

From Babel, the posterity of Noah gradually dispersed themselves into the different quarters of the world. The descendants of JAPHETH, who became by far the most numerous, removed northward, and peopled the northern half of Asia. Thence the descendants of Javan and Gomer, moved to the north-west, and peopled Europe. No doubt the descendants of Magog, or others, moved from Eastern Tartary into America, and peopled a great part of that country. The posterity of SHEM peopled the southern part of Asia, Assyria, Mesopotamia, Syria, Arabia, Chaldea, Persia, Judea, and perhaps, China. But in latter times, by the invasions of the Greeks, Romans, Tartars, and Turks, and by the European settlements in the East Indies, most of what once pertained to the descendants of SHEM is now subjected to those of Japheth. Of the posterity of HAM, the Canaanites took up their dwelling in that pleasant country which has been since called by their name, and which God had marked out for the residence of his peculiar people. It lies in the 32d, 33d, and 34th degrees of north latitude, and the 36th and 37th of east longitude, from London, about four hundred miles westward of Babylon. It has Arabia on the east and south; Egypt on the south-west; the Mediterranean sea on the west; Mount Lebanon and Syria on the north; and shall, hereafter, be more particularly described. The rest of Ham's offspring, after part of them had continued for some generations in Asia, removed south-westward to Africa, and peopled it. No doubt some of them from thence, by means of tempests, or otherwise, crossed the ocean into South America, and the islands adjacent. Distinguished estrangement from the knowledge of the true God, miserable bondage to Satan and to their fellows of mankind, have in every age been the general characteristics of the descendants of Ham, particularly of those by Canaan. Never, that we know of, did they form themselves into any extensive and lasting empire. Never, except for a short time, and in a very restricted extent, have they been able to rule over the descendants of Shem or Japheth; Gen. x; ix. 25—57. But a more particular account of these descendants of Noah, mentioned in Scripture, is necessary.

1. Not long after God had frustrated the attempt of mankind at Babel, and confounded their language, the CANAANITES, descended from Ham's youngest son, in seven principal nations of Amorites, Hittites, Jebusites, Girgashites, Perizzites, Hivites, &c., took possession of CANAAN, and formed themselves into almost as many kingdoms as they had cities: Gen. x. 15—19; xii. 6; xiii. 7: xv. 2, 5—7, 19—21; Exod. iii. 8; xxiii. 23; Josh. xii; Judg. i. 7. Notwithstanding all that Melchizedek, one of their kings, could do to reform them, they quickly became monsters in wickedness; and God punished them with terrible ravage and reduction by Chedorlaomer, king of Elam; Gen. xiii. 13; and chap. xiv. About sixteen years after, A. M. 2107, their kingdoms of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboiim, were, for their unnatural lewdness, consumed with fire and brimstone from heaven, and the country turned into a dead and poisonous lake, into which the river Jordan hath since run without any visible outlet; Gen. xviii, xix; Job xviii. 11—21; Is. i. 9, 10; xiii. 19; Ezek. xvi. 49, 50; Amos iv. 11; Zeph. ii. 9; 2 Pet. ii. 6; Jude 7. The rest of the Canaanites were reprieved about 440 years longer, till God had prepared the Hebrew nation to take possession of their country; Gen. xv. 16. And for some time before the Hebrews invaded Canaan, God had weakened the natives, by pestilence, swarms of insects, civil wars and the like; Exod. xxiii. 28; Num. xiii. 32; Deut. vii. 20; Josh. xxiv. 12; Judg. i. 7. Within about seven years, Moses conquered two powerful kingdoms on the east, and Joshua thirty-one lesser kingdoms on the west of Jordan; and gave their land to the Israelites; Gen. xv. 8—21; Exod. iii. 8; xxiii. 23; xxxiv. 11; Num. xxi. 21—35; xxxii, xxxiv; Deut. ii. 26—37; iii. 1—20; Josh. vi—xxi. Such Canaanites as were left in the land (many of them being made tributaries), having seduced the Israelites into a compliance with their idolatries, retained or recovered a considerable part of the strongest places of the country. They even formed themselves into a mighty kingdom in Western Galilee, which, governed by Jabin, did for twenty years terribly oppress the Israelites. But their army was defeated, and, it is probable their empire unhinged, by Barak; Deut. vii; Num. xxxiii. 55, 56; Josh. xxiii. 11—16; Judg. i—iv; Ezra ix. 11, 12; Ps. cvi. 34—40. Such as still remained, we may suppose assisted the Midianites, and especially the Philistines, to oppress the Israelites; Judg. vi, x, xiii; 1 Sam. iv, xiii, xxxi. But king David and Solomon reduced them all as slaves to their people. The latter employed 153,000 of them in the most servile parts of his work, in building his temple, palace, &c.; Gen. ix. 25, 26; 2 Sam. v. 6—9; 1 Kin. v. 15, 16; ix. 20, 21; 1 Chr. xi. 4—8; 2 Chr. ii. 17, 18; viii. 7, 8. While part of the Canaanites continued among the Israelites till after their captivity, tempting them to idolatry, others joined their Gibeonite brethren, dedicating themselves to the servile work of God's temple, under the name of Nethinims; 1 Chr. ix. 2; Ezra ix, x; ii. 55, 58; Neh. ii. 3; xiii.

Such Canaanites as had formed themselves into the kingdoms of Zidon and Tyre, on the north-west of Canaan, not only escaped the sword of the Jewish conquerors, but, for many ages, carried on a most flourishing trade, especially by sea. Scarcely was there a coast or isle, adapted to trade, in the Mediterranean, to which they did not send forth their colonies. No doubt, multitudes, who fled from the sword of Joshua, Barak, or David, took refuge among them, while others retired to Greece, north of Africa, &c., and there formed themselves into powerful states. The Tyrians entered into a brotherly covenant of friendship with the Israelites under David and Solomon; 2 Sam. v; 1 Kings v, ix. Amos i. 9. But this they grossly violated in joining the grand alliance against Jehoshaphat; Ps. lxxxiii. 7; and delivering up Jewish refugees to the Edomites in the days of Jehoram and Ahaz, or in selling them to the Grecians for slaves; Joel iii. 4—6; Amos i. 9; To punish this, and their other abounding impieties, Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, about A.M. 3282, ravaged their country, took multitudes prisoners, and sold them to the Arabs for slaves; Is. xxiii; Joel iii. 4—8; Amos i. 9, 10. But the Tyrians having defeated his fleet; obliged his troops who had besieged their capital for five years, to retire. They then pushed their traffic with more assiduity and vigour than ever. There was scarcely a nation in the west of Asia, north of Africa, or south of Europe with which they had not some trading. The whole strength of Phenicia was employed in their fleets and armies; Isa. xxiii. 17; Ezek. xxvii. Provoked with their attempts to assist Zedekiah, king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, after he had sacked Jerusalem, A.M. 3416, marched his troops into Phenicia; and, marking his motions with terrible ravage and bloodshed, multitudes were slain, or taken prisoners and sold for slaves. The merchants fled away to Cilicia, Spain, Carthage, &c. By fire and sword he rendered their once glorious country almost utterly desolate. Ethbaal, their haughty monarch, was ignominiously slain. And after a siege of thirteen years, Tyre was taken, A.M. 3432; but the inhabitants had removed themselves and their valuable effects to a neighbouring island about seventy paces from the shore. Disappointed of the rich booty which they expected as the reward of their inexpressible fatigues, the Chaldeans raged like infernal spirits; abusing and murdering the few weak or sickly Tyrians whom they could find; burning the city, and hurling the ashes thereof into the sea. That Nebuchadnezzar in his fury pursued the fugitive Tyrians into the north of Africa, the Mediterranean isles, or south-west of Spain, as some writers pretend, is scarcely probable. It is more likely that those in the island pacified his rage by a partial submission. But to the inexpressible grief and vexation of not only the Phenicians themselves, but of the merchants who traded with them, much of the Tyrian wealth was lost in the sea, or otherwise destroyed; and never, while the Chaldean monarchy continued, did they recover their power or traffic; Is. xxxiii; Jer. xxv. 9, 22; xxvii. 3—8; lxvii. 4; Ezek. xxvi—xxviii; Joel iii. 4—8; Amos i. 9, 10.

But, just seventy years after the Chaldeans had destroyed their city on the continent, instead of which they had built one upon the island, we find the Tyrians assisting Darius Hystaspes, king of Persia, against the Ionian rebels of Lesser Asia, A.M. 3502. They also aided Xerxes, his son, in his mad invasion of Greece. Having fortified their new city, and recovered their enriching trade, they and their fellow Phenicians, in conjunction with the Egyptians, attempted to free themselves from the Persian yoke. About A.M. 3653, Artaxerxes Ochus ravaged their country in his inhuman manner. The Zidonians, finding themselves betrayed in the siege by Tennes their king, and Mentor his Grecian general, set fire to their city and perished in the flames, to the number of 40,000. The rest of the Phenicians submitted, and had their slavery increased. Much about the same time the slaves murdered almost all their masters at Tyre. Highly provoked with their refusing to admit him into their city, that he might sacrifice to their principal idol, Alexander the Great, about A.M. 3672, laid siege to Tyre; and, with infinite labour and expense, took it by storm, after a siege of seven months. About 15,000 of the inhabitants had fled off in the Zidonian ships; and many of their wives and children had been transported to Carthage when the siege began. Of the men who remained, Alexander put 8000 to the sword, crucified 2000 of the principal, and sold 30,000 to the Jews, Arabs, and others, for slaves; Gen. ix. 25, 27; Ps. lxxxiii. 7—18; Is. xxiii; Jer. xlvii. 4; Ezek. xxvi—xxviii; Joel iii. 4—8; Amos i. 9, 10; Zech. ix. 1—4.

When Alexander's fury was abated, he repeopled Tyre from the continent of Phenicia. But Antigonus, one of his captains who succeeded him, soon after reduced it to the brink of ruin, having taken it by a siege of nineteen months. The Alexandrians in Egypt having drawn to themselves the trade of the nations around, the Phenicians could never recover their influence: they were also often embroiled in the contests between the Syro-Grecian and Egypto-Grecian successors of Alexander the Great. To punish their frequent riots, and their siding with Cassius his enemy, Augustus, the Roman emperor, a little before our Saviour's birth, deprived the Tyrians and Zidonians of their municipal freedom. About A.D. 194, Niger, the Roman usurper, burned Tyre into a heap of ruins, and murdered most of its inhabitants. From A.D. 633, to about 1180, Phenicia was enslaved by the Saracens and Seljukian Turks. It had been subjected about 160 years to the inhuman popish crusades, when Alphix, the sultan of Egypt, took it, and utterly destroyed Tyre and Zidon and the other places of strength, that they might never more afford shelter to the Europeans; since which, Tyre has been generally a heap of ruins, inhabited only by a few pitiful fishermen; Is. xxiii; Joel iii. 4—8; Amos i. 9, 10; Jer. xlvii. 4, 7; Zech. ix. 1—4; Ezek. xxvi—xxviii. The Canaanites, who, in their flight from Joshua, David, Nebuchadnezzar, &c., had retired to the north of Africa, formed there several sovereignties; but that of Carthage was the most noted. After terrible contentions among themselves, or with the Greeks in Sicily, and Romans in Sicily, Spain, Italy, and Africa, they were all, about 3858, reduced by the Romans to the basest servitude. For about 1900 years past, their country, by the tyranny of the Romans, Vandals, Saracens, and Turks, has been an almost constant scene of misery and bondage. Such Phenicians as retired to Europe, and there for a time subsisted under the names of Bœotians, Pelasgi, Etruscans, &c., were quickly reduced to misery and bondage by the Greek and Roman descendants of Japheth. Thus Noah's curse of servitude followed these Canaanites whithersoever they fled to escape it; Gen. ix. 25—27.

II. The PHILISTINES were a part of the posterity of Mizraim, the second son of Ham; Gen. x. 14; 1 Chr. i. 11, 12. Leaving Caphtor, on the north-east parts of Egypt, they very early settled in a small strip of territory along the sea shore, in the south-west of Canaan, having driven out the Avites, who before possessed it; Deut. ii. 23; Jer. xlvii. 4; Amos ix. 7. In the days of Abraham, Isaac, and Ephraim, they had begun to discover their malicious spite against the Hebrews; Gen. xx, xxi, xxvi; 1 Chr. vii. 21. Notwithstanding Joshua's allotment of their territory to the tribe of Judah, they long retained their fortified cities of Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gath. Nor did they ever lose an opportunity of doing the Israelites mischief. Neither covenants of friendship with the patriarchs, nor the rebuffs they met with from Shamgar, Samson, the ark, Samuel, Jonathan, Saul, or David, could long restrain their implacable resentment; Judg. iii. 31; xiii—xvi; 1 Sam. iv—vii, xiii, xiv, xvii, xviii, xxxi; 2 Sam. v; 1 Chr. xiv. 8—17. At last David reduced their country; 2 Sam. viii. 1; 1 Chr. xviii. 1. But towards the end of his reign they attempted to revolt; 2 Sam. xxi. 13—22; 1 Chr. xx. 4—8. Not long after the division of the Hebrew monarchy, they renewed the war with the ten tribes; 1 Kings xv. 27; xvi. 15. To their own hurt, they joined in the grand alliance against Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, about A.M. 3112; 2 Chr. xx; Ps. lxxxiii. 7—18. Under Jehoram his son, they ravaged the kingdom of Judah, and sold multitudes of Jews to the Edomites or Greeks; 2 Chr. xxi. 16, 17; Joel i. 6; Amos iii. 6. Notwithstanding Uzziah, king of Judah, had reduced part of their country, they, in the days of Ahaz his unhappy grandson, again took arms, and seized upon part of Judea; 2 Chr. xxvi. 6; xxviii. 18; Isa. ix. 21. About 20 years after, Hezekiah reduced their whole country to the brink of ruin; 2 Kings xviii. 8; Is. xiv. 29—31. Not long after, they were attacked by the Assyrians; Isa. xx. 1. To expel the Assyrian troops, Psammiticus, king of Egypt, reduced Ashdod by a siege of 29 years. They nevertheless spitefully harassed the Jews when distressed by the Chaldeans. Pharaoh-hophra, in his march to assist Zedekiah, king of Judah, A.M. 3415, smote Gaza their capital. In his march from Tyre to Egypt, A.M. 3432, Nebuchadnezzar, provoked with their attempts to assist the Tyrians, desolated their country, burnt their cities, and murdered the inhabitants. Under the Persian government they recovered a little; but abandoned themselves to pride, idolatry, and bloodshed. Having destroyed Tyre, Alexander the Great,

A.M. 3672, marched against the Philistines, whose cities were then garrisoned by Persian troops, took Gaza by storm, demolished its walls, and murdered its inhabitants, or sold them for slaves, and placed Macedonian garrisons in all their fenced cities. About A.M. 3841, Judas Maccabeus, the Jewish deliverer, subdued the whole country of the Philistines. About sixty-five years afterward, Jannæus, his brother's grandson, burnt Gaza into a desert, and incorporated the remnant of the Philistines with such Jews as he placed in their country, Ps. lxxxiii. 7—17; Isa. xiv. 29—31; xi. 14; Jer. xlvii; Ezek. xxv. 15—17; Amos i. 6—8; Zech. i. 21; ix. 5—7.

III. The EGYPTIANS descended from Ham, by his son MIZRAIM; Gen. x. 6, 13. Their country was about 600 miles in length from north to south; and lay on the north-east of Africa, on the west of the Red Sea, and south-west of Canaan. The river Nile, which runs from south to north, by its annual overflowing rendered the country exceedingly fertile; and at last, dividing itself into several streams, ran into the Mediterranean Sea. Their principal cities were No, Zoan, On, Migdol, Pithom, Rameses, Noph or Memphis, Tahpanhes; and it is said about 20,000 others; Gen. xli. 45; Exod. i. 11; xiv. 2; Num. xiii. 22; Is. xix. 13; Jer. xliv. 1; xlvi. 14, 25; Ezek. xxx. 13—18; Nah. iii. 8. It seems that sometimes the southern part of the country was called PATHROS, and the lower part of it EGYPT; Is. xi. 11; Jer. xliv. 1. Not long after the dispersion from Babel, Mizraim and his family founded their kingdom here; Gen. xi, xii. Their monarchy continued above 1600 years; and their kings were generally surnamed PHARAOH. A terrible famine of seven years, beginning A.M. 2290, had ruined their nation, had not Joseph the Hebrew, by his prudence, saved them alive. By his sale of the corn which he had laid up, he made their fields, their cattle, and persons, the property of their king; Gen. xl—xlvii. Their cruel oppression of the Israelites, when sojourning among them, drew upon them TEN fearful plagues; and at last all their first-born were slain in one night, and their army drowned in the Red sea, A.M. 2513; Exod. i—xiv.

Perhaps provoked with the contempt which Solomon had discovered for their princess, his queen, in collecting his seraglio of women, the Egyptians became his enemies, and protected his opponents. Shishak, who it seems first united Egypt under one king, and extended his empire far and wide into Africa and Asia, A.M. 3034, ravaged Judea; 1 Kings xi; xiv. 23—28; 2 Chr. xii. 1—9. In his absence his brother rebelled; and after his death his large empire fell into pieces; and Egypt itself bent under the power of the Ethiopians. Provoked with their attempts to assist the Hebrews of Israel and Judah, the Assyrians (I suppose under Sennacherib) for about three years terribly ravaged their country. About A.M. 3330, a civil war broke out among the twelve princes, whom it seems the Assyrian king had constituted his deputies in the land. After it had raged about fifteen years, Psammiticus subdued his eleven competitors. But, notwithstanding all his efforts to restore the power and felicity of the nation, his wars with the Assyrians in Palestine, and his provoking 200,000 of his troops to retire into Ethiopia, greatly weakened it; Isa. xix. 1—17; xx; and perhaps xviii; Nah. iii. 8—10. About A.M. 3390, Pharaoh-nechoh, his son, attempted to extend his power on the ruins of the now falling Assyrian empire; and took Carchemish, a city upon the Euphrates; and rendered the Jewish nation his tributaries. Nebuchadnezzar, the Chaldean, soon after, A.M. 3396, gave his troops a terrible defeat; took Carchemish, and pursued the Egyptians to the frontiers of their country; 2 Kings xxiii. 29—35; xxiv. 1—7; 2 Chr. xxxv. 20—24; xxxvi. 3—6; Is. xix. 1—7; Jer. xlvii. 1; xlvi. 1—12. Puffed up with the felicity which he and his kingdom had enjoyed in the beginning of his reign, Pharaoh-hophra and his subjects abandoned themselves to pride, idolatry, carnal security, and other impieties. Terrible miseries ensued. Provoked with the unhappy issue of his expedition against the Cyrenians, many of his own subjects took arms against him. Making Amasis, his general, their king, they routed his hired troops, and took himself prisoner. They even obliged Amasis to deliver him into their hands, and ignominiously strangled him. Meanwhile Nebuchadnezzar, to revenge the Egyptians' attempts to assist the Jews or Tyrians against him, invaded their country, A.M. 3432; routed their armies; murdered the inhabitants, or by terror drove them out of the land; seized on their wealth; burnt their cities; and carried off their idols. For about forty years, the once populous country of Egypt continued almost utterly desolate; Jer xliv. 29, 30; xliii. 8—13; xxv. 9, 19; xlvi. 13—26; Ezek. xvii, xxix—xxxii; Is. xix. 1—17.

The Chaldean empire being ruined A.M. 3466, the Egyptians under Amasis attempted to recover their freedom. But Cyrus of Persia, marching his troops into their country, obliged them to acknowledge his authority. After his death Amasis quickly revolted from the Persian yoke. But Cambyses, A.M. 3478, marched against them; and placing before his troops, cats, dogs, and other animals which the Egyptians adored, he easily stormed Pelusium, their principal frontier on the north-east. He cruelly ravaged the country; murdered the inhabitants; killed their deified animals; abused and slew their priests; demolished their temples; and transported about 3000 of their idols to Persia. About A.M. 3517, the Egyptians again revolted from under the Persian yoke. Darius Hystaspes prepared to reduce them. After his death, Xerxes his son ravaged their country and rendered their bondage more grievous. Instigated by Inarus, king of Lybia, whom they had acknowledged their sovereign, they again revolted about A.M. 3540. In a bloody war of six years, Artaxerxes Longimanus reduced the most of them. About 3590, Amyrtæus, who had for some time reigned in the fen country, furiously attacked the Persian garrisons, and drove them quite out of Egypt. After the Egyptians had struggled with the Persians for their liberty about sixty years, a furious intestine war, between Nectanebus and a Mendesian prince, exhausted their strength. Taking this opportunity, Artaxerxes Ochus and his Persian troops, about 3650, ravaged their country with inexpressible barbarity; murdered the inhabitants; demolished their temples; and returned home laden with booty. In A.M. 3672, Alexander the Great marched his Grecian troops into Egypt. Wearied of the Persian yoke, the Egyptians readily submitted to him as their powerful deliverer. For about 323 years after this they were governed by the Grecian Ptolemies, under four or five of whom their country bade fair to recover its ancient splendour. About A.M. 3995, the Romans reduced it into one of their provinces, and retained it under their yoke about 650 years. In A.D. 640, the Saracens conquered it, and established in it their Mahometan delusion, which has ever since been the authorized religion. About A.D. 709, the Moslem caliph of Cyrene wrested it from the caliph of Bagdad. He and his posterity governed it 200 years. About A.D. 1171, Saladin the Curd craftily seized it for himself; and he and his descendants governed it about 80 years. For the next 275 years it was ruled by Mameluke slaves; 24 of them Turks, and 23 Circassians. Since 1525 it has been oppressed by the Ottoman Turks. All the principal families being transported to Constantinople, a Turkish Pacha, with 24 subordinate Beys, all originally slaves, govern it, under the grand Seignior. Thus for more than 2000 years backward, Egypt has never been governed by a proper native of the country; nor has any nation under heaven been so remarkably governed by the basest of slaves. Meanwhile, a mad propensity to the most stupid idolatry or superstition, brutish ignorance, sloth, cowardice, dishonesty, deceit, cruelty, murderous malice, and inclination to sodomy, have formed the great lines of their national character; Is. xix. 1—17; xx; and perhaps xviii; xxvii. 1; xxx. 1—6; xxxi. 1—3; xliii. 3; Jer. xxv. 9, 18, 19; Jer. xlvi. 13—26; Ezek. xxix; xxxii; Dan. xi. 5—25, 42, 43; Joel iii. 19; Zech. x. 11; xiv. 18.

IV. The CUSHITES or ETHIOPIANS descended from Ham's eldest son. For many ages part of them resided on the south-east of Babylon and west of Persia. That country is still called Susiana, or Chusistan, i. e. the country of Cush; Gen. x. 6, 7; ii. 13. The CUSHITES, whom the king of Assyria transported to Canaan, were no doubt the remains of them in that place; 2 Kings xvii. 24, 30; Ezra iv. 9, 10. Part of these Cushites, after long continuance about Babylon (Gen. x. 8—10); moved westward into Arabia, and for a time dwelt about the eastern gulf of the Red Sea; Hab. iii. 7; Num. xii. 1. From thence, part of them gradually emigrated into Abyssinia, southward of Egypt; Esth. i. 1; viii. 9; Jer. xiii. 23. During the civil war which happened in Egypt, after the death of Shishak, about A.M. 3050, Zerah the Ethiopian (2 Chr. xiv. 9—13) seems to have seized on that kingdom. About A.M. 3278, Sabacon, another Ethiopian, reduced Egypt a second time, and entered into a confederacy with Hoshea, king of Israel, against the Assyrians: 2 Kings xvii. 4. Tirhakah, who marched to the assistance of Hezekiah, king of Judah, was probably the same as Sethon his successor. When Shalmaneser, Sennacherib, or Esarhaddon his son, for three years ravaged the land of Egypt, part of Ethiopia shared the same fate; Isa. xviii, xx; xliii. 3. Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean, and Cyrus, and Cambyses, kings of Persia, in their turns, ravaged the northern parts of Ethiopia. Since that period the Romans, Saracens, and Turks, who have been successively governors of Egypt, have frequently harassed the northern Ethiopians. And sometimes the savage Galles and Giagas, from the south, have almost desolated their country. Ever since the conversion of the eunuch, A.D. 35 (Acts viii. 26—39), Christianity has been known, and for about 1400 years has had a civil establishment in African Ethiopia, but is much disgraced by ignorance and superstition. Neither the repeated attempts of the Saracen or Turkish Mahometans, nor of the European papists, have ever been able to establish in it their respective delusions; Ps. lxviii. 31; lxxxvii. 4; Is. xviii, xx; xlv. 14; lxiii. 6; xlix. 12; lxiii. 3; Ezek. xxx. 4, 5; Dan. xi. 43; Zeph. ii. 12. Part of the Ethiopians will assist Gog and Magog against the converted Jews in the beginning of the millennium; Ezek. xxxviii. 5.

V. The AMALEKITES appear to have sprung from Ham, and to have existed as a nation long before Esau or AMALEK his grandson were born, and to have been one of the most ancient and powerful: they had their residence on the south and south-west of Canaan, almost all along from the western gulf of the Red Sea, to the bank of the Euphrates; Gen. xiv. 7; Num. xxiv. 7, 20; 1 Sam. xv. 7; xxvii. 8; 1 Chr. iv. 39, 40. No token of their connexion with the Edomites appears in history. But, being allied with the Egyptians, or covetous of booty, they attacked the Israelites in their march from Egypt to Sinai. To punish their behaviour, God not only enabled Joshua to defeat them on that occasion, but appointed the Hebrews to exterminate them from the earth: Exod. xvii. 8—16; Deut. xxv. 17—19. Next year they assisted the Canaanites against the presumptuous Israelites; Num. xiv. 45. About A.M. 2639, they assisted the Moabites, and about 2797, the Midianites, against Israel; on both which occasions they shared the miserable fate of their allies; Judg. iii. 13; vi. 6. They continuing in their impiety and hatred of Israel, God, about A.M. 2942, appointed Saul to destroy them utterly, which in part he effected. Not long after, David cut off a part of what remained. Their alliance against Jehoshaphat, about A.M. 3112, issued to their hurt. About A.M. 3290, the Simeonites cut off many more. By his projecting the utter destruction of the Jewish nation, Haman, the Amalekite, drew complete ruin upon himself and his friends. Since which no remains of the nation are to be found in the histories of mankind; Exod. xvii. 14, 16; Num. xxiv. 20—22; Deut. xxv. 17—19; 1 Sam. xiv. 48; xv. 1—8; xxvii. 8, 9; xxx. 1, 20; 2 Sam. viii. 12; 1 Chr. iv. 39—43; Ps. lxxxiii. 7—17; Esther iii. vii—ix.

VI. The EDOMITES sprang from Abraham by Esau his grandson. Partly by intermarriages, and partly by conquests, they seized on the country southward of Judea, which had been formerly possessed by the HORITE descendants of Ham. It included the mountains of Seir and Hor, and the provinces of Uz, Dedan, Teman, &c. Their principal cities were Bozrah, Selah, &c. It was of old moderately watered and fertile; Gen. xxv. 25, 30; xxvii. 39, 40; xxxvi. 32—39; xxxii. 3; Deut. ii. 12; Num. xx. 23; xxxiii. 37; xxxiv. 3; Is. xxi. 11; xxxiv. 5, 6; Jer. xlix. 7, 8, 22; La. iv. 21; Eze. xxv. 12, 13. Like Esau their ancestor, the Edomites were generally given to hunting and war. While the Israelites groaned under their Egyptian taskmasters, the Edomites had become a powerful nation under their kings and dukes. But, being excluded from the peculiar privileges of Abraham's seed, they mingled themselves with the heathen; and learning their ways, abandoned themselves to the slavery of their own sinful lusts; Gen. xxxvi. 10—43; xxvii. 40; xxv. 23; Exod. xv. 15, 16; 1 Chr. i. 35—54. Notwithstanding repeated entreaties, they denied the Israelites a passage through their country into Canaan; but it seems they afterwards behaved in a more benevolent manner; Num. xx. 14—21; Deut. ii. 28, 29; xxiii. 7. For about 400 years after, the Edomites seem to have applied themselves much to trade. Elath and Ezion-geber on the Red Sea were their principal ports. Saul harassed them; 1 Sam. xiv. 47; David rendered them tributaries to the Israelites; Gen. xxv. 23; xxvii. 29, 37, 40; 2 Sa. viii. 14; 1 Kings. xi. 15, 16; Ps. lx, cviii. Notwithstanding Hadad's attempt to revolt, they continued 150 years subject to Judah, and were governed by a deputy; Gen. xxv. 23; xxvii. 29, 37, 40; 1 Kings xi. 15—22; xxii. 47; 2 Kings iii. 7. About A.M. 3112, they entered into a combination with the neighbouring nations to extirpate the Israelites, but almost perished in the attempt; 2 Chr. xx; Ps. lxxxiii. Not long after, they revolted from Jehoram, king of Judah; and with no small bloodshed rendered themselves independent; Gen. xxvii. 40; 2 Chr. xxi. 8—10. To revenge some insult, perhaps, of their buying the Jews for slaves from the Tyrians and Philistines, Amaziah invaded their country, and inhumanly murdered many thousands of them, and took Selah their capital. Uzziah his son further ravaged their country, and took Elath their principal sea-port on the Red Sea; 2 Kings xiv. 7; 2 Chr. xxv. 11, 12; xxvi. 2; Amos i. 6, 9. About A.M. 3264, they ravaged the south parts of Judea, and murdered and took prisoners a great many of the inhabitants; 2 Chr. xxviii. 17. But God quickly resented the injuries done to his people. The Assyrians in a terrible manner ravaged the country of Edom, and destroyed Bozrah their new capital. When the Chaldeans, about 3416, burnt Jerusalem and murdered and took captive most of the Jewish nation, the Edomites assisted them, and instigated their utmost severity. But in the righteous judgment of God, the same Chaldeans, about five years after, rendered the country of Edom a desolate wilderness. Ever since it has been plagued with barrenness and drought, and has swarmed with serpents. When the Chaldean monarchy was unhinged, in A.M. 3466, the Edomites recollected themselves. Part of them incorporated with the Ishmaelites on the south, and part of them seized upon the south parts of Judea; these Darius Hystaspes ordered them to evacuate, but with what success we know not. About A.M. 3841, Judas Maccabeus, the Jewish hero, offended with the Edomites for assisting the Syro-Grecians against his nation, ravaged their country, slew 40,000 of them, and dismantled Hebron their capital. About thirty-five years after, Hircanus his nephew reduced the Edomites, and obliged them to incorporate with the Jews, and profess their religion. But just before the sacking of Jerusalem by Titus, a body of Edomites deserted the Jews, and got off laden with booty. Ever since, the Edomitish nation has been consigned to oblivion: Num. xxiv; Ps. cxxxvii. 7; Is. xxi. 11; xxxiv; xi. 14; Jer. xxv. 9, 21; xxvii. 3, 6, 7; xlix. 7—22; Lam. iv. 21, 22; Ezek. xxv. 12—14; xxxii. 29; xxxv, xxxvi. 2; Joel iii. 19; Amos i. 11, 12; Ob. xxi; Mal. i. 4.

VII. The MIDIANITES were the offspring of Abraham by Keturah. Most of them dwelt on the south-east of the Dead Sea, eastward of the Edomites. But part of them, perhaps to shun the idolatrous infection of the rest, took up their residence near the north-east point of the Red Sea; among these, Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, was a prince or priest; Gen. xxv. 2—6; xxxvii. 28; Exod. ii, iii, xviii. About A.M. 2552, the Northern Midianites were subjected to or allied with the Moabites. Their women were peculiarly instrumental in seducing the Israelites to whoredom and idolatry. This their wickedness God punished with the almost utter destruction of their nation; Num. xxii. 4, 7; xxv, xxxi; Jos. xiii. 21. About A.M. 2797, the Midianites rendered the Israelites their tributaries, and for seven years greatly oppressed them. But Gideon, by a handful of troops, reduced them to the brink of ruin. It is probable that their small remains incorporated with the Moabites or Ishmaelites; Judg. vi—viii. The posterity of Jethro lived among the Jews under the name of KENITES and RECHABITES, till the Assyrians and Chaldeans carried them away captive; Exod. ii. 21; xviii. 1, 2; Num. x. 29—32; xxiv. 21, 22; Judg. iv. 11; 1 Chr. ii. 55; 2 Kin. x. 15, 23; Jer. xxxvi.

VIII, IX. The MOABITES and AMMONITES were the product of Lot's incest with his daughters; Gen. xix. 30—38. The Moabites dwelt eastward of the Midianites, along the banks of the river Arnon, which runs westward into the Dead Sea. Their principal cities were Ar, Kir, Bozrah, Heshbon, Elealeh, &c. This country they took from the gigantic Emims, who were the offspring of Ham; Deut. ii. 9—11; Num. xxi. 13—15, 26; xxii. 36; Is. xv, xvi; Jer. xlviii. 1—5, 19—24. The AMMONITES had their residence on the north-east of the Moabites, and east of the Reubenites and Gadites, in the territories which they wrested from the gigantic Zamzummims, another part of the descendants of Ham. Rabbah was their principal city; Deut. ii. 18—22; iii. 11; 2 Sam. xii. 26—29; Amos ii. 14. When the Israelites, in A.M. 2552, encamped on the border of the Moabites, in their way to Canaan, they, and it seems also the Ammonites, invited and hired Balaam to curse that people, that they might be destroyed. But God not only obliged him to bless the Israelites and denounce destruction upon their enemies, but for this cause, excluded the Moabites and Ammonites from the congregation of Israel to all generations; Deut. xxiii. 3—6; Num. xxi, xxii—xxv; Neh. xiii. 1, 2. From A.M. 2639 to 2657, the Moabites grievously oppressed the Israelites; but were driven out of Canaan by Ehud; and Eglon their king was slain; Judg. 3. 12—30. From A.M. 2840 to 2858, the Ammonites terribly oppressed the Israelites on the east of Jordan; but were reduced by Jephthah; Judg. x, xi. About A.M. 2909 or 2939, Nahash the Ammonite ravaged Gilead, and refused every term of submission but what was inhuman and barbarous; but his army was almost wholly cut to pieces by Saul; 1 Sam. xi. Saul afterwards warred with success upon the Ammonites and Moabites; 1 Sam. xiv. 47. They both seemed to have favoured David while he was persecuted by Saul; but, provoked with their insolent or barbarous conduct, he conquered them both not long after he became king of Israel; Num. xxiv. 17; 1 Sam. xxii. 3, 4; 2 Sam. viii. 2, 11, 12; x—xii; 1 Chr. xviii—xx. Ps. lx. 8; cviii. 9. For about 150 years they continued subject to the Israelites; and, after the division of the kingdom, fell to the share of the ten tribes. After the death of Ahab, the Moabites rebelled; but were severely chastised by king Jehoram his son and his assistants in the war; and their country almost ruined; 2 Kin. i. 1; iii. Both nations joined as principals in the grand alliance against Jehoshaphat king of Judah; but their army perished in the attempt; 2 Chr. xx; Ps. lxxxiii. The kings of Israel, being no longer able to retain them in subjection, Uzziah and Jotham, kings of Judah, rendered them tributary. But it is probable they resumed their liberty during the unhappy reign of Ahaz; 2 Chr. xxvi—xxviii. While the Syrians from the north, or Assyrians from the north-east, ravaged the land of Israel, the Ammonites and Moabites seized on the cities which lay next them, and in the most inhuman manner murdered the inhabitants. God speedily and severely punished their injustice and cruelty. The Assyrians about 3290, seized their wealth, burnt their cities, murdered or carried captive their people, and desolated their country. After the death of Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, they resumed their independency. About A. M. 3398, they assisted the Chaldeans in ravaging the kingdom of Judah, and, with the utmost cruelty and insolence, pushed on the ruin of that nation. Not long after Jerusalem was burnt to a heap, Nebuchadnezzar, offended with the Moabites and Ammonites for their attempts to assist the Tyrians, and for the murder of Gedaliah his Jewish deputy, furiously invaded their country; and, by carrying off their wealth, burning their cities, and murdering the inhabitants, rendered it an absolute desert. After the overthrow of the Chaldean empire in 3466, such as remained returned to their country, and successively became the tributaries of the Persians, Greeks, and Romans. Notwithstanding their own servitude, they took every opportunity to distress the Jews after their captivity. Provoked with their insults, particularly during the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, Judas Maccabeus, with a handful of Jews, about A.M. 3840, invaded the country of the Ammonites, routed their forces, burnt their cities, and made slaves of their wives and children. About seventy years after, Jannæus, his grand-nephew, reduced the Moabites into a state of slavery to the Jewish nation; Is. xv, xvi; xxv. 10; Jer. xlviii, xlix. 1—6; Ezek. xxv; Amos i. 13—15; ii. 1—3; Zep. ii. 8—10.

X. The SYRIANS or ARAMITES were the offspring of Shem's youngest son, and of Nahor the brother of Abraham; perhaps mingled with some Canaanites; Gen. x. 22, 23; xxii. 21, 22; 1 Chr. i. 17. Their country lay on the north-east of Canaan and mount Lebanon: anciently it extended far beyond the river Euphrates to the eastward; and perhaps included most of Mesopotamia; 2 Sam. x. 16. Cushan-rishathaim, who for eight years greatly oppressed the Israelites, was probably the king of the Syrians beyond the Euphrates; Judg. iii. 8—10. Their ancient kingdoms were Zoba, Damascus, Hamath, Geshur, Rehob, Ishtob, Maachah, &c.; 2 Sam. viii. 3, 9; x. 6, 8; xv. 8; 1 Chr. xix. 6, 8. The Syrians on this side the Euphrates were either conquered by David, about A.M. 2964, or voluntarily submitted; 2 Sam. viii, x; 1 Chr. xviii, xix. But about sixty years after, Rezon, a servant of Hadadezer, whom David had conquered, formed a kingdom for himself at Damascus, which quickly extended itself over all Syria, on this side the river, and proved a terrible scourge to the kingdom of Israel; particularly in the days of Baasha, Ahab, Jehoram, Jehu, and Jehoahaz; 1 Kin. xi. 23—25; xv. 18—20; xx, xxii; 2 Kin. vi. 8, 28, 29; x. 32, 33; xiii. 3—7; 2 Chr. xxii. 5: and even to the kingdom of Judah, which lay farther off; particularly in the days of Joash and Ahaz; 2 Kin. xii. 17, 18; xvi. 5, 6; 2 Chr. xxiv. 23, 24; xxviii. 5; Is. vii. 1—8; ix. 12. But God did not suffer the injuries which they did to his people to pass unpunished. Twice, with a handful of men, Ahab routed their huge armies, and brought them to the brink of ruin; 1 Kin. xx. A preternatural noise terrified them from their cruel siege of Samaria; 2 Kin. vii; and Joash and Jeroboam, descendants of Jehu, repeatedly routing their armies, reduced them to the very brink of despair; 2 Kin. xiii. 15—25; xiv. 25—28.

But more terrible judgments overtook them soon afterwards. Hired by Ahaz king of Judah, Tiglath-pileser, the Assyrian, made their wealth a prey, burnt their cities, murdered the inhabitants, transported part of the survivors to Media, or caused them to serve in his army against the Israelites; Is. viii. 4; ix. 12; xvii. 1—3; Amos i. 3—5; iii. 12; with 2 Kin. xvi. 7—9. During the decline of the Assyrian monarchy, the captive Syrians returned and repeopled their country. Part of them assisted Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean against the Jews; 2 Kin. xxiv. 2. Not long after, on some provocation, he marched his troops into Syria; burnt Damascus, Hamath, Arpad, and other principal cities, into heaps of rubbish; and cruelly murdered the inhabitants, or transported them as slaves to his eastern dominions. Under Cyrus the Persian, about A.M. 3466, and his successors, the Syrians once more returned and rebuilt their cities. When Alexander, the Grecian conqueror, marched this way, about 3672, Hadrach, Hamath, and Damascus, were obliged to submit. Ever since Syria has been a scene of war, ravage, and bloodshed. Here the Grecian monarchs of Egypt and Syria often conflicted. It was terribly ravaged by Eumenes the Pergamenian, and by Hircanus the Jew, and by the Parthians and others. About A. M. 3939, the Romans reduced it into one of their provinces. Under them it was often plagued with Parthian and Persian invasions, and miserably distressed by earthquakes. From A. D. 634, when the Saracens seized on it, it became a frequent scene of war between them and the Christian emperors of Constantinople. Towards the end of the eleventh century of Christ, the Seljukians wrested it from the Saracens, and erected one of their four kingdoms at Aleppo, and another at Damascus. After the European crusaders had held it about a hundred years, rendering it a constant scene of the murder of Turks, and of one another, Saladin, the conqueror of Egypt, drove them out of most of it, about A.D. 1196. Since that time it has been generally oppressed by the Ottoman Turks, and not a little exposed to the plundering Druses of Lebanon and the roving Arabs. Nor, except at Aleppo and Damascus, is there now anything important but ancient ruins; Is. xvii. 1—3; Jer. xlix. 23—27; Amos i. 3—5; Zech. ix. 1, 2.

XI. The Assyrians were the posterity of Ashur, the second son of Shem. They formed one of the most ancient kingdoms in the world. Their residence was on the banks of the Hiddekel or Tigris, eastward of Mesopotamia. Nineveh, their principal city, stood above 500 miles to the north-east of Jerusalem; Gen. x. 11, 12, 22; Nah. ii. 8. About A.M. 3170, God, by Jonah, threatened the wicked Ninevites with immediate destruction; but their solemn fasting and repentance prevented it; Jonah i—iv. About A.M. 3230, the Assyrians under Pul, began to be powerful, and to extend their empire. He and his successors, Tiglath-pileser, Shalmaneser, and Sennacherib, conquered the Medes, Persians, Chaldeans, Syrians, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Israelites, Egypt, and part of Phenicia, Arabia, and Ethiopia: 2 Kin. xv. 19, 29; xvi. 7—9; xvii. 3—6, 24, 27; xviii. 34; xix. 12, 13, 17; Is. x. 7—14; xxxvi. 19; xxxvii. 11—13, 18; vii. 17—25; viii. 4; x, xv—xxiv, xxviii; Amos i, ii; Joel iii. 2—8; Ezek. xxxi. 3—9.

Their transactions in Canaan were the most important. Not long after Pul had laid the Israelites under tribute, Tiglath-pileser, hired by Ahaz king of Judah, about A.M. 3270, entered Syria; and by murder and captivity of the inhabitants, laid it desolate. The Israelitish territories in Galilee, and on the east of Jordan, soon after shared a like fate. After Shalmaneser had ruined the kingdom of Israel, and ravaged the country of the Philistines, if not also of the Egyptians and Ethiopians, (Is. xviii, xix.) Sennacherib, his son, provoked by Hezekiah's refusal to pay the tribute which Ahaz his father had promised, prepared to subvert the kingdom of Judah. By valuable presents, and a profound submission, Hezekiah attempted to avert the stroke. But, contrary to treaty, Sennacherib invaded Judea, and took all the fortified cities, Jerusalem excepted. Having defeated Tirhakah the Ethiopian, who came to assist Hezekiah, and ravaged Egypt and part of Ethiopia, or perhaps rather been terrified by that powerful monarch, he marched towards Jerusalem. By Rabshakeh his general, and by his letters to Hezekiah, he insolently defied the God of the Jews to protect them. But he had scarcely terrified the inhabitants of Jerusalem, by bringing up his army to Tophet, on the east of the city, when God by a fiery pestilence, or some other awful stroke, cut off 185,000 of his most valiant troops in one night. Leaving his baggage for a prey, he retreated home with the utmost precipitation and terror; but was scarcely arrived when two of his sons murdered him, while he was sacrificing to his idol; Deut. xxviii. 49—52; Is. v. 25—30; vii. 8, 17—25; viii. 4, 7, 8; x. 5—34; xvii, xxii, xxiv, xxviii—xxxiii; ix. 4; xiv. 25; xvii. 12—14; xxiv. 21, 22; xxvii. 1; xxviii. 21; xxix. 7, 8; xxx. 27—33; xxxi. 4—9; xxxiii. 1—4, 13, 14, 23; xxxvi, xxxvii, xxv—xxvii, xxxv; 2 Kin. xvii—xix; 2 Chr. xxxii; Ezek. xxxi.

Esarhaddon, his son, who reigned from about 3296 to 3338, by cession, or conquest, appears to have reunited the kingdom of Babylon to his own. Thither he carried king Manasseh and his fellow-captives of Judah; 2 Chr. x, xxxiii. 11; Is. xxxix. 6, 7. About the same time he transported the remnant of the Israelites into the east, and repeopled their country with his eastern captives; 2 Kin. xvii. 24—41; Ezra. iv. 2, 10. After his death the Assyrian empire hasted towards ruin. God punished them for their idolatry, their blasphemy of himself, and their oppression of his people; and for their pride, carnal security, whoredom, murder, and deceit. Saosduchin, indeed, defeated the revolted Medes, and destroyed Ecbatan, their capital. But to revenge this, Phraortes, king of Media, about A.M. 3352, invaded Assyria, and laid siege to Nineveh. He being slain, Cyaxares, his son, carried on the war with great fury, and once and again renewed the siege of Nineveh. But an irruption of the Scythians into Media obliged him to raise it, and forbear the war for about twenty-eight years; during which, it seems, Nabopolassar, ruler of Babylon, revolted from the Assyrians, and rendered himself an independent sovereign. Sarak, king of Assyria, rendered desperate by the many disasters of his empire, burnt his palace upon himself, his family, and his enormous heaps of wealth, amounting, it is said, to about 205 millions sterling. The flames continued raging fifteen days. About A. M. 3398, Cyaxares, having got rid of his Scythian guests, and fixed a peace with the Lydians, renewed his war with the Assyrians. He and Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon laid siege to Nineveh. By contracting alliances, by repairing their fortifications, and by hoarding up provisions, the Assyrians had done what they could to preserve their capital. But, while they observed some revel, in honour of their idol, or to celebrate some trifling victory, the Medes fell upon their troops while buried in drunkenness and sleep, and cut them to pieces. The Tigris, or some river which runs into it, high swelled by excessive rains, or by the melting of the Armenian snows, broke down about two miles and an half of the wall of Nineveh. When this inundation subsided, the Medes and Chaldeans furiously rushed in by the breach, probably in the night season, and filled the whole city with ravage, bloodshed, and flames. Quite confounded, the Assyrians and their allies could do nothing effectually for their own defence. Their strongest fortifications were surrendered almost upon the conqueror's demand. The merchants, and perhaps the queen, or the effeminate monarch, fled off in the most precipitate manner; and part of them took up their quarters in the Carduchian hills adjacent. The confederated Medes and Chaldeans, having plundered Nineveh of everything valuable, and murdered most of its inhabitants, burnt it into a ruinous heap, to the great joy of the oppressed tributaries. It was never rebuilt; nor, for these 2000 years past, has any one exactly known where it stood. About A. M. 3750, the Persians built a city of the same name near Mosul, on the east of the Tigris; but the place of it too has, for many ages, been scarcely discernible; Ezek. xxxi. 10—17; xxxii. 22; Nah. i—iii; Mic. v. 6; Zeph. ii. 13—15.

XII. How long the ancient kingdom of Babylon, or Shinar, established by Nimrod (Gen. x. 9, 10; xiv. 1), continued, we cannot certainly determine. The CHALDEANS appear to have sprung from Arphaxad, the third son of Shem. For many ages after Abraham left their country, they were perhaps little better than a thievish banditti; Gen. xi. 28; Jos. xxiv. 2, 3; Neh. ix. 7; Job i. 17. About A.M. 3260, Pul, or Tiglath-pileser, probably formed them into a regular nation, and made Baladan or Nabonassar his younger son, king; 2 Kin. xx. 12; Is. xxiii. 13; xxxix. 1, 2. By some means or other, Esarhaddon, about A.M. 3310, reunited Chaldea to his Assyrian empire, and he and his son retained it about sixty years. At last Nabopolassar, the governor of it, and perhaps the just heir to the throne, rendered himself king. About A. M. 3399, Nebuchadnezzar, his son, succeeded him, and erected a new empire, or rather a continuation of the Assyrian, in another branch of the ancient royal family. Raising an army of 300,000 warriors, he routed the troops of Pharaoh-Necho, king of Egypt, at the Euphrates, and took Carchemish, putting all the garrison to the sword. Having assisted Cyaxares, the Mede, in the overthrow of Nineveh, he, with a formidable army of Chaldeans, Scythians, and others, subdued the Syrians, Jews, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, and part of the Arabs. Enraged by the Tyrians' withdrawment of their persons and wealth, after he had besieged them for thirteen years, he wreaked his fury upon the Philistines and Egyptians who had assisted them, and terribly alarmed, if not ravaged, Ethiopia and Lybia. On the east he reduced the Medes and Persians or Elamites. Wherever he prevailed, by burning the cities, and by murdering or transporting the inhabitants, he generally left behind him a desolate wilderness. Their princes he either murdered or condemned to perpetual imprisonment; and the people who survived were generally made slaves in Chaldea; Is. xiv. 4—6, 12, 16, 17; xv, xxiv, xxxix. 6, 7; 2 Kin. xx. 17, 18; Jer. li. 20—23; xxv. 9—38; xxvii. 3—7; xix, xxi, xxiv, xxxix, xlvi—xlix; Hab. i. 6—17; ii. 5—17; Dan. ii. 37, 38; iv. 12, 22; v. 19; vii. 4; Zech. vi. 2; Deut. xxviii. 49—52; Is. v. 25—30; Ezek. iv—vii, ix, xvii, xix, xx—xxxii, xxxv.

Having finished his conquests, Nebuchadnezzar abandoned himself to idolatry, pride, and other impieties. Out of his immense spoils he formed a monstrous golden image for Bel his principal god, who, he imagined, had rendered him so successful; which, together with its pedestal, was at least 90 feet high, and 9 in breadth. His subjects were peremptorily commanded to worship it, under pain of being immediately burnt; Is. xlvi. 6; Jer. x. 2—15; Hab. i. 11, 16; ii. 18, 19; Dan. iii. By expending his spoils, and employing his captives, in his buildings at Babylon, he rendered it the wonder of mankind. Its walls were 87 feet broad, 350 high, and about 60 miles in circuit; and were fortified with 250 if not 316 towers, at proper distances. His success swelled his pride to an uncommon pitch. To punish it, God, by a kind of delirium, rendered him for seven years like a brute. At last his reason was restored, and he acknowledged God's dominion over him. He was reinstalled in his throne, and soon after died, A.M. 3443, having reigned two years with his father and forty-three by himself; Dan. iv. and v. 18—21.

The Chaldeans' contempt of God; their idolatry, astrology, magic, and sorcery; their carnal security, luxury, and avarice; their barbarous murder and oppression of the JEWS and other conquered nations, now began to be punished by God. Notwithstanding the prudent endeavours of Nitocris, his Median queen, Evil-Merodach was noted for nothing but folly and riot. By madly abusing some of the Medes at a hunting match, he laid the foundation of a ruinous war with that nation. In the third year of his reign, Neriglissar, his sister's husband, murdered him, and reigned in his stead. Jealous of the growing power of the Medes, he marched against them with a prodigious army of his own troops; besides 150,000 whom he had hired from Lydia, Phrygia, Cappadocia, Arabia, &c. Cyrus the Persian, who commanded the Median troops, routed this huge host with an army scarcely a third part of their number. Neriglissar was slain. Laboroschard, his infant son, who succeeded him, the people murdered, when he had reigned but nine months, noted for nothing but the cruelty of his administrators; and Belshazzar, the son of Evil-Merodach, reigned in his stead. Gobrias and Gadates, two Chaldean lords, provoked, the one by the murder of his son, and the other by the castration of himself, had revolted to Cyrus, and drawn the provinces which they governed along with them. Having in two years subdued the nations which it was probable would assist the Chaldeans, Cyrus ravaged their country, and marched against Babylon, their capital. Here Belshazzar's troops had shut themselves up, having stored the city with provisions sufficient for twenty years. For two years Cyrus besieged Babylon without any success. At last in A.M. 3466, informed of the approach of their annual idolatrous revel, on which Belshazzar profaned the sacred vessels of the Jewish temple, in libations to his idols, and in ministering to his drunkenness, he brake down the bank at the head of the new canal which Nitocris had dug for preventing the Euphrates from overflowing the country. By this means he diverted the river from its ordinary passage through Babylon. No sooner was the channel emptied of water than Gobrias and Gadites led part of his troops down, and others up, the channel into Babylon. The drunken Chaldeans having left their gates on the river quite open, the Medo-Persian troops rushed in thereat, and opened the other gates to their fellows. While the intoxicated Chaldeans partly lay buried in sleep and vomit, and partly ran up and down to inform the distant corners of the city that the Persians had entered it; while the merchants, husbandmen, and hired troops, laboured to escape for their lives, while every part of the city was filled with consternation, howling, and desperate sorrow; the Medes, Persians, Phrygians, and others of Cyrus' army, furiously spread burning and bloodshed on every side. While the flames of the city ascended to heaven, the streets ran with the blood of murdered warriors, princes, magicians, and even of innocent babes, dashed against the stones. Belshazzar and his thousand lords were despatched in their drunkenness and sleep. His whole family and friends were miserably murdered, or ignominiously reduced. Many of his subjects' carcasses rotted above ground, or were devoured by beasts, or interred like brutes. Bereaved of their husbands, the delicate ladies and others were ignominiously ravished, or cruelly murdered. The immense riches of the city became a spoil. The temples were pillaged. The idols, Bel, Nebo, Merodach, Nergal, Sheshach, &c., were broken to pieces, and the metal carried off for a prey. The sacred vessels of the Jewish temple, which were found in the temple of Bel, were carefully preserved, and afterwards restored to the Jews. Not a little of the city being burnt, and its high walls broken down, the whole constitution of the empire was unhinged; and the people who remained alive reduced to the basest servitude, under the Medes, Persians, Jews, and other nations, who had lately been their captives.

Recovering themselves under the mild government of Cyrus, encouraged by the confusions which followed upon the death of Cambyses his son, and provoked that Darius Hystaspes had quite deserted their city, and fixed his residence at Shushan in Persia, the Babylonians, after four years spent in preparations, in A.M. 3487, made an open revolt. For twenty months Darius in vain besieged them with all his forces. To prevent a surrender through want of provision, the besieged strangled all their unnecessary eaters, old men, children, and most of their women. After fixing the plot with his master Darius, Zopyrus, a Persian general, having fearfully mangled his face, fled over to the Babylonians, pretending that Darius had thus abused his body, for his advising him to raise the siege. They readily credited his pretences, and made him commander of a body of their troops. With these he made several successful sallies upon the retiring besiegers; and his success quickly procured him the command of the whole Babylonian army, and of the whole city. He seized the first opportunity to open, for his master's troops, two of the principal gates. Darius, thus master of the place, impaled 3000 of the principal rebels, and pardoned the rest; and from the neighbouring provinces, supplied them with 50,000 wives. He lowered their walls three-fourth parts of their height. About A.M. 3680, Babylon remained still pretty considerable; and Alexander the Great resolved to restore it to its ancient grandeur; but Seleucus, his Syro-Grecian successor, having drained it of about 500,000 of its inhabitants to people his new city of Seleucia, in the neighbourhood, it quickly dwindled into a mere desert, and the Euphrates, overflowing part of it, turned it into a lake or fen. Before the birth of our Saviour, Strabo, and after him Pliny, represent it as utterly desolate, nothing remaining but the walls. About A.D. 400, Jerome represents it as a huntingpark for the Persian kings. For many ages past no one knows certainly where it stood. The supposed seat of it is so haunted with venomous and doleful animals, that it cannot be safely approached but during the winter cold, which renders these creatures torpid, or confines them to their holes; Ps. cxxxvii. 8, 9; lxxix. 6; Mic. iv. 10—13; v. 5, 6, 15; vii. 10; Is. xli. 2, 3, 25; xlii. 13—15; xliii. 14; xliv. 25; xlv. 1—3; xlvi. 1, 2, 11; xlviii. 14; xxi, xiii, xiv; Jer. x. 25; xii. 14: xxv. 12—14, 26; xxvii. 7; l, li; Hab. ii. 3—19; Dan. v; vii. 4, 12; Zech. vi. 6, 8: v. 5—11; Deut. xxxii. 35—43.

XIII. The MEDES sprang from Japheth, by his son MADAI. The ELAMITES, or PERSIANS, from ELAM the eldest son of Shem, whose name they ordinarily bear in scripture; Gen. x. 2, 22; xiv. 1; Is. xxi. 2; Acts ii. 9. Both of these were conquered by the Assyrians. Part of both served in Sennacherib's army against the Jews; Is. xxii. 6. The Medes, instigated by Dejoces, about A.M. 3294, revolted from under the Assyrians, and rendered the Persians their tributaries. About 110 years after, assisted by the Chaldeans, they overturned the Assyrian empire, and destroyed Nineveh. Both, but especially the Persians, were obliged to submit to the Chaldeans; and Nebuchadnezzar built himself a magnificent palace at Shushan in Persia; Jer. xxv. 9, 25; xxvii. 7; xlix. 34—39.

Cyrus, who is so often marked out in the predictions of scripture, advanced the glory of both nations to its highest pitch. Having long commanded the Median troops of Astyages his mother's father, and of Darius her brother, and his own father-in-law, against the Chaldeans and others, he became heir to the Persian crown by his father, and to the Median by his wife; Dan. ix. 1; v. 31. Under his command, the Medo-Persian troops conquered the three powerful kingdoms of Lydia on the north, Babylon in the middle, and Egypt on the south; all to the westward. The multitudes he slew, and the spoils he seized, were astonishing; Is. xli. 2, 3, 25; xlv. 1—3; xlvi. 11; xlviii. 14; xlvii, xxi, xiii, xiv; Jer. l, li; Dan. ii. 32, 39; vii. 5; viii. 3, 4, 20; Zech. vi. 2, 6, 8. Most of the captives, who had been enslaved by the Chaldeans, he allowed to return and repeople their desolated countries. To the Jews he also restored their sacred vessels; and solemnly encouraged, and kindly assisted them to rebuild their temple; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 22, 23; Is.xlv. 13; xliv. 28; Ezra i; vi. 2—5. He established his empire according to the most just and prudent regulations: but Cambyses, his madly cruel son and successor, almost ruined it by his expedition into Egypt and Ethiopia. Artaxerxes Smerdis, the magian impostor, throughout his reign did nothing more than obstruct the building of the Jewish temple; Ezra iv. 6—24. Darius Hystaspes, who encouraged the building of it, and who was perhaps the AHASUERUS who divorced Vashti, married Esther, advanced and pulled down Haman, and rendered Mordecai his chief minister of state, extended the empire to its utmost greatness. The conquests and government thereof reached into Iberia, Albania, Colchis, and Scythia, on the north; into Lesser Asia and its islands, Syria, and Canaan, on the west; and into Egypt, Ethiopia, part of Arabia, and India, on the south; Ezra v, vi; Es. i—x; Dan. viii. 3, 4; vii. 5.

Provoked with the European Greeks for assisting their rebellious brethren in Lesser Asia and the Egyptians, and for giving his father's troops a terrible defeat, Xerxes, furnished with the immense spoils of Cyrus and Cambyses, and with the hoarded wealth of Darius his father, madly resolved to extirpate that nation. While the Carthaginians, by his instigation, attacked them in Sicily and Italy, about A.M. 3526, he marched an unwieldy army of several millions into Greece. The Greeks having defeated his armies and fleets, began to think of conquering his whole empire; and the struggles of the Egyptians to recover their liberty had afforded them an excellent opportunity, had not their own contentions and treachery prevented their improving it. Agesilaus the Spartan once seemed on the point of overturning it. In their lingering or often repeated wars, the Greeks more and more perceived the luxury, folly, and weakness of the Persian state. About A.M. 3671, Alexander the Great of Macedonia, having perfected the reduction of Greece into one kingdom, marched an army of about 35,000 excellent warriors, (Egeatæ, or goatish men, armed with brass,) headed by the most prudent generals, against the Persians, whose emblem of royalty then was the golden head of a horned ram. Highly provoked by the insolent messages of Darius Codoman their king, Alexander furiously routed their huge armies in the great battles of Granicus, Issus, and Arbela; and, by overrunning rather than fighting, in six years subdued the whole Persian empire; Gen. ix. 27; Num. xxiv. 24; Dan. ii. 32, 39; vii. 5, 6; viii. 3—7; x. 20; xi. 2, 3; Zec. vi. 2, 6, 8. About A.M. 3754, the Parthians, who, perhaps, were chiefly Scythians and Gauls, formed a powerful kingdom in Persia, which continued about 482 years, and sometimes extended from the Indus on the south to the Hellespont on the north. It was long the distinguished terror of the Roman empire. About A.D. 220 or 232, the government was transferred to another nation, or at least to another family. This Persian kingdom was a terrible plague to the Christian emperors, especially to those of the East; and was a most inveterate and cruel persecutor of other Christians. Ever since A.D. 634, Persia has been a distinguished scene of the most shocking miseries, oppression, murder, and almost everything horrid, under the Saracens, Seljukians, Tartars, Turkmans, Sophis, and modern usurpers; Dan. ii. 44, 45; vii. 12.

XIV. The GREEKS, comprehending the Athenians, Spartans, Æolians, Ionians, Dorians, &c., sprang from Javan the fourth son of Japheth. When they first removed from Lesser Asia into the south-east of Europe we cannot certainly determine; but about A.M. 3150, several colonies, chiefly Æolians and Ionians, returned from their over-stocked countries in Europe to the western parts of Lesser Asia. While the Greeks with great assiduity cultivated different branches of literature among themselves, they gradually penetrated into the Persian territories; and, about A.M. 3672, under Alexander the Macedonian, they reared up an empire of their own upon the ruin of the Persian, less opulent and showy, but much more powerful and warlike; Gen. ix. 27; Num. xxiv. 24; Dan. ii. 32, 39; vii. 6; viii. 5—7, 20, 21; x. 20; xi. 3; Zech. vi. 3, 6, 8.

Scarcely had Alexander spent twelve years in overrunning the world, when he died, perhaps of drunkenness, in the very flower of his age. His whole family was quickly extirpated. His queen Statira, the daughter of Darius, was murdered by Roxana, another of his wives, and thrown into a well. Eurydice, another wife, and Philip Aridæus his brother, were murdered by Olympias his mother. For this Olympias herself was murdered by Cassander's soldiers. Roxana, and Alexander Ægus her son, whom Eumenes had for a time so bravely supported, were privately murdered by Cassander. About a year after he murdered Barsine, the only surviving wife of Alexander, and Hercules her son. Antigonus, one of his generals who attempted to govern the whole empire, being reduced, it was divided into four parts; to each of Alexander's remaining principal generals a part. Cassander had Greece in Europe on the west. Lysimachus had Thrace, Bithynia, &c., on the north. Seleucus Nicator had Syria, and other eastern provinces. Ptolemy Lagus had Egypt, &c., on the south. Lysimachus' share was quickly wrested from him; and most of it united to Syria. Cassander's share was soon after divided into the several states of Macedonia, Achaia, Ætolia, &c. About A.M. 3856, most of it was reduced by the conquering Romans; Dan. vii. 6; viii. 8, 22; xi. 4; ii. 40; vii. 7, 19, 23.

The thigh-like kingdoms of Egypt on the SOUTH of Canaan, and of Syria on the NORTH, long subsisted. Ptolemy Lagus, surnamed the Saviour, ruled over Egypt, Canaan, Phenicia, Hollow Syria, Caria, Cyprus, part of Arabia, and the Egean isles. Seleucus Nicator, or conqueror, who founded his empire in A.M. 3692, was still more powerful; ruling over not only Syria, but Persia, Chaldea, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Armenia, Media, Pontus, and almost all Lesser Asia; from which, after about sixteen years' contest, he drove Demetrius, son of Antigonus; and to which, after the death of Lysimachus in A. M. 3723, he added Thrace, and part of Macedonia in Europe. But his son Antiochus Soter's wars with the Gauls, Bithynians, and Pergamenians, together with the revolt of the Parthians that ensued, exceedingly weakened the kingdom. Wearied with their ruinous contentions, Ptolemy Philadelphus of Egypt, and Antiochus Theos of Syria, about A.M. 3756, agreed to a mutual peace. Ptolemy carried his daughter Berenice into Syria; persuaded Antiochus to divorce Laodice his queen, and espouse Berenice, and settle the crown on her children. But Ptolemy was scarcely dead when Antiochus divorced Berenice, recalled Laodice to his bed, and settled the crown of Syria upon Seleucus Callinicus her son. To prevent Antiochus changing his mind, Laodice quickly despatched him by poison, and fixed her son on his throne about 3758. Berenice, her child, and all her Egyptian attendants, were murdered before the Lesser Asians or Egyptians could come up to protect them. To revenge the death of his sister, Ptolemy Euergetes of Egypt marched his troops into Syria, reduced most of that kingdom, and returned home laden with rich spoils, and with 2500 Egyptian idols, which Cambyses the Persian had carried off about 300 years before. These, to the great joy of his subjects, he replaced in their temples. In his return through Canaan he offered a solemn sacrifice of thanksgiving to God at Jerusalem; Dan. xi. 5—9.

After he had been terribly plagued by Hierax his brother, and by Eumenes king of Pergamus, Seleucus was taken prisoner by the Parthian revolters. His sons, Ceraunus and Antiochus the Great, resolved to be revenged on Ptolemy, and to recover what their father had lost. Death carried off both Ceraunus and Ptolemy while they prepared for the war. Ptolemy Philopater succeeded his father in Egypt. Antiochus routed his forces at Berytus, and recovered Phenicia and Hollow Syria. Whether he executed his purpose of ravaging Egypt we do not certainly know; but next year he marched his forces to Egypt, intending to wrest that kingdom from its luxurious prince. But Ptolemy routed his army at Raphia, a city on the north-east border of Egypt, and obliged him to restore Canaan and Hollow Syria. In his return from viewing these provinces, Ptolemy at Jerusalem offered sacrifices of thanksgiving to JEHOVAH. But highly enraged that the terrors of God or the importunity of the Jews had hindered his entrance into the Holy of Holies, he caused about forty or sixty thousand Jews to be inhumanly massacred in Egypt. He granted the Syrians a peace upon the easiest terms, that he might have leisure to wallow in lewdness with Agathocles his harlot, and her infamous brother. Offended with his baseness, many of his subjects revolted. Nor was it long before he died of his debaucheries. Ptolemy Epiphanes, his infant son, succeeded. Antiochus of Syria therefore agreed with Philip of Macedonia to conquer the Egyptian dominions, and to share them betwixt them. Ptolemy being solely governed by Agathocles his father's catamite, his subjects were upon the very point of revolting; and several seditions actually happened. The Alexandrians at last took arms, and put Agathocles, his sister, and his friends, to death. Scopas, Ptolemy's general, who perhaps himself intended to ascend the throne, recovered Canaan and Hollow Syria; but Antiochus by three or four bloody battles retook them. Assisted by the Jews, whom he honoured with distinguished favours, he marched his army into Egypt to conquer it. But, finding that the Romans, whose resentment he dreaded, had taken young Ptolemy under their protection, he resolved to make himself master of it by fraud. Having bribed his beautiful daughter Cleopatra to betray or murder her future husband, upon the first opportunity he married her to young Ptolemy; and assigned him Phenicia, Hollow Syria, and Canaan, for her dowry. But Cleopatra, regardless of the horrid mandates or bribes of her father, faithfully adhered to the interests of her husband; and the Egyptian generals suspecting Antiochus' intentions, kept themselves on their guard. Enraged to see his designs on the kingdom of Egypt wholly disappointed, Antiochus, with a fleet of 300 ships and a formidable army, rendered himself master of several coasts of Lesser Asia, Thrace, and Greece, and of Samos, Eubœa, and other islands, in the eastern part of the Mediterranean Sea. Informed afterwards of Ptolemy's death, he once more prepared to wrest the kingdom of Egypt from his infant grandson; but a terrible storm, and the death of Scopas, who intended to betray that nation, prevented him. Instigated by Hannibal, the famous and now fugitive general of the Carthaginians, he, assisted by some of the European Greeks, next commenced a war upon the Romans. To revenge this affront, together with the injury which he had done to their allies in Lesser Asia, the Romans quickly engaged him. Acilius their general routed his army in Greece, and drove him quite out of Europe. Livius and Emilius at different times defeated his fleets. Lucius Scipio, with an army of 30,000, routed his army in Lesser Asia, slew 54,000 of them, stripped him of all his dominions to the northward of mount Taurus, and condemned him to pay 12,000 talents of silver to the Romans, for defraying the expenses of the war with him. Covered with shame and disgrace, Antiochus retired to the inmost parts of his kingdom; where, attempting to pillage a temple of Jupiter at Elymais in Persia, for money to pay his Roman debt, he was murdered by the infuriated mob. Seleucus Philopater his son, who succeeded him, was remarkable for nothing but raising of taxes to defray his father's Roman debt; and for an unsuccessful attempt by Heliodorus his minister, to pillage the temple of God at Jerusalem. Not long after the same Heliodorus poisoned his master for the sake of his throne; Dan. xi. 10—20.

Not Demetrius his son, but Antiochus his brother, succeeded him, A.M. 3829. He had been some years at Rome as a hostage, or pledge of security, for the payment of the Roman debt; and was one of the most base, frantic, and mischievous persons that ever breathed. By flattering the Romans to befriend him; by flattering Eumenes, king of Pergamus, to assist him; and by flattering the Syrians to submit to him, he peaceably fixed himself on the throne. Having quickly routed the forces of Heliodorus the usurper, of Demetrius the true heir to the crown, and of Ptolemy Philometor of Egypt, who claimed it in right of his mother, he distributed his spoils among his subjects, which exceedingly gained him their affection. Highly piqued that Eulæus and Lenæus, the curators of young Ptolemy, should have demanded for their master the provinces of Phenicia, Hollow Syria, and Canaan, which had been assigned for his mother Cleopatra's dowry, but it seems had never been delivered up, Antiochus, having repaired the fortifications of these countries, marched his army into Egypt with an intention to conquer it. His incomplete victory on the border of Egypt obliged him to return home. Next year he invaded Egypt afresh, and, Alexandria excepted, ravaged most of it. While his deputy governors treacherously surrendered the island of Cyprus, the effeminately educated monarch of Egypt did almost nothing in defence of himself or his subjects. Perhaps he was taken prisoner by his uncle Antiochus. It is certain they feasted together, and formed a league of amity which neither of them intended to keep; but both were balked of their treacherous intentions. In his return homeward, Antiochus, in cold blood, ravaged Jerusalem, murdered 40,000 of the Jews, and made as many slaves. Meanwhile the Alexandrians, finding that Ptolemy their sovereign was entirely managed by his treacherous uncle, made Physcon, his brother, king in his stead. To resent this affront, Antiochus again invaded Egypt; but finding it more difficult than he expected to reduce the supporters of Physcon, he returned home, in hopes that the civil war between the two brothers would quickly render the kingdom an easy prey to himself. But suspecting his intentions, the two Ptolemies, Philometor and Physcon, agreed to reign jointly in peace. Informed hereof, Antiochus again invaded Egypt, and ravaged part of it. But Popilius, and other Roman ambassadors arriving in Macedonian ships, charged him and all his forces to evacuate Egypt if he regarded the friendship of their state. Stung with indignation at this disappointment, when all things promised such success; and, provoked by the peculiarity of their religion, and by some affronts they had given him; he, in his return to Syria, made terrible work among the Jews. Before this he had turned out Onias the legal high priest, and sold his office to his treacherous brothers Jason and Menelaus, one after another. Now, assisted by his heathen generals and apostate Jews, he stopped the daily sacrifice; rendered the temple a scene of idolatry and lewdness; compelled the people to eat swine's flesh; and, in fine, attempted, with all his might, to destroy every copy of the scriptures, and every faithful worshipper of God. Meanwhile the Armenians and Persians revolted. The Armenians he quickly reduced; but the Persian mob gave him a furious repulse while he attempted to plunder one of their temples. Informed, in his way homeward, that Judas Maccabeus and the faithful Jews who assisted him had routed his armies in Canaan, he furiously vowed to extirpate their whole nation. Immediately a horrible distemper seized on his body. His flesh was filled with crawling worms, rotted, and fell off in pieces, with intolerable torment and stench. Convinced that it was the punishment of his horrid abuse and persecution of the Jews and their worship, he solemnly vowed to their God, that if he recovered, he would restore their religion, and grant them the most advantageous instances of his favour. But his vows were in vain. The inexpressible torment and stench quickly put an end to his miserable life, near Babylon, A.M. 3840; Dan. xi. 21—35; viii. 9—14, 23—25.

Having languished a hundred years more amidst terrible contentions and miseries, the Syro-Grecian dominions, about A.M. 3939, fell into the hands of the conquering Romans. About thirty-five years after, those of Egypt shared the same fate. When the Roman empire was divided, A.D. 338, most of that which had anciently pertained to the Greeks was allotted to the emperor of the East, who had his residence at Constantinople. Their territories in Europe were sometimes terribly ravaged by the Goths, Huns, &c. Those which were in Asia and Africa, about A.D. 640, generally fell into the hands of the Saracens. From them they passed, about 400 years afterward, to the Seljukian Turks. For about three or four hundred years past almost the whole Grecian empire has been subject to the Ottoman Turks, by whose oppression it is fearfully depopulated; Dan. vii. 12; ii. 40; xi. 40—43; Zech. vi. 7; Rev. viii. 7—12; ix.

XV. After the rich and bloody empire of the Assyrians and Chaldeans; the prudently formed, moderately wealthy, but inactive, and often basely governed empire of the Medes and Persians; the rapidly formed and powerful, but quickly divided, empire of the brass-armed Greeks; had, according to the immutable purposes of God, and amidst difficulties unnumbered, successively sprung up from contemptible origins; and had finished their work, and filled up the measure of their iniquities, and then dwindled back to their primary meanness: the empire of the ROMANS, who were descended from Japheth by his son Javan or Gomer, succeeded. In this Satan made a more ample display of earthly glory, and erected a more powerful bulwark for the support of iniquity, than had ever before existed. In pride, avarice, murderous cruelty, and tyrannical oppression, chiefly of the people of God, it resembled the preceding monarchies; but in its commonwealth form, which was chiefly directed by two consuls, till at last it was divided into two parts, it differed from them. In policy, power, extent, and terror to every opposer, it far exceeded them. Sprung from the basest origin, these Romans gradually conquered the Italians, Spaniards, Helvetians, Gauls, Britons, Germans, Pannonians, Illyrians, Dalmatians, Greeks, Thracians, Lesser Asians, Pontians, Iberians, and Armenians, descended from Japheth; and the Lydians, Mesopotamians, Syrians, Jews, and some Arabs, descended from Shem. They enslaved the Etruscan, Pelasgian, Heraclean, Phenician, and Carthaginian, posterity of Canaan, together with the Mauritanian, Getulian, Numidian, Lybian, Cyrenian, and Egyptian descendants of Ham, in Africa. Rome, which was the seat of their empire, stands about 1200 miles north-west of Jerusalem; but the empire itself extended from north to south about 2600; from east to west about 3000 miles. Their conquests extended chiefly to the southward. They successively adopted seven different forms of government. For the first 200 years they had kings. From A.M. 3472, to 3960, they were governed by consuls, tribunes, decemvirs, and dictators, in their turns. After this to A.M. 4480, by emperors, heathen and Christian. From A.D. 476 to 556, they were governed by Gothic kings. Since A.D. 756, the popes have been at once their spiritual and their civil heads; Dan. ii. 33, 40—43; vii. 7, 8, 23, 24; Zech. vi. 1—7; Rev. xii. 3; xiii. 1; xvii. 3, 9—11.

About A.D. 44, a terrible famine of seven years' continuance afflicted the empire. Not long after, multitudes of earthquakes happened in it, in Italy, Lesser Asia, and Canaan, and in the isles of Crete, Samos, Chios, &c. Laodicea, Hierapolis, and Colosse, were quite overturned; Joel iii. 30; Mat. xxiv. 7; Luke xxi. 11; Acts xi. 28; ii. 19, 20. The opposition of the emperors Nero, Domitian, Trajan, and Adrian, to the everywhere victorious gospel of Christ, and the cruel persecution of his followers, drew upon their dominions the tremendous vengeance of God. The noted victories of Vespasian over the Jews in the first century to the Christian era, and of Trajan over the Jews and Parthians in the next, were quickly followed by fearful and bloody disasters. While the Parthians and other heathens murdered the Romans in other countries, the Jews, enraged with the ruin of their nation, city, and temple, murdered about 500,000 or more of them in Cyprus, Cyrene, and Egypt. The slaughter of Jews, unnumbered, in revenge of this, did but more and more weaken the empire; Rev. vi. 1—4. Whatever zeal Marcus Aurelius and Septimus Severus discovered for common equity, and for the support of their subjects, their persecution of the Christians issued in such scarcity of provisions, that people were obliged to eat their victuals by weight and measure; and labourers were scarcely able to earn what was necessary for their own subsistence; Rev. vi. 5, 6. In the third century of the Christian era, the Roman empire became more and more miserable. From 235 to 286, the Christians were generally, and sometimes terribly, persecuted, and millions of them murdered. In God's just resentment of this, twenty emperors, and thirty usurpers, after making no small havoc among their opposers, or even their friends, were cut off almost all in a miserable manner. Moreover, while the Persians in the east plagued Syria and the countries adjacent, the Goths, Quadi, Sarmatæ, Suevi, and Vandals, ravaged almost all the Roman territories in Europe. Few cities, and scarcely one unwalled town, escaped their infernal pillage and murder. Besides fearful earthquakes, a terrible pestilence of 15 years' continuance pervaded the whole empire from south to north. Multitudes were left unburied. Dogs, and other ravenous animals, were so accustomed to human carrion, that they sometimes entered towns and devoured the living; Rev. vi. 7, 8.

The fourth century opened with a terrible persecution of the Christians by Diocletian and his fellow-emperors, which lasted ten years. All on a sudden, God pleaded the cause of his persecuted people, and poured his vengeance upon their heathen oppressors. While multitudes were swallowed up by earthquakes, or terrified by ill-boding omens in the sky, Constantine, being elected emperor by his troops, and provoked by the designs of his heathen partners in government, took arms against the persecuting emperors and their Cæsars or subordinate emperors. While Diocletian abandoned his imperial crown for a private life, Maximinian, Galerius, Maximin, Maxentius, and Licinus, were so plagued with repeated discomfitures and disasters that they hid themselves in dens and caves. While some other principal persecutors murdered themselves in the most desperate anguish, Maximin and Licinus publicly acknowledged their disasters to be the just vengeance of Jesus Christ upon them for persecuting his people. Multitudes of the heathen priests, who had all along been distinguished instigators of the persecutions, were miserably destroyed. Even Maximin and Licinus murdered thousands of them; because by their false predictions of victory they had decoyed them into their ruinous wars with Constantine. In fine, the heathen worship of the sun, moon, and stars, and other idols, was abolished by law: Rev. vi. 12—17; Psalm ii. 8, 9; xviii. 30—48; xxi. 8—12; xxxv. 26, 27; xl. 14—16; xlvi. 6—8; xlviii. 4—11; lix. 12—15; lxix. 23—28; lxviii. 1, 2, 12, 30; lxxix. 6—13; lxxxiii. 9—18; xciv. 24; xcvi. 13; xcviii. 9; lxxii. 9; cx. 5, 6; cxxxii. 18; cxlix. 6—9; Prov. i. 24—32; Isa. lxvi. 15—17; Joel iii. 9—16; Zeph. iii. 8; Hag. ii. 22; Mic. iv. 13; v. 5—15.

From A.D. 323 to 338, the Roman empire, now christianized by law, enjoyed a short repose. Meanwhile Constantine repaired the ancient Byzantium, on the north-west of the Euxine Sea, and called it CONSTANTINOPLE, after himself; and rendered it his imperial seat. His death was followed by fearful calamities. The contemporary or separate reigns of his three sons were chiefly marked with mutual contentions one with another; rebellions of Maxentius, Sylvanus, and others; terrible ravages by the Persians and Armenians in the east; and by the Allemans, Scots, and Picts, in the west. The short reign of Julian their cousin was principally noted for his crafty and cruel attempts to abolish Christianity and restore heathenism, and his ruinous loss in the Persian war. In A.D. 364, Valentinian divided the empire with Valens his brother; after which this division generally remained. The emperor of the western part resided at Rome, and the emperor of the east at Constantinople. Being now composed of ancient Romans, conquered nations, and invading Scythians, the Roman state became extremely weak and disjointed. Theodosius the Great united its parts, and restored it to some degree of its wonted order and strength. But he dying in 395, and dividing it to his sons Honorius and Arcadius, it gradually became more and more weak and miserable. The Goths under Rhadagaisus and Alaric ravaged Greece, Italy, &c., besieged Rome, murdered about a third part of the imperial subjects, and obliged the western emperor to allow them Gaul (or France) and Spain for their residence. In A.D. 410, Alaric again ravaged Italy, and burnt Rome. Meanwhile other armies of Goths, Alans, and Vandals, almost desolated Gaul and Spain, and took possession thereof. The Vandals crossed the Mediterranean Sea by the Straits of GIBRALTAR, and by terrible ravage, rendered themselves masters of the Roman territories in Africa, and there formed a powerful kingdom. Attila, and his infernal Huns, for fourteen years ravaged Thrace, Greece, France, and part of Italy, in the most barbarous manner, putting almost every one they could find to the sword. The emperor Valentinian III. by promising them an annual tribute, diverted them from their intended attack upon Rome. To revenge the murder of this emperor on his subjects, Eudoxa his queen implored the assistance of the African Vandals. They, under Genseric their king, in A.D. 455, ravaged Sicily and Italy, pillaged Rome, and returned home laden with spoil. The western empire, now terribly desolated, languished about twenty years more under eight short and turbulent reigns. In A.D. 476, Odoacer, whom the Heruli and other barbarians had chosen for their king, deposed the emperor Augustulus; and translated the seat of his own royalty to Ravenna, another city of Italy. His kingdom had scarcely lasted sixteen years, when Theodoric the Ostrogoth unhinged it, and founded another, of about sixty-four years' continuance. Hitherto the Roman consuls, senate, and magistrates, had always maintained some vestiges of their ancient power and dignity. But Justinian the emperor of Constantinople, having recovered Africa from the Vandals, and part of Italy from the Goths, his successor, Justin II. A.D. 566, totally abolished the distinguished honours of Rome, reduced it to the same level with the neighbouring cities, and made the exarch of Ravenna his deputy-governor of it. The Romish bishop, about A.D. 606, obtaining an imperial mandate by which he was declared UNIVERSAL BISHOP, immediately began to grasp at civil power. In A.D 756, he actually became prince of Rome and the two territories adjacent, and restored to that city part of its ancient privileges. The succeeding popes attempted to extend an imperial influence over the nations. Hating the emperor of Constantinople, the Romans proclaimed Charles the Great king of France and Germany, their emperor. About A.D. 800, he and the Pope established the German empire instead of the Roman; which healed head of the beast will probably continue till the glorious Millennium commence; Dan. ii. 33, 41—43; vii. 8; Zech. vi. 7; Rev. viii. 1, 7—12; xiii. 2, 3, 15; xii. 3.

About A.D. 480, the western empire had begun to be parcelled out into TEN TOES OR HORNS; i. e. sovereign states of barbarians, who came from the east; viz., Huns, Ostrogoths, Visogoths, Franks, Vandals, Suevi and Alans, Burgundians, Heruli and Rugians, Saxons, Lombards. Bishop Chandler classes them thus: the Ostrogoths in Mæsia, the Visogoths in Pannonia, the Suevi and Alans in Spain and part of France, the Vandals in Africa, the Franks in France, the Heruli and Thuringi in Italy, the Saxons and Angles in Britain, the Huns in Hungary, the Lombards on the banks of the Danube, and afterwards in Italy. Sir Isaac Newton arranges them thus; the Vandals and Alans in Africa and Spain, the Suevi in Spain, the Visogoths, the Alans in France, the Burgundians, the Franks, the Britons, the Huns, the Lombards, and the Exarchate of Ravenna. In the eighth century Bishop Newton arranges them thus: the Senate of Rome, the Greek Exarchate of Ravenna, the Lombards, the Huns, the Allemans, the Burgundians, the Franks, the Goths, the Britons, the Saxons. Ever since the fall of the Roman empire it has been generally parcelled out into ten distinct sovereignties, notwithstanding frequent alterations of their form, extent, &c. At present we have the states of Italy, the two Sicilies, Portugal, Spain, France, Britain, Holland, Germany, Hungary, and Switzerland; or, by joining Holland, Hungary, or Switzerland, to Germany, we may admit Turkey for a tenth. The different nations of which these states were composed, and their diversified tempers and laws, have rendered their constitutions weak and inconsistent: Dan. ii. 33, 41—43; vii. 7, 20; Rev. xii. 3; xiii. 1; xvii. 3, 12, 16. For almost 1200 years past these ten sovereignties have, in whole, or in part, submitted to the tyranny of the Antichristian Popes; but when, 1260, from the full manifestation of Popery, are finished, they shall renounce his authority, and employ their power to abolish it. What alterations these ten states will undergo in their own form, by the general conversion of mankind to Christ in the Millennium, we know not; Dan. ii. 44, 45; vii. 8, 11, 24—27; Rev. xiii. 1, 12—17; xvii. 12—16.

XVI. ARABIA is of great extent, reaching from Egypt on the west, to Persia on the east; and from the Indian Ocean on the south, to Canaan; nay, in the east parts, to Syria on the north. The south part of it, between the Red Sea and the Persian gulf, was peopled by the posterity of Joktan; Gen. x. 26—30; 1 Chr. i. 20—23. The north parts by the ISHMAELITES, who, when multiplied into their twelve tribes, swallowed up most of the descendants of Keturah, Esau, and Lot; Gen. xvi. 10, 12; xvii. 20; xxi. 9—21; xxv. 1—4, 12—18; xxxvi. 1—16; xix. 37, 38. Part of the Ishmaelites anciently traded with the Egyptians in spices; and long after with the Tyrians in spices, ebony, jewels, gold, ivory, precious clothes and cattle; Gen. xxxvii. 25; Ezek. xxvii. 15, 20—22; but they have generally applied themselves to the management of flocks and herds, dwelling in tents, and roving from place to place, as they found most convenient for pasture; Isa. xiii. 20; xxi. 13; lx. 6, 7; Ezek. xxv. 4, 5. They have in every age been distinguished for lewdness, robbery, ravage, revenge, and murder; and have been a common nuisance and plague to mankind around them. It was the interest of each of the many conquerors who approached their territories to extirpate them; but none has ever so much as properly reduced them to subjection; Gen. xvi. 12. Some of them assisted the Midianites against Israel, and shared in the vengeance of Gideon; Judg. vi. 3; viii. 24. They sent friendly compliments to Solomon; and perhaps the queen of Sheba was an Arabian; 1 Kings x. 1—15; 2 Chr. ix. 1—14. Shishak, the Egyptian conqueror, was obliged to protect his kingdom from their depredations by a deep ditch and line of defence. They complimented Jehoshaphat with some flocks; but, quickly after, to their own hurt, they joined in the grand alliance against him; 2 Chr. xvii. 10, 11; xx; Ps. lxxxiii. 6—17. They terribly ravaged Judea under Jehoram his son; 2 Chr. xxi. 16, 17.

About A.M. 3200, the Gadites and Reubenites gave the eastern Ishmaelites or Hagarenes a terrible defeat, and seized on their territory and wealth; 1 Chr. v. 15—22. About 3290, the Assyrians ravaged their country. Many of the Kedarenes were murdered, and their flocks carried off for a spoil. The Dedanites fled to the woods, where many of them perished by hunger. The Kenites were carried prisoners to Nineveh; Num. xxiv. 21, 22; Isa. xxi. 13—17. About A.M. 3420, Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean ravaged the northern parts of Arabia, put multitudes of the Dedanites, Buzites, Temanites, Scenites, and Kedarenes to the sword, burnt their cities, and carried off their wealth for a prey; Jer. xxv. 9, 23—25; xlix. 30—33. Provoked by their contempt of himself, or by their depredations on his subjects, Alexander the Great, about A.M. 3678, in vain resolved to extirpate them. Antigonus, his mighty general, who attempted to succeed him; Pompey, the victorious Roman commander; and the emperors Augustus, Trajan, and Severus, attempted to reduce or destroy them in vain. Providence always, and sometimes miraculously, maintained the independency of these wild descendants of Abraham by Hagar; Gen. xvi. 12.

About A.D. 608, Mahomet, a crafty Ishmaelite, assisted, it is said, by a villanous Jew, and a treacherous Christian monk, under pretence of reforming his countrymen's gross idolatry, contrived a religious system, adapted to the then reigning taste of Jews and Christians as well as Heathens; promising to those who embraced it manifold carnal enjoyments, both in time and in eternity. After spending about fourteen years in private attempts on his idolatrous neighbours, he was obliged to flee from Mecca, the place of his birth, to Medina, where he procured a considerable number of followers, who were called SARACENS. Encouraged by this, he altered his plan, and began to propagate his tenets by fire and sword. While a preternatural darkness of the sun, from June to October, presaged their ruinous influence, his army of Saracens prodigiously increased. Like locusts and scorpions, they chiefly ravaged and murdered the nations during the five months of summer; and it was about five prophetic months, or 150 years, before their ruinous power began to decline. The strength of their armies chiefly consisted in cavalry, and their incursions were rapid and violent. Dressed with turbans or mitres, their heads appeared as if crowned; and their captains reckoned themselves on a level with kings. They had beards as men; but plaited their hair as women. They pretended to a masculine religion; but lust for women, revenge, and cruelty, chiefly marked their character. Their daring hearts and destructive weapons rendered their inroads alarming and terrible. Their tail, the very scum of their armies, spread misery and death wherever they went; and the delusions they propagated were ruinous and damning. But Abubeker the caliph, or successor of Mahomet, made it a standing law that none should destroy corn or fruit trees, or hurt any cattle, but when it was necessary for subsistence: and God so managed their conquests and ravages, that his faithful servants generally escaped. Nor, though they wreaked their fury upon empty and idolatrous Christians all along, from China to the Atlantic Ocean, could they ever render themselves masters of the Christian capitals of Rome and Constantinople, even though they pillaged the former, and often besieged the latter. By the direction of Satan, and of Mahomet and his successors (CALIPHS), especially for the first eighty years, they murdered an infinity of mankind. In Asia they conquered Arabia, Canaan, Syria, Chaldea, Persia, Media, Armenia, Assyria, with part of Lesser Asia, India, and Tartary. In Africa they conquered Egypt, Nubia, Libya, Barbary, Fez, and Morocco, and other countries on the north of the river Senegal. In the Mediterranean they seized upon Cyprus, Sicily, and many other islands. In Europe they conquered Portugal and Spain, with part of Italy and France. From A.D. 760 to 910, their power was either at a stand, or more generally on the decline. Their setting up other caliphs in opposition to the mighty lords of Bagdad; the religious differences between the Persians and other Mahometans, and the terrible animosity occasioned thereby; the success of the Christians in Spain; and the perpetual inroads and growing power of the Seljukians in Persia; greatly weakened their authority. Tangrolipix the Seljukian Turk, about A.D. 1040 or 1055, rendered himself sovereign of Persia, stripped the caliph of Bagdad, who was the chief, of his civil authority, leaving him but a mere shadow of spiritual power.

In A.D. 1260, the Jenghizan Tartars utterly abolished the caliphate of Bagdad. Mostanser the caliph escaped to Egypt, where he and his successors enjoyed a show of spiritual government, till, in 1525, that country was conquered by the Ottoman Turks. In A.D. 1610, the Spaniards drove about 900,000 Saracens and Moors out of their country. For more than 400 years past the Ottoman Turks have possessed a great part of their ancient conquests. Others, of Tartarian original, have still longer possessed their kingdom of Persia, Hindostan, &c. Thus these ISHMAELITES or SARACENS are, after an amazing blaze of earthly grandeur, reduced to, if not below, their ancient baseness. They nevertheless maintain their wonted independency; and still oblige the haughty Sultans of Constantinople to pay them a yearly tribute of 40,000 crowns, as the condition of their allowing the Turkish pilgrims a safe passage to Mecca, their holy city; Gen. xvi. 12; Dan. xi. 40; Rev. ix. 1—11.

XVII. The Scythians, Tartars, and Turks, are the offspring of Japheth, by MAGOG, and perhaps some others of his sons; Gen. x. 2; Ezek. xxxviii, xxxix. They have multiplied exceedingly; and have often made the most terrible irruptions into Europe or Southern Asia. About A.M. 3370, under Maydes or Oguz Khan, they ravaged Western Asia. It seems they intended to have penetrated into Egypt, had not Psammitticus, by flattery and compliments, diverted them. It was not till after twenty-eight years, and the massacre of their chiefs by Cyaxares' orders, that they evacuated Media, or submitted to its king. Much about the same period they seem to have conquered China. About A.M. 3510, the Scythians carried on a furious war with Darius Hystaspes the Persian. About A.M. 3754, the Parthians founded a powerful kingdom in Eastern Persia, which continued 482 or 475 years. Before the birth of our Saviour, the Dacians had begun to ravage the north-east parts of the Roman empire; but were reduced by the emperor Trajan about A.D. 110. The Sarmatæ began their ravaging of Germany about A.D. 69; but were reduced by the Huns about 450, and more fully by the Goths about 500. The Alans began ravaging Media about A.D. 70, and Europe 120; and at last settled in Spain about 409. The Suevi began their ravages about A.D. 85; fixed their residence in Spain 409; and were subdued by the Goths about 585. The Vandals began their murderous incursions about A.D. 166. They ravaged all along from Germany to the Atlantic Ocean, crossed the Mediterranean sea, and erected a kingdom in Africa, 407. Issuing from thence, about 455, they ravaged Sicily and Italy, and pillaged Rome; but, about 536, were subdued by Justinian the emperor of Constantinople. Perhaps the Galles or Giages, in the heart of Africa, are part of their murderous descendants. About, if not before, A.D. 215, the Goths began their terrible ravages of the Roman empire. In A.D. 410, they took and burnt Rome; and about the same time fixed their residence in Italy, Gaul, and Spain. About A.D. 250, the Franks began their ravages; and about 420 settled in Gaul, which, from them, has been since called FRANCE. The Heruli began their ravages about A.D. 256, and, along with others, abolished the Roman empire in 476, but, within about sixty years, were once reduced by the Ostrogoths, and again by the emperor Justinian. About A.D. 257, the Burgundi began their ravages, but were reduced by the Franks about 534. About 269 the Gepidæ began their incursions; but about 572 the Lombards, who had just before established a powerful kingdom in Italy, subdued the rest. The Lombards themselves were reduced by Charles the Great of France and Germany, about 200 years after. From A.D. 376, the Huns committed the most terrible ravages through a great part of Europe, and at last settled in Hungary About the same time the Haiathelite or Ephthalite Huns committed the most shocking depredations in the kingdom of Persia. From about A.D. 485 to 1390, the Bulgars frequently ravaged the eastern empire; but were at last reduced by the Ottoman Turks. Whether the Saxons, who so furiously warred in Germany, and who murdered the Britons of England, and dwelt in their stead; and the Marcomans, Allemans, and Quadi, who bore their part in ravaging the Roman empire, were also of a Scythian or Tartar original, we cannot determine: nor can we say what desolations were made in Tartary by the emigration of such multitudes towards the west. But it is certain, that, by murdering the old inhabitants and one another, a great part of Europe was rendered a shambles of bloodshed and war, and turned into a comparative desert. Nor till many ages afterwards were these countries moderately peopled or cultivated. So general was the destruction, that the language, and even the laws of the Romans or natives were extirpated; and the language of the ravagers, and their feudal system, inhuman diversions, and probations of causes, were everywhere introduced. Thus the TOES of the image appeared as formed of iron and clay; and the grizzled horses of the fourth chariot walked to and fro in the earth; Dan. ii. 33, 41—43; Zech. vi. 7; Rev. vi. 4, 8; viii. 7—12.

About A.D. 1000, Mahmud Gazni, with an army of Tartars and others, founded the empire of the Gaznevides in the East Indies, which continued for some ages powerful and flourishing. While the power of the Saracens was on the decline, multitudes of Turks had gradually poured themselves, from the north-east, into Persia and Mesopotamia. They formed four sultanies or kingdoms near to the Euphrates; that of Bagdad in A.D. 1040 or 1055; of Damascus and Aleppo in 1079; and of Iconium in 1080. The first was by far the most powerful. For more than 200 years, God, by their own mutual contentions, and by the invasions of the European crusades for the recovery of Canaan, and by the invasions of the Tartars, restrained their motions, and kept them as it were, bound by the river Euphrates. Arisen from the smallest beginnings, Jenghiz Khan, an eastern Tartar, and his sons, between 1200 and 1260, conquered most of Asia, and the east of Europe, to the frontiers of Germany. Besides several smaller states in India, &c., they formed the three powerful empires of Kipjak, partly in Europe, and of China and Persia in Asia. None of these continued respectable in the Jenghizan family beyond the 9th or 10th generation. About A.D. 1400, Tamerlane, with a huge army of Tartars, overran Western Asia, murdered an infinity of mankind, many of them in cold blood, and founded the two powerful empires of Persia and Indostan; the last of which, comprehending about thirty-two kingdoms on this side the Ganges, is still governed by his Mogul descendants. Thus God has multiplied Japheth; and made him dwell in the tents of Shem; Gen. ix. 27; Rev. ix. 14.

To avoid the fury of the Jenghizan Tartars, Soliman Shah, a Turkish lord, with his three sons, attempted to cross the Euphrates to the westward. He was drowned in his passage. His two elder sons returned home and submitted to the enemy; and not long after, Ortogrul the youngest, with his sons, Condoz, Sarubani, and Othman, crossed the river, and obtained from the Seljukian sultan of Iconium, a settlement on the western borders of Armenia. Othman from whom the Turks are still called OTTOMANS, becoming a valiant captain, many of the Seljukians deserted their own sultans and joined him. With these he frequently routed the straggling Tartars or his Christian neighbours. His victories made the Ottoman bands prodigiously increase. The strength of their armies generally consisted in horsemen, of whom they have sometimes had a million in pay. Dressed in blue, scarlet, or yellow livery, they were extremely furious, desperate, and cruel; horrid blasphemers; and mad with zeal for the Mahometan delusion. Assisted by newly invented fire-arms of a monstrous size, protected by sparkling breastplates, and steeled in heart with courage and fury, for almost 400 years they spread the most tremendous ravage and murder among the apostate Christians in the west of Asia and south-east of Europe. They began their conquests with the taking of Kutahi in Asia, A.D. 1281 or 1302, and ended them with the taking of Kaminiek in Poland, 1672, or at the peace of Carlowitz in 1698. Under their emperors, Othman, Orchan, Amurath I., Bajazet I., (whom Tamerlane the Tartar so terribly routed, and carried about in an iron cage,) Mahomet I, Amurath II., Mahomet II., Bajazet II., Selim I., Soliman, Selim II., Amurath III., and Mahomet IV., they made themselves masters of the whole of the Eastern Romish empire, from Ethiopia on the south, to Poland on the north; and from near the Caspian Sea on the east, to the Straits of Gibraltar on the west. Few countries, mentioned in Scripture, escaped their conquering fury. Those whom they subdued, though anciently populous, rich, and fertile, were by their murders and tyrannical oppressions, rendered a comparative desert. Instead of hundreds or thousands of wealthy and populous cities, none, except Constantinople in Europe; Smyrna, Bagdad, Aleppo, and Erzerum in Asia; Cairo and Alexandria in Egypt; to which we can scarcely add Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli in Africa, now deserve much notice; Gen. ix. 27; Dan. xi. 40—43; Zech. vi. 7; Rev. ix. 12—21.

What tidings from the north and east shall hereafter terrify the Ottoman empire we know not: but in the beginning of the Millennium we expect the Turks, and their Persian, Ethiopian, Lybian, and Arabian allies, to attack the Jews when just converted to the Christian faith and returned to Canaan, and miserably to perish in the attempt, leaving their carcasses to fatten the fields, and their wealth for a spoil; Ezek. xxxviii, xxxix; Dan. xi. 44, 45. In the end of that happy period we expect the descendants of Magog—Russians, Tartars, and Turks, or other like savages, with their wicked auxiliaries—to attempt an utter destruction of the Christians; but to be destroyed by some ruinous plague; Rev. xx. 8, 9.

XVIII. Notwithstanding God's destruction of the old world by a flood, to purge away its universal corruption, mankind quickly returned to their wonted wickedness, or invented new methods of guilt: and therefore, to preserve religion among them, God selected a peculiar nation for himself. For about 2000 years the Jewish or Hebrew descendants of Shem were the distinguished people of God; Gen. ix. 26. Abraham himself was, for this purpose, separated from the rest of mankind; and he and his promised seed, i. e. those only by Isaac and Jacob, were by solemn covenant adopted into peculiar relation to the Most High. While Abraham himself was a blessing to the nations around he was also highly favoured by God; and Isaac and Jacob were conceived by a supernatural influence; and were, in like manner, by their instructions, example, and otherwise, rendered public blessings to mankind. A seed numerous as the sand was promised to these divinely-confederated patriarchs. But, to exercise their faith and patience, it had, during the first 215 years, increased to no more than 70 persons. In the last half of the 430 years, prescribed by God for their wandering condition, it increased into about three millions, men, women, and children, notwithstanding terrible oppression, and manifold attempts to murder their male children; Gen. xii. 1—3; xiii. 16; xv. 4, 5, 13, 14, 16; xvii. 4—7, 16, 19, 21; xviii. 10, 14; xxi. 1—8, 12; xxii. 17, 18; xxv. 21—34; xxvi. 3, 4; xxvii. 22—29; xxviii. 3, 14, 15; xxxi. 13; xxxv. 11; xlvi; Exod. i; Deut. vii. 7; x. 22; xxvi. 5; Josh. xxiv. 2—4; Ps. cv. 6—24; Isa. li. 12; Acts. vii. 2—18.

When the Hebrews had sojourned in Egypt about 215 years, and had almost for a hundred been cruelly oppressed, God, notwithstanding their sinfulness and many compliances with the heathen abominations, did, in A. M. 2513, miraculously bring them forth from their bondage with great honour and wealth; and, by tenfold plagues, severely punished their Egyptian persecutors; Gen. xv. 14, 16; xlvi. 4; l. 24, 26; Exod. i—xiv; Deut. 11. 2—4; iv. 20, 34, 37; v. 15; vi. 12, 21, 22; vii. 8, 18, 19; ix. 26; xiii. 10; xvi. 1; xxvi. 6—8; Josh. xxiv. 5—7; Judg. ii. 1; x. 11; 1 Sam. xii. 6, 8; Neh. ix. 9—11; Ps. lxvi. 5—12; lxxvii. 14—20; cxiv. 1; lxxx. 8; lxxxi. 5—7; lxxviii. 12, 43—52; cv. 26—38; cvi. 7—12; cxxxv. 8, 9; cxxxvi. 10—15; lxxiv. 12—15; lxxxix. 10; Isa. li. 9, 10; lxiii. 9—15; Jer. xxxii. 20, 21; ii. 6; Ezek. xvi. 2—7; xx. 5—10; xxiii. 3; Acts vii. 18—36; xiii. 17.

Notwithstanding their frequent murmurings, renewed rebellions, and repeated idolatries, God for forty years guided and protected them in the wilderness by a miraculous pillar of cloud; fed them with manna from heaven, and with water from the flinty rocks of Rephidim and Kadesh; and twice regaled them with the flesh of quails. In the most solemn manner he gave them his laws, and appointed them governors in church and state for the execution of them. His tabernacle was erected among them, and their tents regularly pitched around it. And, having by diversified plagues cut off that wicked generation who contemned his promised Canaan, he, by a miraculous passage through Jordan, and by manifold victories over the natives, gave them the possession of that country. His tabernacle was erected in the middle of the land; his covenant of peculiar friendship renewed with them; and the influences of his Holy Spirit remarkably bestowed upon them; Gen. xii. 2, 7; xiii. 14—17; xv. 7—21; xvii. 7, 8, 21; xxi. 12; xxii. 17, 18; xxiv. 60; xxvi. 3, 4; xxvii. 28, 29; xxviii. 3, 4, 13—15; xxxv. 11, 12; l. 24, 25; Exod. iii. 8; vi. 4—8; xv. 13—17; xxiii. 23—31; xxxiii. 14; xxxiv. 10, 11; Num. xiv. 31; xv. 1; xxvi. 53—55; xxxiii. 51—54; xxxiv; xxxv. 10; Deut. i. 7, 8; iv. 1; v. 16; vi. 1, 3, 10, 18; vii. 1, 2, 20—24; viii. 7—9; ix. 1—3; xi. 10, 21—25; xii. 9, 10, 29; xxvi. 1; xxx. 18, 20; xxxi. 13; xxxii. 8—14; xxxiii; xxxiv. 4; Josh. i. 2—6; iii. 10—13; vi. 3—5; viii. 1, 2; x. 8; xi. 6; Exod. xv—xl; Lev. i—xxvii; Num. i—xxxvi; Deut. i—xxxiv; Josh. i—xxiv; Neh. ix. 12—25; Ps. xliv. 3, 4; lxvi. 11, 12; lxxvii. 14—20; lxxviii. 12—55; lxxx. 8—11; xc; xcv. 8—11; xcix. 6—8; cv. 39—45; cvi. 7—33; cvii. 1—7; cxiv. 1—8; cxxxv. 10—12; cxxxvi. 16—22; Isa. xlviii. 21; lxiii. 9—14; Jer. ii. 2, 3, 6, 7; xxxi. 2; xxxii. 21, 22; Ezek. xvi. 2—14; xx. 10—23, 35; Acts vii. 36—45; xiii. 18, 19.

Their situation and fate in Canaan exactly corresponded with the benedictions of Jacob and Moses; Gen. xlix; Deut. xxxiii. Their territory was about 180 miles in length from north to south, and 80 in breadth from east to west. The river Jordan, (which, taking its rise in Lebanon, and running southward, formed in its course the lake of Merom, and the far larger sea of Chinneroth, Galilee, or Tiberias,) together with the brooks and rivulets which crossed the country, and a multitude of fruitful hills and valleys, rendered it exceedingly pleasant and fertile. Lebanon on the north, Hermon and Gilead on the east, Tabor in the middle, and north Carmel on the west, were some of the more delightful mountains. This territory comprehended about 9,231,000 acres of ground, which, after saving perhaps two millions for the Levitical cities, and for the chiefs of families, allowed each of the 601,730 warriors who conquered it about twelve acres a-piece. The arable grounds yielded sometimes sixty or an hundred fold. The rich pastures produced large quantities of milk and honey. Thus, by the blessing of God, their land was fully capable of maintaining its numerous inhabitants. The Reubenites, Gadites, and half-tribe of Manassch, had their portions on the east of Jordan; Num. xxxii; Deut. iii; Josh. xiii. The portion of the REUBENITES lay on the north-east of the Dead Sea of Sodom, and north of the river Arnon. It included Peor, Nebo, and Pisgah, hills which at present make a very rugged appearance. Their principal cities were Heshbon, Jahaz, Bamoth-baal, Beth-peor, Medeba, Adam, Shittim, Bezer, Mephaath, Beth-jeshimoth, &c.; part of which the Moabites afterwards took from them; Num. xxxii. 3, 37, 38; Deut. iii. 12, 16; Josh. xiii. 15—21; xxi. 36, 37; 1 Chr. vi. 78, 79; with Isa. xv. 2, 4, 6; xvi. 9; Jer. xlviii. 21—24. Northward of the Reubenites the children of Gad had their inheritance in a soil more plain and fertile. Their principal cities were Dihon, Ataroth, Aroer, Jazer, Enon, Succoth, Penuel, Mahanaim, East Mizpeh, Ramoth-gilead, &c.; part of which were afterwards seized by the Ammonites and Moabites; Num. xxxii. 34—36; Josh. xiii. 24—28; xxi. 38, 39; 1 Chr. vi. 80, 81; with Jer. xlviii. 21—24; xlix. 2. Northward of the Gadites, in the large territory of Galilee of the Gentiles, were seated the Eastern MANASSITES. Their principal cities were Edrei, Ashtaroth, Golan, Geshur, Sharon, Jabesh-Gilead, Chorazin, Bethsaida, Girgasha, Gadara, &c.; Num. xxxii. 39—42; Deut. iii. 14, 15; Josh. xiii. 29—31; 1 Chr. vi. 71; Mat. xi. 21; Luke viii. 26. Nine tribes and a half had their portions on the west of Jordan. In the south parts, westward of the Dead Sea, JUDAH had a large inheritance of about a hundred fenced cities, among which were Libnah, Makkedah, Azekah, Engaddi, Adullam, Hebron, South Bethlehem, Beth-shemesh, Gath, Ekron, Ashdod, Askelon, and Gaza; which last five the Philistines long retained; Josh. xv; xxi. 13—16; 2 Chr. xi. 5—10; Neh. xi. 25—30. The SIMEONITES had their portion out of the south-west part of the territory of Judah. Their chief cities were Beer-sheba, Hormah, Ziklag, &c.; Josh. xix. 2—8. The BENJAMITES had a small strip along the north border of Judah: it included Jericho, Beth-el, Gibeon, Gibeah, Ramah, Gilgal, Mizpeh, Bahurim, Nob, Anathoth, Lod, Hadid, and Ono, and the northern half of Jerusalem; Josh. xviii. 11—28; xxi. 17, 18; Neh. xi. 31—35; 1 Chr. vi. 60; Ezra ii. 33. The DANITES had their portion on the west of the Benjamites. Their chief cities were Zorah, Eshtaol, South Gath-rimmon, Aijalon, Ekron, Gibbethon, if not also Joppa; Josh. xix. 40—47; xxi. 23, 24; 1 Chr. vi. 69. Along the north border of Benjamin and Dan the EPHRAIMITES had their portion. It abounded with pleasant hills; Ephraim, Gerizzim, Ebal, Zalmon, or Salmon, &c. The principal cities were Sharon, Lydda, two Beth-horons, Shechem, Samaria, Beth-el, Shiloh, Najoth, Gezer, &c.

Northward of this was the portion of the Western MANASSITES. Their principal cities were Taanach, Beth-shean, Endor, Megiddo, Salem, Bezek, Thebez, North Gath-rimmon, Tirzah, Cesarea, Antipatris; Josh. xvi, xvii; xxi. 21—25; 1 Chr. vi. 66—70; Gen. xiv. 18; 1 Sam. xi. 8; Judg. ix. 47—50; i. 27; 1 Kin. xvi. 8,9; Acts ix. 35, 36; xxiii. 31, 33. Along the north border of these Manassites was seated the tribe of ISSACHAR. Their chief cities were Kishon, North Jarmuth, Tabor, Nain, Jezreel, Aphek, &c. Here were the mounts Tabor, Gilboa, and North Carmel, and the famed valley of Jezreel; Josh. xix. 17—23; xxi. 28, 29; 1 Chr. vi. 72, 73; Luke vii. 11; 1 Kin. xxi. 1; xx. 30; xviii. 20; Judg. iv. 6; viii. 18; 1 Sam. xxxi. 1; Isa. xxxv. 2; Hos. i. 5. Along the north border of the men of Issachar the ZEBULUNITES had their portion; which, as well as the three preceding, extended all along from Jordan on the east to the Mediterranean Sea on the west; and contained the rivers Kishon and Belus, if not also part of mount Tabor. The chief cities were Cinnereth, or Tiberias, Cana of Galilee, Gennesaret, North Beth-lehem, &c.; Josh. xix. 10—16; xxi. 34, 35; Judg. i. 38; John vi. 1; ii. 1; Mat. xiv. 34. Northward of the Zebulunites, on the west side, were seated the tribe of ASHER; whose principal cities were Rehob, North Hebron or Abdon, Aphek, Beth-shemesh, Kanah, Accho or Ptolemais; Josh. xix. 24—31; xxi. 30, 31; Judg. i. 31; 1 Chr. vi. 74, 75; Acts xxi. 7; and on the east side was the portion of the NAPHTHALITES; whose principal cities were Hammah, Ramah, Hazor, Kedesh, Beth-shemesh; Kirjath-sepher, Capernaum, &c.; Josh. xix. 32—38; xxi. 32; 1 Chr. vi. 76; Judg. i. 33; Mat. xi. 23. This and the three next preceding portions lay mostly in Lower or Western Galilee.

In correspondence with the legal dispensation they were under, and that they might be standing emblems of the people of God in their imperfect state, the Hebrews were generally happy or miserable as they obeyed or disobeyed the divine Lord of their country. Neglect to extirpate the idolatrous Canaanites issued in their sudden and often repeated apostasy from God to the like abominations. This JEHOVAH punished with repeated and grievous oppressions by the Mesopotamians, the Moabites, the Canaanites, the Midianites, the Ammonites, and Philistines. But upon their repentance, he delivered them by Othniel, Ehud, Barak, Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, and Samuel, their judges; Exod. xxiii. 24, 32, 33; xxxiv. 12—17; Lev. xviii. 24—30; Num. xxxiii. 52—56; Deut. iv—xiii; xxviii—xxxii; vii. 2—5, 16, 25, 26; xviii. 9—12; xx. 16—18; Josh. xxiii. 4—16; xxiv. 20; Judg. i—xxi; 1 Sam. i—vii; 2 Kin. xvii. 7—23; Neh. ix. 26—31; Ps. cvi. 34—46; lxxviii. 56—67; Ezek. xx. 25—29; xvi. 15—34.

About A.M. 2909, or rather twenty or thirty years later, the Hebrews, wearied of their immediate subjection to God and his occasional deputy judges, desired to have a king like their heathen neighbours. Their sinful desire was granted; but it did not alter the tenor of their happiness and misery to their advantage. Under Saul, their first king, they were reduced to the very brink of ruin; but under David and Solomon, who succeeded him, their glory and happiness were advanced to the highest, correspondent to the blessings of Isaac, Jacob, and Moses. The whole of the Canaanites who remained among them were reduced to slavery; and all the nations, from the river of Egypt on the south-west to the Euphrates on the north-east, Philistines, Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and Syrians, were rendered their tributaries; Lev. xxvi; Deut. iv—xii, xxviii, xxxii. 15—43; 1 Sam. viii. 11—18; xii. 14, 15, 25; xvi. 1—13; xxiii. 17; xxiv. 20; xxv. 30; xxvi. 25; 2 Sam. vii. 10—16; 1 Chr. xvii. 9—14; Gen. xxvii. 28, 29; xlix; Deut. xxxiii; Ps. xx, xxi, lx, lxvi, lxxxix. 3, 4, 19—29; lxxii, cxxxii; 1 Sam. viii—xxxi; 2 Sam. i—xxiv; 1 Chr. x—xxix; 1 Kin. i—x; 2 Chr. i—ix; Ps. xviii, cxliv, lxxviii. 67—72.

To punish the apostasy of Solomon and his subjects, God, before his death, began to chastise them, by means of Hadad the Edomite and of Rezon the Syrian. Immediately after it the ten tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, Simeon, Dan, Reuben, Gad, Issachar, Zebulun, Asher, and Naphtali, in A.M. 3075, revolted from the royal family of David, and formed a distinct kingdom of their own; which, under nineteen wicked sovereigns, of nine different families, continued 254 years. To prevent their travelling up to the solemn feasts at Jerusalem, Jeroboam, an Ephraimite, their first king, established among them the idolatrous worship of the golden calves. To these Omri and Ahab added other idolatrous abominations, still more hateful. Notwithstanding the faithful warnings of Ahijah the Shilonite, and of the man of God from Judah, and of Jehu the son of Hanani, and of Micaiah, and of the wonder-working Elijah, and Elisha, and of Jonah, Amos, Hosea, and other prophets in their respective ages, the ten tribes continued obstinate in their iniquity, particularly, in worshipping the calves of Beth-el and Dan. The frequent murder of their kings, especially just before the ruin of their monarchy, and the civil wars attending it; their repeated wars with the kingdom of Judah; and especially the invasions of the Syrians and Assyrians; rendered them generally miserable. The craft of Jeroboam I.; the valour of Baasha; the miraculous victories of Ahab; the successful wars of Jehoash, Jeroboam II., and Pekah; quickly issued in the ruin of their families and the distress of their kingdom. Of the eleven contemporary kings of Judah, only Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Jotham, were indisputably pious; and prosperity attended their reigns, and that of Uzziah. Rehoboam's inconsistency, and Joash's apostasy, were punished by Egyptian and Syrian invasions. Under the wicked reigns of Jehoram, Ahaziah, and Ahaz, the nation was reduced to the very brink of destruction. Ignorance; ingratitude; contempt of God, and his oracles and ordinances; breach of covenant with him; idolatry; devilish divinations; alliances with heathens around, and dependence on them instead of God; pride; hypocrisy; scornful obstinacy in wickedness; neglect of relative duties; selfishness; hatred; bloodshed; luxury; lewdness; injustice; oppression; falsehood; deceit; envy; covetousness; and every similar form of iniquity, having long prevailed among all ranks in Israel and Judah, God, by the Assyrians, fearfully punished them. After Pul and Tiglath-pileser had distressed and weakened the kingdom of Israel, Shalmaneser quite destroyed it in A.M. 3283: and, with Esarhaddon his grandson, about forty years after, carried off the poor remains of the ten tribes to Media and other eastern parts of their empire; whence few, if any of them, ever returned to Canaan. From A.M. 3290 to 3294, Sennacherib terribly ravaged the kingdom of Judah, and took most if not all their fenced cities, except Jerusalem. But, when he had brought up his forces to attack that sacred capital, God, in answer to Hezekiah and Isaiah's prayers, by an angel cut off 185,000 of them in one night, and delivered the city; Lev. xxvi. 14—39; Deut. iv. 25—28; xxviii. 15—68; xxix. 18—28; xxx. 18; xxxi. 16—20; xxxii. 15—30; Josh. xxiii. 13—16; xxiv. 20; 1 Sam. xii. 25; 2 Sam. vii. 14—16; 1 Chr. xvii. 13, 14; Ps. lxxxix. 30—51; 1 Kings ix. 6—9; xi. 9—13, 26—39; xiv. 7—16; xvi. 2—4; xvii. 1; xviii. 41, 45; xx. 13, 28, 42; xix. 17; xxi. 21—24, 29; xxii. 15, 17, 28; 2 Chr. xviii. 6, 27; 2 Kin. i. 6, 16; iii. 17, 18; 2 Chr. xx. 15—17; Ps. lxxxiii. 1—18; 2 Chr. xxi. 12—15; xxiv. 20; 2 Kin. ix. 7—10; x. 30; viii. 10—13; xiii. 17—19; xiv. 25; Hos. i. 4, 5; Amos vii. 9; ii—ix; Mic. i—iii, iv. 11—13; vi, vii; Hos. i, ii. 2—13; iv—xiii; Is. i—x, xvii, xxii—xxiv; 1 Kin. xi—xxii; 2 Kin. i—xix; 2 Chr. x—xxvi, xxxii; 2 Kin. xvii. 7—23; Is. xxxvi—xxxix.

Though the Jews had been severely punished for their hypocrisy and lukewarmness in the reformation attempted by king Hezekiah, and notwithstanding the manifold warnings of Hosea, Isaiah, Micah, and other prophets, yet they ungratefully abused their deliverance from the Assyrians, and the unnumbered mercies of both church and state consequent thereto. A most shocking scene of idolatry, murder, witchcraft, and everything horrid, opened under king Manasseh, about A.M. 3306; which, notwithstanding his own repentance, and the piety and zealous reformation of Josiah his grandson, issued in the ruin of the state. After Josiah's death in A.M. 3394, both kings and subjects abandoned themselves to the most enormous impieties; to contempt and forgetfulness of God; to hypocrisy in, or profane neglect or abuse of, his worship; to carnal confidence in themselves or their heathen allies; to profane swearing, and open violation of the sabbath; to neglect of relative duties, and want of natural affection; to hatred, murder, luxury, whoredom, perverting of judgment, falsehood, slander, and covetousness. To punish these and their other enormites, under Manasseh and Amon, the Lord gave them up into the hands, first of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and then of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon. He, in different invasions, wasted their country, carried captive their princes and people who escaped his sword, and in A.M. 3416, burnt their cities and temple, and rendered their land a desolate wilderness. While Daniel, and others, who were first carried prisoners to Babylon, were kindly and sometimes honourably used, those who came after were treated with much severity, contempt, and derision. Such of the poor as were left in Canaan, and those who acceded to them, quickly after the murder of Gedaliah by Ishmael, retired to Egypt, where they mostly perished in a few years, when Nebuchadnezzar ravaged that country; Lev. xviii. 28, 29; xxvi. 14—39; Deut. iv. 25—28; xxvii. 14—26; xxviii. 15—68; xxix. 18—28; xxx. 17, 18; xxxi. 17—19; xxxii. 15—30; Josh. xxiii. 13—16; xxiv. 20; 1 Kin. ix. 6—9; 2 Chr. vii. 19—22; xxxiv. 23—28; 2 Kin. xx. 17, 18; xxi. 11—15; xxii. 16—20; Mic. iv. 10, 11; ii, iii, vi, vii; Hab. i—iii. 16; Zeph. i—ii. 1—3; iii. 1—8; Hos. vi. 11; Amos ii. 4, 5; v, vi; ix. 1—10; Is. i—v; vi. 9—12; ix. 13—21; xxiv; xxvii. 10, 11; xxviii. 14—22; xxx. 1—17; xlii. 17—25; lviii. 1—5; lix. 1—15; Ezek. ii—xxiv; Jer. i—xliv, lii; 2 Kin. xxiv, xxv; 2 Chr. xxxvi; Lam. i—v; Jer. xxiv, xxix; Dan. i—v.

When the Jews, who were first carried captive, had been just seventy years in Babylon, Cyrus, the Persian, who had, about two years before, taken Babylon and abolished the power of the Chaldeans by a solemn proclamation, A.M. 3468, commissioned them to return to their country and rebuild the temple of their God. To encourage them, he restored the sacred vessels which Nebuchadnezzar had brought away; and ordered his lieutenants on the west of the Euphrates to assist them with materials and money. About 30,000 of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and perhaps 12,000 of the other tribes immediately returned, under the direction of Zerubbabel and of Joshua the high priest. Notwithstanding much opposition and trouble, in twenty years they rebuilt the temple and established the worship of God. About seventy years after, Ezra and Nehemiah, as deputies of the Persian king, reformed their corruptions, and rebuilt the wall of Jerusalem. The Jews meanwhile astonishingly increased in numbers, and enjoyed a tolerable degree of happiness. The Ammonites, Moabites, Samaritans, Philistines, Edomites, and Arabians, indeed took every opportunity to harass them; and Haman the Amalekite, by a plot, brought them to the very brink of destruction. But God, by means of Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and Mordecai, frustrated their attempts. Excepting that Artaxerxes Ochus, about 3653, ravaged their country, and transported multitudes of them into Egypt, or to the east of Media, for slaves, the Persian kings generally favoured them. But neither their mercies nor judgments restrained them from wickedness. They indeed from this time abhorred idolatry, which they reckoned the chief cause of their Chaldean captivity; but indulged themselves in marriages with the heathens; in cruelty to their Hebrew wives; in contempt of God's ordinances, and profanation of his sabbaths; and the like; Gen. xvii. 7, 8; Lev xxvi. 40—45; Deut. iv. 29—31; xxx. 1—10; xxxii. 35—43; 1 Kin. viii. 46—50; Neh. i. 8, 9; Ps. lxviii. 22; lxix. 35, 36; Is. i. 25, 27; iv. 2—6; xi. 11—

While the Grecian armies, between A.M. 3672 and 3834, so often marched through the country of the Jews which lay between Syria and Egypt, God protected them in a marvellous manner. About 3672, Alexander the Great marched against them, to punish their assisting his obstinate opposers of Tyre. But the humble supplication of their high priest entirely stifled his resentment, and secured his favour. He offered large sacrifices to their God, and confirmed to them whatever privileges they had enjoyed under the Persian kings. Having built Alexandria in Egypt, he settled multitudes of Jews therein, and allowed them the same privileges as his Macedonian subjects. About 3684, Ptolemy Lagus, king of Egypt, to revenge the attachment of the Jews to Laomedon his rival, furiously ravaged their country, and carried 100,000 of them prisoners to Egypt; but he there used them so kindly, even promoting them to places of power and trust, that many others followed them thither of their own accord. Seleucus Nicator of Syria, having built thirty-five, if not forty, new cities; sixteen of which he called Antioch, after his father; nine Seleucia, after himself; six Laodicea, after his mother; three Apamea, and one Stratonice, after his wives; placed in them as many Jews as he could, and assigned them the same privileges as they had at Alexandria in Egypt. About 3720, Philadelphus king of Egypt, at his own expense, ransomed all the Jews who were enslaved in his dominions, and gave them their freedom. It is said, that he, or Euergetes his son, procured a Greek translation of their laws for the use of his famous library. Ptolemy Philopater offered large thank-offerings at the temple of Jerusalem for the victory which he obtained over Antiochus the Great; but, enraged that their priests or their God had hindered his access into the HOLY OF HOLIES, upon his return to Egypt he terribly oppressed the Jews there, depriving them of their privileges and assembled multitudes of them, in order to have them devoured by ravenous beasts. Instead of hurting the Jews, the animals furiously turned upon, and devoured the heathen spectators. Provoked by his barbarity, the Jews of Canaan readily submitted to Antiochus the Great who had invaded their country. He repaired their temple at his own expense; complimented them with 20,000 pieces of silver, 1400 measures of wheat, and 375 of salt for its service; and confirmed to them all their privileges which had been granted by Alexander the Great. As Jerusalem was much depopulated, he exempted from tribute, for three years, such as would settle in it, and commanded all his subjects to let their Jewish slaves go free. But Scopas, the Egyptian general, quickly forced the Jews to return to the obedience of his master, and placed a garrison at Jerusalem. About A.M. 3828, Heliodore of Syria, by order of his master Seleucus, attempted to pillage the temple of Jerusalem; but an angel affrighted him from the undertaking; and soon after he was permitted to poison his master, and thus hasten ruin upon himself; Joel iii. 16, 17; Ps. lxviii. 29, 30; Ezek. xxvi. 20; xxi. 27; Dan. ix. 25; xi. 14, 16, 20. Zech. ii. 8; ix. 8; viii. 20.

Antiochus Epiphanes was scarcely fixed upon the Syro-Grecian throne when the Jews severely felt his madness and fury. Because Onias their high priest refused to comply with some heathen abominations, he turned him out of his office, and sold it to Jason his more complaisant brother, for 350 talents of silver. Disgusted with Jason, he quickly turned him out, and sold it to Menelaus, another brother, for 650 talents. When Antiochus was in Egypt, about A.M. 3834, the Jews, falsely informed of his death, made public demonstrations of their joy; and Jason attempted to recover the high priesthood. Provoked by this, and detesting their peculiar manner of worship, Antiochus, in his return homeward, forced his way into Jerusalem, murdered 40,000 of the inhabitants, and sold as many more for slaves. He carried off 1800 talents of the sacred money, and a great part of the furniture of the temple; and made two of his most inhuman favourites governors of the country. About two years after, mad with rage that the Romans had frustrated his designs upon Egypt, he ordered his troops, in their return through Judea, to pillage the cities, murder such as were able for war, and sell the women and children for slaves. Upon the sabbath, when the Jews superstitiously declined to fight, his troops entered Jerusalem, killed multitudes in cold blood, and carried off 10,000 prisoners. They erected a fort hard by the temple, whence they might sally forth and murder such as dared to worship there. Not long after Antiochus dedicated the temple itself to Jupiter Olympius, a chief idol of the Greeks, and erected his statue upon the altar of burnt-offering. For 2300 mornings and evenings, or 1150 days, the daily sacrifice was entirely stopped, and the temple rendered a scene of idolatry, lewdness, and murder. Such Jews as refused to worship idols, or eat swine's flesh, were exposed to all the horrors of persecution, torture, and death. Eleazar, and a widow, with her seven sons, were the most distinguished martyrs. Others, hazarding everything dear, instructed their neighbours, and warned them to avoid every sinful compliance. Mattathias, a priest, and his sons, Judas, Jonathan, Simon, &c., commonly called MACCABEES, took arms, and, with astonishing bravery and conduct, defended their religion and liberties. After many lesser advantages, Judas, who succeeded his father in the command, gave Nicanor, the Syro-Grecian general, a terrible defeat, A.M. 3839; recovered the temple; repaired and purified it, and restored the worship of God; and repaired Jerusalem, which had been reduced to almost a ruinous heap. After he had, with a handful of troops, for some years proved a terrible scourge to the Syro-Grecians, Edomites, Arabs, and other heathens around, he was slain A.M. 3843, and Jonathan his brother succeeded him. He, and Simon his brother who succeeded him, with astonishing bravery and prudence continued to rectify the disorders of both church and state. Onias the high priest, son of the above-mentioned, having settled in Egypt, where he afterwards built a temple for those of his nation according to the form of that at Jerusalem, these Maccabees officiated in Canaan both as high priests and as civil governors; but were both at last treacherously murdered. About A.M. 3869, Hircanus succeeded Simon his father. He first procured a peace with the now weakened Syro-Grecians, and then revolted from their yoke, and rendered himself an independent sovereign of the Jews. He subdued the Edomites, and forced them to embrace the Jewish religion. He reduced the Samaritans, and demolished Shechem and Samaria, their capitals, and razed their temple on Mount Gerizzim. Alexander Janneus his son, after a short reign of Aristobulus his brother, succeeded him in A.M. 3899. He reduced the Philistines, obliged them to embrace the Jewish religion, and burnt Gaza their capital into a ruinous heap. He also reduced the Moabites, Ammonites, and part of the Arabians. Never since the days of Solomon had the dominion of the Jewish nation been so extensive. Never, but under these three reigns, were they, after the captivity, independent of the heathen powers, Persians, Greeks, or Romans; Dan. viii. 9—14, 23—35; ix. 25; xi. 28—35; Zech. xiv. 1—3; xiii; viii. 8, 9; xii. 2—8; x. 1—7; ix. 13—16; Is. xlix. 24—26; lxiii. 1—4; Mic. iv. 12, 13; Ob. 17—21; Ezek. xxv. 14; Zeph. ii. 7—9; Is. xi. 14; Num. xxiv. 17—19; Amos ix. 11—15.

By his cruelties, and other misconduct, Alexander had exceedingly disgusted many of his subjects, particularly the Pharisees. After his death in A.M. 3925, his widow, with no small prudence, governed the nation for nine years. She was scarcely in her grave when Aristobulus her younger son, joined by multitudes of those who hated the Pharisees, contended for the crown and high priesthood against Hircanus, his elder but indolent brother. Finding that the Arabs assisted Hircanus, he, in A.M. 3940, applied to the Romans for help. But they, turning his enemy under Pompey, quickly reduced the country. He and several of his captains pushed their way into the Holy of Holies. And soon after Crassus, another Roman, bent on his fatal Parthian expedition, pillaged the temple of about 10,000 talents of silver. After Judea had for thirty-two years been a continued scene of ravage and bloodshed, Herod, the son of Antipater, who had acted as a principal incendiary by the assistance of Antony the Roman triumvir, obtained the crown through much barbarity and murder. Finding that neither force nor flattery could render him, who was a Gentile—at least by his father—and who, to please Augustus the emperor, had made heathen compliances, quiet on his throne, he, in A.M. 3984, resolved to recommend himself by rebuilding their ruinous temple. Within three years and a half the principal parts were finished in a most magnificent form. It took eight years more for the rest. Nay, in A.M. 4033, it appears not to have been finished; Ezek. xxi. 26, 27; Hag. ii. 6, 7, 22; Mic. v. 1, 3; Zech. xiv. 1, 2; Mal. iv. 1; John ii. 20.

When the long promised Messiah appeared in the flesh, A.M. 4000, the Jews, finding their carnal imaginations and expectations nowise answered in him, notwithstanding the clearest evidence in his doctrine, miracles, and behaviour, rejected and ignominiously crucified him; and did what they could to prevent the spread of his gospel among the Gentiles. To mark him actually come, the sceptre gradually departed from them. He had scarcely made his appearance in the temple, in the twelfth year of his age, when Judea was reduced into a Roman province. When he died, about twenty-four years after, they seem to have had no power of life and death in their hands. After the conversion of the centurion and his friends, Acts x., we find not the least vestige of civil power among them independent of the Romans. The destruction of the Galileans at the temple by Pilate; the destruction of others by the falling tower of Siloam; the self-destruction of Judas the traitor; the alarming exit of Ananias and Sapphira; the consumption of Herod by worms; the blindness of Elymas the sorcerer; the murder of about a hundred thousand Jews in Egypt, Syria, and Canaan, by their heathen neighbours, were but foreboding earnests of the fearful miseries of that nation for the rejection of Jesus Christ. The appearance of pretended Messiahs, Simon, Dositheus, Theudas, Felix the Egyptian, and many others; the astonishing spread of the gospel through the Roman empire; and the persecution of Christians by Jews and heathens, and even by the edicts of Nero the emperor; the multitudes of earthquakes in Europe, Lesser Asia, &c.; the continued rumours of war, which disheartened many of the Jews from the cultivation of their fields; the hanging of a star, shaped like a sword, over Jerusalem for a whole year; the nocturnal blazing of a noontide light, about midnight, over the temple and places about, for half an hour, at the feast of tabernacles; a cow's bringing forth a lamb while she was led forward to the altar for sacrifice; the spontaneous opening of the east gate of the temple whilst shut with strong bolts, though twenty men could in general scarcely open it; the apparitions of armies in the air, fighting battles and besieging cities; the unaccountable and absolutely obstinate crying of a country fellow, called Jesus, in the city for more than seven years, especially at the solemn feasts, "Wo to Jerusalem—Wo to the people—Wo to the temple;" and who, while at last he added, "Wo to myself," was struck dead on the spot; were providential omens thereof; Ps. xxii. 6—20; xxxv. 11—26; lxix. 1—21; Prov. i. 20—35; Is. viii. 14, 15; xlix. 4, 7; l.

About A. D. 67, Cestius Gallus, the Roman governor of Syria, having invested Jerusalem, raised the siege without any visible reason, and retired with the Jews at his heels. Taking this opportunity, the Christians, as directed by their Lord, left the city, and retired to Pella beyond Jordan, where Providence protected them; Mat. xxiv. 14, 16; Mark xiii. 14, 15; Luke xxi. 20, 21. Not long after, Vespasian, whom God just then marvellously advanced to the Roman throne, in A.D. 69, invaded their country from the north-east, and quickly spread murder and flames all along to the south-west. Beginning at Galilee, where the inhabitants of Chorazin, Bethsaida, Nazareth, and Capernaum, had been principal rejecters of Jesus Christ, he took the cities by force, burnt them into heaps, and murdered almost every inhabitant. The Jews resisted with madness, and chose rather to murder themselves than surrender to the most compassionate generals. Nowhere was the scene more shocking than at Jerusalem, where the worship of God had been long profaned, and our Lord had been crucified. The Romans invested the city, while the Jews, not only from Canaan, but from the countries around, were assembled to keep their passover, perhaps to the number of two or three millions. Thus their solemn feast which commemorated their miraculous deliverance from Egypt, and which prefigured Jesus' death, and at which he had been crucified, became their snare and trap. Split into three different factions, the besieged Jews spent their time in barbarously murdering one another, or united in desperate but unsuccessful sallies against the Romans. Some even in sport murdered their fellows, to try the sharpness of their swords. At last the faction, headed by Eleazar, was treacherously massacred; and, while the heaps of unburied corpses occasioned a pestilence, their destruction of each other's magazines hastened a terrible famine. Even the most delicate ladies were obliged to broil their infants for food. Meanwhile the Jews scorned every gracious proposal which the compassionate Titus, now general for Vespasian his father, could make them. Having besieged the city about six months, the Romans, A.D. 70, forced their way into it from the east. Provoked with the obstinacy of the besieged, they murdered every one they met with. While the streets ran with blood, the air was filled with groans of the dying, the howlings of the terrified, and the desperate outcries of the ravished; and the flames of the burning city ascended up to heaven. Instigated by a pretended Messiah, 6000 took refuge in the temple. Titus was extremely bent upon preserving it; but one of his soldiers, by casting a brand, set it on fire. Nor could all his authority make his loving and obedient troops so much as attempt to quench the flames. The outcries of the Jewish beholders became then absolutely infernal. Not long after its rival temple in Egypt, built by Onias, shared a similar fate. Jerusalem was turned into a ruinous heap. The foundations of the temple were ploughed up, probably in quest of treasure; and, for the like reason, much of the rubbish of the houses was turned up; and it is said, not only the bellies of the dead, but of the living, were ripped up, for the sake of the gold which they were supposed to have swallowed. Besides 257,660, who perished in other places, 1,100,000 are said to have lost their lives at Jerusalem alone. Titus caused the ringleaders in the rebellion to be crucified all round the city, till no more wood for crosses could be had. About 97,000 were taken prisoners. Many of these were sent into Egypt by sea to be slaves. About 11,000 perished with hunger. Part were transported to Syria to be devoured by wild beasts in the public diversions, or sold at the lowest rate for slaves. Not one descendant of David that could be found was left alive. Nevertheless, multitudes of Jews still remained in the Roman empire. These, about A.D. 119, murdered about 500,000 of the Roman subjects, Christians and heathens. But Trajan the valiant emperor, with no small difficulty, and with terrible bloodshed, reduced them. About A.D. 134, Ælius Adrian, the emperor, prohibited them from circumcising their children, and appointed a colony of heathens to rebuild Jerusalem and name it Ælia, after himself. About 200,000 Jews assembling under Barcocab, one of the banditti, who had for a century before infested Canaan with their robberies, and now a pretended Messiah, murdered the Roman subjects wherever they could find them. With no small difficulty the Romans defeated them in battle After a siege of three years they took Bitter their capital. Fifty other garrisons quickly surrendered. In this war about 600,000 Jews are said to have been slain by the sword, besides those who perished by fire, famine, or pestilence. For several years fairs were held in Syria for selling the prisoners; and of those who were transported to Egypt, many perished by hunger, shipwreck, and massacres. Adrian built his city on mount Calvary; and, in contempt of the Jews, erected a marble statue of a swine over its principal gate. For about 500 years after this, they durst not, without bribing the soldiers or hazarding their lives, approach near the ruins of their once sacred capital.

Since this period the Jews have continued scattered among all nations, obstinately adhering to their ancient and distinguished ceremonies, in contempt of Christ; their numerous pretenders to Messiahship in every age and nation having hardened them in their delusions, and drawn upon them an infinity of mischiefs. Dreadful have been their persecutions by the kings of Persia, Roman emperors, Arabian caliphs, kings of Spain, France, England, and princes of Germany; and often from the groundless fury of the enraged populace in these places. A few instances shall represent their miserable condition.

About the beginning of the fifth century of the Christian era, the people of Macedonia, Dacia, Syria, and Minorca, murdered multitudes of them on account of their insulting their religion, and forced the remainder to hide themselves in dens and caves of the earth. In the sixth century, Julian, their pretended Messiah, and his followers drew upon themselves, by their insolence, the death of 20,000, and the enslavement of as many more. In the eleventh twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth centuries, the popish crusaders murdered them almost wherever they could find them; while the Jews themselves murdered their own children, that the crusaders might not cause them to be baptized. About the beginning of the thirteenth century, Nasser the Arabian caliph, provoked by their madly running after pretended Messiahs, scarcely left one of them alive in Mesopotamia and the places around. After various confiscations of goods, banishments, and bloody massacres, they were finally expelled from England by king Edward, A.D. 1291, to the number of 160,000. Edward permitted them to transport their substance to France; but there, in his own dominions, he confiscated it for himself; so that most of them perished through want. After several banishments and massacres, they were, in 1300, finally expelled from France. About 1492 the Spaniards banished six or eight hundred thousand of them. Most of these perished by shipwreck, or through the inhumanity of the Africans. Many of their carcasses lay unburied. Between A.D. 1663 and 1666, scarcely any of them were left alive in the Persian empire. To save their lives or wealth, many of them have, from age to age, pretended to embrace the Romish idolatry. Perhaps at present sixteen or twenty thousand of them are professed papists in Portugal and Spain, and not a few of them in clerical orders. These their friends endeavour to have circumcised at death; Lev. xxvi. 14—39; Deut. iv. 26—28; xxviii. 49—68; xxix. 18—28; xxx. 17, 18; xxxi. 16—18, 29; xxxii. 15—34; Ps. ii. 1—5, 9; xxi. 8—12; xxxv. 23, 26; xl. 14, 15; l. 2, 3; lxix. 22—28; lviii. 2—11; lix. 11—15; cix. 1—20; cx. 5, 6; cxxxii. 18; cxl. 9, 10; lv. 15, 23; Prov. i. 24—32; Isa. ii. 6—21; iii. 1—26; iv. 1; v. 24—30; vi. 9—12; viii. 15, 21, 22; ix. 13—21; xxiv. 1—22; xxvii. 10, 11; xxviii. 17—22; x. 22, 23; xlii. 19, 20, 22—25; lix. 1—18; lxv. 2—7, 11—15; lxvi. 3, 4, 6, 7, 14—18; Ezek. vi. 1—7; vii, ix, xv; xvi. 35—39; Dan. ix. 26, 27; Hos. iii. 4; Amos ix. 1—10; Zeph. i. 13—18; Zech. xiii. 8; xiv. 1, 2, 4, 5; Mal. iv. 1, 3, 5, 6; Mat. iii. 12; viii. 12; xii. 43—45; xxi. 37—44; xxii. 6, 7; xxiii. 34—39; xxiv. 1—41; xxvi. 64; Mark xii. 1—9; xiii. 1—31; Luke xi. 49—51; xiii. 1—9, 24—35; xvii. 22—37; xix. 14, 27, 41—44; xx. 16—18; xii. 20—33; xxiii. 29—31; John v. 43; vii. 34; viii. 21, 24; Rom. xi. 8—25; 1 Thes. ii. 15, 16; Heb. ii. 3; vi. 6—8; x. 26—31; 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18; 2 Pet. ii. 9—22; iii. 9—11; Deut. iv. 27, 28.

Notwithstanding their inexpressible miseries, the Jews, everywhere scattered, have, for 1700 years past, remained a people distinct from the rest of mankind, and never in the common manner incorporated with others. It is computed that their present number amounts to 3,000,000; one of which lives in the Turkish empire; 300,000 in Persia, India, and China; and 1,700,000 in Africa and Europe. Except in Portugal and Spain, their condition is now generally tolerable. It is even observable, that scarcely one of their distinguished oppressors, whether persons or nations, has long escaped the vengeance of Heaven. About A.D. 1866, or 2016, we expect the whole of the Hebrew tribes to be converted to the Christian faith, and to be happily and orderly replaced in Canaan, where it is probable they will continue to the end of the world. When they shall be just settled, the Turks and their allies, we expect, will attempt to dispossess them; and seize on their wealth; but shall miserably perish in the enterprise; Lev. xxvi. 40—45; Deut. iv. 29—31; xxx. 1—10; xxxii. 35—43; 1 Kings viii. 46—50; Ps. lxviii. 22—30; lxix. 35, 36; Isa. i. 25—27; iv. 2—6; ix. 1—7; xi. 11—16; xix. 24, 25; xxiv. 22, 23; xxvii. 12, 13; xxv, xxvi, xxxv; xli. 8—20; xlii. 9—16; xliii. 18—21; xliv. 23, 26, 27; xlv. 17; xlvi. 12, 13; xlix. 10—26; li. 11, 17—23; lii. 1—12; liv; lv. 8—13; lvi. 8; lvii.13—19; lviii. 12; lix. 19—21; lx—lxvi; Jer. iii. 18; xxiii. 3, 4, 7, 8; xxx. 3, 8—11; xxxi. 1, 8, 10, 38—40; xxxii. 36—44; xxxiii. 6—14; l. 4, 5; Ezek. xi. 16—20; xvi. 60—63; xx. 34—38; xxviii. 24, 26; xxxiv. 13—31; xxxvi. 24—38; xxxvii—xlviii; Dan. xii. 1; Hos. i. 11; iii. 5; ii. 14—23; vi. 2; xiv. 1—8; Joel iii. 1, 2, 16—21; Amos ix. 11—15; Obad. 17—21; Mic. ii. 12, 13; iv. 6, 7, 13; v. 5—15; vii. 12—20; Zeph. iii. 9—20; Zech. viii. 7, 13; x. 6—12; xii. 2—9; xiv—11; Rom. xi. 15, 26—32; 2 Cor. iii. 16; Ezek. xxxviii, xxix.

XIX. No history is more important than that of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH in her Head and members. This world was chiefly created for a theatre, on which JEHOVAH might transact the work, and display the glories of our redemption. To prepare the way for this great work, God permitted mankind to fall in Adam their covenant-head. In prosecution of it he published the first promise in paradise; instituted sacrifices; and, by an effusion of his Spirit, made the descendants of Seth to distinguish themselves from those of Cain, and observe social and public assemblies for his worship. By an overflowing flood he swept off the multiplied offspring of the serpent, and testified that the grant of the earth to man, under the first covenant, was entirely annulled. Immediately after the flood he bestowed on Noah and his descendants a new grant of the earth, founded on that new covenant which cannot be broken by men's sin. When the seed of the serpent again waxed strong, and attempted to defeat his designs in their building of Babel, he dispersed them; but it was round about Canaan, where the Redeemer intended to appear in manhood, and from whence the glad tidings of redemption were to be published; Gen. i—xi. To preserve religion in the recorrupted world, God separated Abraham and his seed for himself by a peculiar covenant relation, founded on, and emblematic of, the covenant of grace. For almost two thousand years he marvellously preserved that family out of which the Messiah was to spring, and continued the true religion among part of them, even under the oppression of the most powerful and active agents of hell. To them the covenant of grace was gradually manifested, and confirmed by many solemnities, signs, and types; Gen. xii. 1, &c.

Intending quickly to abandon the rest of mankind to the slavery of Satan, he, by the deliverance of his people from Egypt, further separated them for himself. To regulate and fix them in this state, he added a multitude of positive laws, which, whether ecclesiastical or civil, did almost all exhibit Jesus Christ and his work of redemption. The fate of that generation in the wilderness; the remarkable effusion of the Holy Ghost on their children; their unbloody victories over the natives, and safe settlement in Canaan; their mingled troubles, deliverances, and rests, under the Judges; and their glory and wealth under David and Solomon; were but so many figures of the approaching redemption by Jesus Christ. To mark their imperfection and their true design, the most purifying ceremonies, as the sin-offering, annual expiations, and water of separation, remarkably spread defilement. The Jewish nation, church, and ordinances, had no sooner arrived at their meridian glory, than they began to fade, and make way for the exhibition of Christ himself. Whilst the captivity in Babylon weaned them from their obstinate attachment to idolatry, the loss of the diadem of David's family, of the magnificence of the temple, and of the Urim and Thummim, sacred fire, ark, Shechinah, and perhaps other principal types, taught them to look for the speedy manifestation of the things prefigured. The dispersion of the Jews through the Persian, Grecian, or Roman empires, with their sacred books along with them, prepared the nations, as by broken hints, for the spread of the gospel by means of the Pentecostal converts, or of the preachers who followed them into their several countries. By the successive rise and fall of the Chaldean, Persian, and Grecian empires, God had shown that every alteration of external government did but change the form of men's sinfulness and misery, if not add thereto. After repeated attempts, Satan had, in the constitution and extent of the Roman empire, erected the strongest battery against God and his Christ which had ever existed, and had reduced God's separated nation to the lowest depth of corruption and misery. And, that the appearance of Jesus might be the more observable, the miracles, once so common in Israel, had, for 700 years, almost entirely ceased; nor for 400 had one prophet appeared among them; Exod. iii, to Esth. x, &c.

In the fulness of time, A.M. 4000, when the long-continued tribeship and legislative power were departing from the descendants of Judah; when that tribe had undergone manifold calamities and changes of government and masters; when Daniel's seventy weeks, or 490 years, from the edict of Artaxerxes to rebuild Jerusalem, were just expiring; when the nations had been shaken by the rise of the Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires, and by the fall of the two former; when the second temple yet stood, but hastened towards ruin; when the family of David remained distinct in genealogy, but was extremely debased; when both Jews and Gentiles generally expected the unparalleled birth of a glorious Redeemer; and when an uncommon peace, of about twelve years' continuance, extended over most, if not all the world; the eternal Son of God, without any change in his divine nature or person, assumed a real manhood; in respect of which he became the son of Eve, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, Jesse, David, and Mary the virgin; and was born at Bethlehem. Endowed in this manhood with an incomparable fulness of gifts and grace, and peculiarly supported in his work, his perfection in knowledge, in wisdom, holiness, meekness, and zeal, was amazing; Gen. xlix. 10; Ezek. xxi. 27; Mic. v. 3, 5; Dan. ix. 24; Hag. ii. 6—9, 21—23; Mal. iii. 1; Num. xxiv. 17; Isa. vii. 14; ix. 6; xxviii. 16; xl. 3, 5, 9, 10; xlviii. 17; xlix. 26; xlv. 17—25; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; xxxiii. 15, 16; Hos. i. 7; Ps. xlv. 6; xcvii. 7; Heb. i. 6; Prov. viii. 22, 23, 30; Ps. ii. 7; Zech. xiii. 7; Exod. xxiii. 21; Gen. iii. 15; xii. 3; xxii. 18; xxvi. 4; xxviii. 14; xlix. 10; Deut. xviii. 18; Jer. xxx. 21; Isa. xi. 1, 10; Luke i. 69; 2 Sam. vii. 12, 14; Ps. lxxii. 1; lxxxix. 3, 20; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24, 29; xxxvii. 24, 25; xvii. 22; Isa. liii. 2: iv. 2; vii. 14; Zec. iii. 8; Dan. ii. 34, 35; Jer. xxxi. 22; Mic. v. 2; Luke i. 32, 35; with Mat. i; Luke i. 2; iii. 23—38; Rom. i. 4; ix. 5; John i. 14: Isa. xlix. 1—3; xlviii. 16, 17; xi. 2—4; lxi. 1—3; l. 4—7; xlii. 1—6; Ps. lxxxix. 19—21; xlv. 2, 7; ii. 6; xviii. 50; xxviii. 8; cxxxii. 17; 1 Sam. ii. 10; Dan. ix. 24; Isa. x. 27; xlix. 8; lii. 13; liii. 7, 9, 11; lix. 17; lxiii. 5; Ps. xvi. 8; xviii. 28—36; xxviii. 7; xl. 7, 8; lxix. 9; Prov. viii. 14; Zech. ix. 9; Jer. xxx. 21; Mat. iii. 15, 17.

Having, as our surety, engaged to pay the debt which we owed to the law and justice of God, he, in the character of our High Priest, offering himself in sacrifice to his Father, appeared in the likeness of sinful flesh, the manner of his birth being extremely debased. Hatred, contempt, reproach, poverty, and trouble, were his inseparable attendants in life. In his infancy Herod attempted to murder him. During his public ministry he wandered about without any fixed abode. While Satan repeatedly tempted him to the vilest of crimes, Jews, Samaritans, and others, affronted and abused him. In ratifying the new covenant, and abolishing the ancient ceremonies by his death, his sorrows were quite inexpressible. While Judas, instigated by Satan, betrayed him, and Peter thrice denied him, the other disciples forsook him. Notwithstanding his manifest innocence, Jews and Gentiles of all ranks concurred to persecute and murder him. He was spit upon, buffeted, scourged, condemned, and crucified. Not only in the garden, but when his body was distorted on the cross, his Father deserted him, and loaded him with the impressions of his wrath. While nothing but gall and wormwood were allowed to quench his thirst; while the soldiers in sport parted his garments, and the profligate multitude insulted him with scoffs; he, imploring forgiveness to his murderers, and committing his soul to God, expired, an atonement for sin. Yet notwithstanding repeated attempts, not a bone of him was broken. He was interred in the tomb of the rich, but sealed up and watched by the wicked. Upon the third day he conquered death, and rose again to receive his glorious reward. And after he had sufficiently manifested the reality of his resurrection, and instructed his disciples, he ascended into the sanctuary and Holy of Holies above, to make continual intercession for us; Jer. xxx. 21; Ps. xl. 6—8; Exod. xxviii, xxix; Lev. i—v, viii, ix, xvi; Num. xix, xxviii, xxix; Ps. cx. 4; xxii. 1—21; xxxv. 11—21; xl. 1—15, 17; xli. 5—9; lxix. 1—21, 29; lv. 3—9; cix. 2—4; lxxxix. 38—45; Isa. xi. 1; xlix. 7; l. 8; xxv. 8; lii. 14; liii; Mic. v. 1; Hos. xi. 1; xiii. 14; vi. 2; Dan. ix. 24, 25; Zech. ix. 9; xiii. 7; iii. 9; xii. 10; Luke xiii. 32, 33; ix. 31; Mat. xii. 40; xvi. 21; xvii. 9, 22, 23; xx. 18, 19, 22, 28; xxi. 38, 39; xxvi. 2, 21, 23, 24, 31, 32, 34; John i. 29, 36; ii. 19; vi. 70, 71; x. 11, 18; xi. 50; xii. 24, 27, 31, 33; xiii. 18, 21, 38; xv. 13; xvi. 7, 10, 21, 22; xx. 17; Ps. xvi. 9, 10; cx. 1; Mat. ii; iv. 1—10; viii. 20; ix. 3, 11; xi. 19; xii. 24; xxvi, xxvii; Luke xi. 15, 16; xv. 1; xx. 20; xxii. 23; John v. 16; vi. 60, 66; vii—x; xi. 47, 48, 57; xviii, xix, xx; Acts i. 1—11; Heb. v—ix; x. 22.

In his debasement and glory he was, and is, equally the Saviour, Shepherd, Prophet, and Teacher of his church, whether Jews or Gentiles; feeding them, particularly the poor, by his truths, ordinances, influences, and blessings. His personal ministrations were chiefly confined to Judea, especially in the courts of the temple at Jerusalem, where multitudes attended; and in the regions of Galilee, where the grossest ignorance had long prevailed. He confirmed his precious, seasonable, practical, and sanctifying doctrines by miracles unnumbered, and which emblematically represented his spiritual work in the redemption of men. He feasted thousands on a few loaves, without diminishing the food. He healed the most incurable diseases; made the blind to see, the deaf to hear, the dumb to speak, the dead to live, the devils to leave the possessed, the storms to become calm, the trees to wither, the fishes to assemble into nets, or even to bring the money which he needed. And yet his ministrations had but inconsiderable success in the conversion of sinners; Gen. xlix. 10, 18; Ps. xiv. 7; liii. 7; xcviii. 2, 3; Isa. xix. 20; xlii. 7; xlv. 17, 22; xlvi. 13; xlviii. 17; xlix. 6, 7, 25, 26; lix. 20; lxiii. 1—5; Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16; Hos. i. 7; Zeph. iii. 17; Zech. ix. 9, 11; Mat. i. 21; Luke i. 31, 47; Ps. xxiii, 1—3; Isa. xl. 11; xlix. 9, 10; xli. 17, 18; Ezek. xxxiv. 11—16, 22—29; xxxvii. 23—27; Mic. v. 4, 5; Zech. xiii. 7; xi. 7, 11; Hag. ii. 7, 9; Mal. iii. 1—3; Isa. xli. 27; ix. 1, 2; lii. 7, 15; xl. 3; Deut. xviii. 15—19; Gen. xlix. 10; Ps. xxii. 22; xl. 9, 10; Prov. i. 20—24; viii; ix. 1—12; Job xxxiii. 23; Isa. xi. 9; xlii. 1, 3, 6, 7; xlix. 6; l. 4; xlviii. 17; liv. 13; lv. 3—11; lix. 19, 20; Luke i. 79; ii. 32; Mal. iv. 2; Isa. xxix. 18, 19; xxxv. 5, 6; xli. 17; Ezek. xxxiv. 16; Isa. xxv. 8; Hos. xiii. 14; Mat. iv—xxv; Mark i—xiii: Luke iv—xxi; John ii—xvi; Rom. xv. 8; Heb. i. 1; ii. 3, 4; Acts x. 38; Isa. xlix. 4; liii. 1; vi. 9, 10; John xii. 37—40.

Amidst his lowest debasement he discovered his Royal Headship over his church. He taught in his own name. He appointed twelve, and afterwards seventy more, of his disciples to act as his deputies, heralds, and ambassadors, in the work of the gospel. He, at least twice, expelled the merchants from the courts of the temple. He instituted baptism and his own supper for seals of his covenant. Being raised from the dead, he more abundantly exercised his kingly office in appointing extraordinary and ordinary officers in the church, and in qualifying them with the Holy Ghost. He issued forth his oracles, and appointed his gospel ordinances. And he extends his dominion in the world by increasing, ruling, and protecting his subjects, and by restraining and conquering his and their enemies; Gen. xlix. 10; Ps. ii. 6; xxi. 3—6; xxiv. 7—10; viii. 1; xlv. 6, 7; lxviii. 18—35; lxxxix. 19—37; xciii; xcvi—c; cxviii. 22; xxii. 27—31; cxxxii. 17, 18; lxxii; cx; Cant. i. 4, 12; iii. 6, 9, 11; vii. 5; Isa. ii. 3, 4; iv. 2; ix. 6, 7; xi. 3—5; xii. 6; xxiv. 15, 16, 23; xxv; xxxii. 1, 2; xxxv. 2; xl. 9—11; xlii. 1—4; xlv. 5—26; lii. 13, 15; liii. 11, 12; lv. 4; lxiii. 1—6; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; xxxiii. 15, 16; Ezek. xvii. 22, 23; xxi. 27; xxxiv. 24, 29; xxxvii. 24, 25; xliv. 3; xlv. 7, 8, 22—25; xlvi. 1, 8, 10; Dan. vii. 13, 14; ii. 44; ix. 25; xii. 1; Hos. iii. 5; xiii. 10, 14; Mic. ii. 13; iv. 3, 8; v. 1, 2, 4, 5; Zeph. iii. 15, 17; Zech. vi. 12, 13; xi. 4, 7; xiii. 7; xiv. 9; Mal. iii. 1—3; Luke i. 32, 33; 1 Cor. xv. 2, 25; Mat. iv—xxvi; Mark i—xiv; Luke iv—xxii; John i—xix; Acts i—xix; Rev. i—xxii; 1 Tim. i. 17; vi. 15, 16.

For almost two thousand years after the call of Abraham, and especially after the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, very few Gentile sinners had been converted, or even called to fellowship with God. But the promised Shiloh had scarcely appeared in the likeness of sinful flesh, when wise men from the east, two centurions, the Syro-Phenician woman, and the Samaritans and Greeks, received him by faith. He had scarcely ascended to heaven, when he poured down the Holy Ghost in a wonderful manner. Qualified by his influences, the apostles and others, beginning at Jerusalem, preached with amazing success, and confirmed their doctrine by miracles. Within about forty years, Arabia, Egypt, Ethiopia, and Cyrene, on the south and west; Chaldea, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Armenia, and Persia, on the east; Phenicia, Syria, Lesser Asia, Pontus, Thrace, Greece, Illyricum, * Italy, if not also France, Spain, and Britain, on the north and west; had received the gospel; and multitudes had believed on Christ, and formed themselves into regular societies, under the apostles, evangelists, prophets, pastors, teachers, ruling elders, and deacons, whom he had appointed; and walked in holy fellowship with God, and among themselves. Wretched ignorance, gross idolatry, vain superstition, savage barbarity, shocking lewdness, and other like abominations, were, by the power of the gospel, obliged to give place to spiritual knowledge, piety, and virtue in every form; Gen. xlix. 10; Isa. xi. 1, 10; ii. 2; Mic. iv. 1; Joel ii. 28; Prov. i. 23; Isa. xxxii. 15, 16; xliv. 3, 4, 5; Mat. x. 23; xxviii. 20; John xiv. 17, 18, 26; xv. 26, 27; xvi. 7—14; xx. 22; Luke xxiv. 49; Acts i. 8; Ps. lxxii. 6; Hos. xiv. 5; Ezek. xxxiv. 26; Ps. lxv. 9—13; lxviii. 9, 10; Isa. lv. 10—13; Joel iii. 18, 21; Zech. xiii. 1; xiv. 8; Ezek. xlvii. 1—12; Isa. lxi. 3, 11; xxxv. 3, 5, 6, 7; xli. 17—19; xliii. 19; xii. 3; John vii. 38, 39; Mark xvi. 17, 18; Isa. xxxv. 3, 5, 6; xlii. 18; xxix. 18; John xiv. 12; Amos ix. 11; Ps. lxix. 34—36; xlv. 16; lxviii. 22—28; lxxii. 16, 17; Isa. lxi; xxxii. 20; lx. 20; Mat. xix. 28; v. 13, 14; Ps. cxxxii. 16; Ezek. xliv. 17—25; Gen. iii. 15; xii. 2, 3; xxii. 18; xxvi. 4; xxviii. 14; xlix. 10; Deut. xxxii. 36, 43; Ps. ii. 8; xiv. 7; xviii. 43; xxii. 27—31; xlv. 3—6, 9—17; xlvii; lxv. 5; lxvi. 1—4; lxvii; lxviii. 22—35; lxix. 33—36; lxxii; lxxxvii; lxxxix. 2, 3, 4, 18—29; xcii; xcvi—c; cx; cxxxii. 13—18; cxlix; Isa. i. 25—28; ii. 2—5, 17—21; iv. 2—6; ix, 7; xi, xii. xviii. 7; xix. 18—25; xxv, xxvi; xxvii. 1—6, 12, 13; xxix. 18—24; xxx. 18—26; xxxii. 1—4, 15—20; xxxv; xli. 10—20; xlii. 1—16; xliv. 2—5; xlv. 22—25; xlix. 6—26; lii. 15; liii. 10—12; liv; lv; lvi. 8; lvii. 14—19; lix. 16—21; lx—lxii; lxiii. 1—5; lxv. 16—25; lxvi. 8—14, 18—24; Jer. xxxi. xxxii; Ezek. xvii. 22—24; xxxiv. 11—31; xxxvi. 21—38; xxxvii; xl—xlviii; Dan. ii. 35, 44; vii. 14; Hos. i. 10, 11; ii. 14—23; xiv; Joel ii. 28—31; iii. 16—21; Amos ix. 11—15; Mic. iv, v; vii. 14—20; Zeph. iii. 9—20; Hag. ii. 6—9; Zech. ii. 10—13; viii. 20—23; xiv. 8—11; Mal. i. 11; iv. 2; Mat. viii. 11; xvi. 18; xx. 6—16; xiii. 3—52; xxi. 28, 29, 41, 43; xxii. 9, 10; xxvi. 13; xxiv. 14; xxviii. 18—20; Mark xvi. 15, 16; Luke ii. 32; xiv. 23; xxiv. 47; John i. 9; iii. 16, 17; viii. 12; x. 16; xi. 52; xii. 23, 24, 32; xvi. 8; Acts i. 8; ii—xix; Rom. i. 7, 8; xi. 11; xv. 8—19; 1 Cor. i. 2; 2 Cor. i. 1; viii. 1; Gal. ii. 2; Eph. i. 1; Phil. i. 1; Col. i. 1; ii. 1; iv. 13; 1 Thess. i. 1; 1 Pet. i. 1; Rev. i. 11.

During this period the Christians, and especially their teachers, were hated and persecuted by the Jews and the heathen mob. But, till their religion had spread and taken deep root among the Gentiles, they experienced no imperial persecution. God even made the junction of so many nations into one Roman empire, which Satan had erected as his impregnable bulwark against the approaching Messiah, a mean of its more easy spread. The destruction and dispersion of the Jewish nation, which soon after took place, were also calculated to wean men from the typical ceremonies, and to make them examine the character and religion of Jesus, who had so circumstantially predicted these events. From A.D. 66 to 312, the church was repeatedly under general persecutions, appointed by the Roman emperors, particularly under Nero, about 66; Domitian, 96; Trajan, 107; Adrian, 120; Aurelius, 160; Severus, 202; Maximin, 235; Decius, 250; Valerian, 257; Aurelian, 272; and Diocletian, 303. These persecutions were very useful to prevent the church's swarming with errors, or the propagators of them; for many, particularly the Gnostics, fond of mingling the heathen philosophy with the gospel of Christ, formed abominable tenets, in opposition to his person and grace. The monstrous Nero led the way in imperial persecution. Having, for his revenge, or his diversion, burnt part of Rome his capital, he charged it to the Christians' account. Multitudes of them were burnt in heaps in his gardens, for his nocturnal recreation; and in many corners of his vast empire, they were inhumanly exposed to wild beasts, or otherwise tortured and slain. For about 250 years after, scarcely a disaster, by sword, famine, or pestilence, came upon the Roman subjects, but the heathens, and especially their priests, pretended that the toleration of the Christians in their peculiar religion had provoked the gods to inflict it, and begged to have them utterly extirpated. The persecutions above-mentioned were all of them remarkably distressing. Those of Aurelius and Severus were extremely ruinous. Those under Maximin, Decius, and Valerian, were still more furious and cruel. Millions of Christians were murdered without, or by form of law. Multitudes were, for the public diversions, torn to pieces by lions, tigers, and other ravenous beasts, in the theatres. And the last, between A.D. 302 and 312, was still more terrible and bloody. Almost in every place of the Roman empire, Christians, and especially their preachers, were scourged to death; had their flesh pulled off them by pincers, or mangled with broken pots; or they were torn asunder by beasts, or between trees; or were roasted between gentle fires; or, by holes made in their flesh, had melted lead poured into their bowels. In Egypt alone, 144,000 are said to have been cut off by violent deaths, and 700,000 more banished. Their churches were everywhere demolished; and their books, especially the Scriptures, sought out and burnt.

Scarcely any, whether the Jewish nation or particular persons, as Herod, Domitian, &c., who had persecuted the Christians, long escaped the vengeance of God. Terrible ravages by the Goths, Persians, and others, had often punished the Roman empire. But never was the vengeance of Heaven so manifest as in the case of Diocletian and his assistants. He, and Heraclius his partner, had scarcely begun their barbarous work, when Galerius, their instigator, caused them to resign their authority and retire to a private life. After living some years in great anxiety, it is said that Diocletian poisoned himself. After several efforts to resume his imperial authority, Heraclius had his neck broken for attempting to murder Constantine his son-in-law. Maxentius and his army, of about 200,000, were most of them slain by the enemy, or drowned in the Tiber, where they had laid snares for Constantine. Galerius died of a most tormenting and loathsome distemper, begging the prayers of the Christians as a mean of his relief. Constantine, son to Constantius, the only Cæsar who had not joined in the persecutions, being called from Britain, was made emperor by his troops. He proclaimed a toleration of the Christian religion in the whole Roman empire; but Maximin his colleague in the East quickly revoked it, and attacked Constantine's forces, which were commanded by Licinus his brother-in-law. But, being shamefully routed, he, in a fury, murdered multitudes of the heathen priests, who had instigated him to the war. When he was ready to give a second battle to Licinus, he was struck with blindness and terrible torments in both body and mind. In rage and despair he poisoned himself, confessing that he was plagued by Jesus Christ for his persecution of the Christians. Licinus, who was now deputy emperor in the East, for a time pretended to favour the Christians; but, instigated by the heathen priests, he at last commenced a furious persecutor. In three great battles, in the last of which about 100,000 were slain, and himself taken prisoner, Constantine reduced him, after which he was put to death; Gen. iii. 15; Dan. xi. 30—35; Rev. vi. 3—12; John xv. 20; xvi. 2, 33; xxi. 18, 19; Acts xiv. 22; 2 Tim. ii. 11; iii. 12; Mat. xvi. 24; x. 17—22, 34—39; xxii. 6; xxiv. 9, 10, 18; Luke xii. 49—53; xxi. 12—17; Rev. ii. 10; iii. 10; 1 Cor. xi. 19; 2 Pet. ii. 1—3; Mat. xxiv. 5, 11, 24; Acts xx. 29, 30; 1 Tim. iv. 1—3; 2 Tim. iii. 1—6, 13; iv. 3, 4; Gen. iii. 45; Rev. vi. 12—17; xii. 2—4, 7; Deut. xxxii. 36—43; Ps. ii. 1—6, 9, 12; xxi. 8—12; lxviii. 14, 21, 23, 30; xciii; xcvi—xcix; cx. 5, 6; lxxxix. 23; xviii. 37—42; xxxv. 5, 6, 26; cxxxii. 18; Is. viii. 9, 10; ix. 4; xlii. 13, 14; xlix. 24—26; li. 22, 23; liv. 15, 17; xli. 11; xlv. 24; lxiii. 1—6; lxvi. 15, 16; Rev. i. 7.

From A.D. 320 to 606, all the emperors, except Julian, professed themselves Christians. Constantine and Theodosius in the fourth, and Justin I. and Justinian, in the beginning of the sixth centuries of the Christian era, distinguished themselves by their care for the church. Constantine first of all made the Christian the established religion of the empire. He admitted few but Christians to places of power or trust; and, while he erected churches and schools, and appointed salaries for their teachers, he warmly inculcated, and carefully exemplified, the due observation of the Lord's day. At first he tried soft methods for converting the heathens; but, finding them obstinate, he began to pull down their temples, break in pieces their idols, and banish, or even put to death, their enraged priests. By the free preaching of the gospel, and by the spread thereof among the Indians, Persians, and those on the east of the Euxine Sea, many were turned to the Lord. But Constantine's excessive kindness to the doctors of the Christian church, and to their new converts, tempted them to ambition and dissimulation. Many, awed by his authority or example, or attracted by the favours they expected, professed themselves Christians, who had neither knowledge of, nor due regard to, Jesus or his truths. By his assumption of a kind of headship over the church, at least in some instances, the clergy were encouraged to model her government according to the form of that established in the empire. The favours of Theodosius, Justin, and Justinian, were perverted to much the same purpose. While the inundations of the ravaging Goths, Huns, &c., were almost ruining both church and state, the Donatists in Africa, who separated from their fellow-Christians as not sufficiently pure in their practice; the Arians and half-Arians, through most of the empire, who denied our Saviour's proper divinity; the Pelagians, who denied the necessity of his righteousness for our justification, and of his Spirit's influence to regenerate the heart; the Nestorians who were thought to hold a twofold person in Christ; and the Eutychians, who allowed him but one compounded nature, and other corrupters of the truth, were fearful plagues to the church, by their soul-ruining errors, and by the furious contentions, rival councils, and even persecutions and massacres which they produced. The Arians, who in the fourth century held about thirty-two councils, and had often persecuting kings or emperors to abet them, were peculiarly hurtful, and had once forced most of the clergy to their side. But the doctrines of Pelagius, especially when a little refined, gradually and more insensibly infected most of the Christian church, both ministers and people.

By such means the church became a motley mass of practical heathens, mingled with a few real and circumspect Christians. The great zeal of the fashionable clergy was to render her in her offices superior and subordinate, similar to the imperial state; and, for the gratification of their carnal proselytes, to borrow whatever they could find from the Jewish or heathen superstitions. Even in the fourth century, lordly bishops, metropolitans, archdeacons, subdeacons, exorcists, and canonical singers were introduced. Candles were lighted by day in the churches. Incense was burnt while prayers were offered or sacraments administered. On the stated fasts some particular meats were forborne. Abstinence from marriage was esteemed a high degree of sanctity, especially among the clergy. Prayers were directed to saints departed. Pretended relics were held in great veneration. Images of saints, and of Jesus Christ, were placed in churches, and sometimes were worshipped. The clergy began to officiate in canonical robes, which they held to be sacred. Prayers were made for the dead, and even sometimes for mitigation of torments to the damned. Baptism was held of absolute necessity to salvation, and hence was administered to the dead, or by lay persons. Pilgrimages to our Saviour's sepulchre, and a monkish retirement from fellowship with mankind, were reckoned a transcendent devotion. By the end of the sixth century the doctrines of the church were deeply infected with Pelagianism. The discipline had been long remiss, corrupt, or partial, chiefly in favour of the liberal or the great; and the principal concern of the leading clergy was who should be greatest. The notion of a purgatory or middle state; multitudes of sacred festivals and litanies, in honour of angels, the Virgin Mary, and martyrs; and consecrations of churches, were introduced. Everything supposed to have had connexion with martyrs was held in veneration. But not contented with all these human or rather devilish inventions in the worship of God, Gregory the Great, a sainted and famous bishop of Rome, added his new canons of the mass; his canticles and antiphones; and his almost innumerable ordinances concerning stations, litanies, processions, lent, oblations for the dead, pontifical robes, consecrations, and relics; Mat. xxiv. 5, 11, 24; Acts xx. 29, 30; 1 Cor. xi. 19; 1 Tim. iv. 1—3; 2 Tim. iii. 1—6. 13; iv. 3, 4; 2 Pet. ii. 1, 3; Rev. vii, viii; xii. 8—17.

In the beginning of the seventh century two principal enemies to Jesus Christ formally appeared on the earth; the Mahometan delusion in the East, which has ever since extirpated or oppressed the Christian religion in a great part of the world; and the long predicted Antichrist in the west. The imperial seat had been long before removed to Constantinople. The Western empire had been abolished, and ten motley kingdoms formed out of its ruins. Every shadow of Rome's ancient forms of government by kings, consuls, decemvirs, tribunes, dictators, emperors, heathen or Christian, was gone; and Rome itself, in A.D. 566, subjected to the exarch of Ravenna. These things had given the bishops of Rome an opportunity to extend their ambitious views. The clerical form of church government still wanted an imperial LORD OVER ALL instead of Jesus Christ; and, by promoting divisions, by encouraging appeals to themselves from the eastern and other bishops, by pretending deeds of councils in their own favour, and by unwearied struggles with the bishops of Constantinople, the Romish bishops had long and earnestly contended for the supremacy. About A.D. 606 or 608, Phocas, an absolute monster of treachery, cruelty, and everything horrid, had, by the inhuman murder of his worthy master Mauritius and family, become the Emperor of the East. It seems the bishop of Constantinople disdained the friendship of this infernal wretch. But Boniface III. of Rome, by his fulsome flatteries, obtained his imperial appointment to be the UNIVERSAL BISHOP of the Christian church. Deputies were immediately despatched throughout the Western churches, to introduce the new Gregorian superstition, and to procure a formal submission to the Roman pope. The missionaries being extremely ignorant of everything important, or at least incapable of officiating in the language of the places to which they were sent, it is said Pope Vitalian, about A.D. 666, appointed their public worship to be everywhere performed in the now long disused Latin tongue. This at once concealed the ignorance of his missionaries, and became a standing badge of the church's subjection to Rome. Just five prophetic months, or 150 years, after the pope had obtained his spiritual supremacy, and 666 years after John had received his Revelations in Patmos, Pope Stephen III. assisted by Pepin king of France, who, by the help of a former pope, had treacherously usurped his master's throne, rendered himself a CIVIL LORD of the states of Rome, Ravenna, and Pentapolis; in consequence of which his cardinals, or privy counsellors, dressed themselves in purple and scarlet. Several of the succeeding popes claimed an absolute power to dispose of, not only the Christian kingdoms and empires, but even of what belonged to heathens, everywhere in the world. By deceiving or terrifying princes with their excommunications and interdicts, by decoying or forcing them to the holy war in Canaan, and by raising up traitors against them, they caused them to submit to their slavery. The ten kingdoms, which had been formed out of the ruins of the Western empire, all submitted to the idolatry, superstition, and clerical tyranny of Rome. The haughty pontiffs even pretended to command the angels, whether good or bad, to do what they pleased; nay, they claimed an authority over JEHOVAH himself; in empowering their priests to create or divide the glorified body of his Son at their pleasure; in adding to his standard of faith and practice apocryphal tracts, human traditions, and decrees of popes or their councils; in founding the authority of his oracles on the will of their church, and, contrary to his express command, debarring all but their clergy from the free perusal of them; in altering, reversing, or confirming his laws as they pleased; in making multitudes of persons and things his partners in worship, and in protection of the world; in appointing multitudes of holidays in opposition to his law; and by pardoning men's sin, or indulging them in it, and cancelling the obligations of oaths, &c. Most dreadful were the scenes of wickedness against God and man which prevailed in the whole Antichristian body, but especially among their clergy. These, regular and secular, multiplied like locusts, till, by their delusions and oppressive exactions, they everywhere destroyed the souls of the people, enslaved their bodies, and ruined their estates. Under the different denominations of Augustinians, Benedictines, Franciscans, Dominicans, Carmelites, Jesuits, &c., huge armies of monks zealously supported the Romish bishop and his abominations. In the Benedictine order alone before the Reformation, it is said there had been above 15,000 monasteries, 24 popes, 200 cardinals, 1600 archbishops, 4000 bishops, 15,700 abbots who had been authors, and 156,000 deified saints. While the pope and his clergy wallowed in every fleshly abomination, and everywhere spread the most pernicious errors, gross idolatry, and superstition, by pretences to uncommon sanctity, and by magical wonders and pretended visions, they made their ignorant votaries believe what they pleased. By inhumanly excluding from trade, or even from their habitations, such as dissented from them; and by murderous inquisitions, massacres, and wars, in which millions of Waldenses and Protestants were slain, they terrified others into a blind submission; Dan. vii. 20—25; xi. 36—39; 2 Thes. ii. 3—12; 1 Tim. iv. 1—3; 2 Tim. iii. 1—7, 13; iv. 3, 4; Rev. ix. 1—11; xi. 2; xiii; xvii. 1, 14, 17, 18; xviii. 12, 13.

Notwithstanding the diabolical fraud and barbarous rage of these Antichristian locusts and their abettors, Jesus Christ has always qualified and encouraged a proper number to bear witness for his injured doctrines and laws against the contrary abominations. Among whom may be reckoned the council of Charles the Great of France at Frankfort, in the eighth century; Claude bishop of Turin, and his followers, in Piedmont, in the ninth and tenth; the WALDENSES in the south of France, in the twelfth and subsequent centuries; who, by war and persecution, were scattered into Germany, Italy, and Britain; and of whom Wickliffe and his followers in England, in the fourteenth century, and Huss and his followers in Germany, in the fifteenth, were the genuine offspring. Notwithstanding their faithful contendings, and notwithstanding dreadful judgments inflicted by Saracens, Turks, &c., the Antichristians still prevailed. The oracles of God were almost wholly unknown. Many of the bishops had never perused, and perhaps never seen them. Doctrines were tried by false miracles and lying wonders, not by the word of God. Many of the leading truths of the gospel were buried in oblivion, and the contrary errors established and believed. Even the remains of truth were rendered almost unintelligible, by scholastic terms and arguments. Religion lay buried under wicked and senseless traditions and papal decrees. Worship was drowned in depths of heathenish, Jewish, or magical superstitions. Devotions chiefly consisted in adoring the sacramental bread, the Virgin Mary, saints, angels, images, and relics. Pardons of sin, or indulgences therein; admission to ecclesiastical offices, or even to celestial thrones, were sold for money; and none but the poor, who could pay nothing, were consigned to eternal damnation. In ignorance many of the clergy were similar to brutes; but in pride, avarice, oppression, lewdness, blasphemy, and everything abominable, they were complete infernals. Meanwhile God,—by making the holy war a means of introducing knowledge from the east—by forcing the learned Greeks into the papal dominions, through the capture of Constantinople by the Turks,—and by causing the contentions between the rival popes, and the struggles of the councils of Basil and Pisa, to sink the credit of the pontiffs among their votaries,—prepared the way for the Protestant reformation.

In A.D. 1517, Zuinglius in Switzerland, and Luther in Germany, shocked with the blasphemous manner in which the papal pardons of, and indulgences in sin were exposed to sale, openly declared their detestation of them. By a diligent search of the Scriptures in defence of their conduct, their views of divine truth were exceedingly enlarged; and what they apprehended themselves they boldly preached to others, and warned them of their danger in a continued adherence to Rome. Wearied of the tyranny, and detesting the monstrous wickedness of the Romish clergy, multitudes embraced their doctrine, and attempted to search the Scriptures for themselves; for which purpose the learned reformers supplied them everywhere with translations in their mother tongue. Notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the popish rulers in both church and state, by pretending miracles and apparitions; by perfidy and flattery; by prohibitions of Protestant books; by wars, persecutions, and massacres;—and notwithstanding the lukewarmness, scandals, contentions, and even enthusiastic madness and horrible blasphemy, which took place among too many of the nominal Protestants; the true scriptural religion was, in less than fifty years, not only preached with remarkable success, but formally established by the civil authority, in a great part of Germany, in Sweden, in Denmark, in Holland, and half of Switzerland, and in Britain; and was by public edicts, allowed in France, Poland, Hungary, and Transylvania. Since that period the Protestant religion has been almost entirely rooted out of Hungary, Austria, Bohemia, France, Palatinate on the Rhine, &c.; and the Papists have greatly increased in several of the Protestant dominions. Perhaps the number of Protestants in Europe may have decreased 15,000,000 from what it was about 200 or 180 years ago. On several occasions, as in Germany, 1418 and 1550, and in Britain 1558 and 1688, the opposers of Antichrist have been remarkably delivered, after they had for three years and a half appeared on the very brink of destruction. But the great slaughter of Christ's witnesses, by the apostatizing of Protestants to the essentials of popery, and by the persecutions of such as shall continue faithful, and their glorious resurrection, we suppose, are still future; Rev. xi. 2—10; xiv. 1—23; xvii. 14—17.

Partial effusions of the vials of God's wrath upon the Antichristians have also taken place. The Saracens not only murdered their eastern brethren in error, idolatry, and superstition; but, about A.D. 713, conquered Spain, and afterwards ravaged France and a part of Italy; seized upon Sicily and Naples; and thought it highly meritorious to harass and murder the Romish idolaters. From A.D. 830 to 980, the contentions between the descendants of Charles the Great, and the invasions of the Hungarians, deluged Germany, France, and Italy with torrents of human blood. From A.D. 1090 to 1290, millions perished in the pretended HOLY WAR with the infidel Saracens and Seljukian Turks for the recovery of Canaan. Scarcely a kingdom in Europe but was disordered in its constitution, drained of men and beggared of wealth, by these mad attempts, which the popes promoted with all their fury and craft, that they might have an opportunity to extend their power in Europe, while the princes of the respective nations warred in the East. From A.D. 1200 to 1370, the furious wars between the papal and imperial factions, commonly called GUELFS and GIBELINS, rendered Germany and Italy a comparative desert. Between A.D. 1370 and 1447, or later, the frequent contentions of rival popes, and the brave resistance of the faithful Bohemians, involved the Antichristian dominions in terrible misery and bloodshed. Between A.D. 1486 and 1534, a sweating sickness, and other pestilential disorders, cut off multitudes in England, Germany, and France. Between 1370 and 1698, the Ottoman Turks made the most shocking havoc among the Papists who inhabited Hungary, Poland, Dalmatia, the Mediterranean isles, and even part of Italy and Germany. But none of these plagues in the least reformed the pope or his votaries. When, between A.D. 1517 and 1570, about the half of his subjects revolted and embraced the Protestant religion, shame obliged their neighbours to drop several of their papal customs, that were absolutely stupid or horribly wicked; but the whole substance of their errors and corruptions, a little varnished, was judicially established by the council of Trent, which was concluded A.D. 1563. But at the end of 1260 years, from the birth of the pontiff's ecclesiastic or civil supremacy, i. e. about A.D. 1866, or 2016, we expect still more tremendous VIALS of divine wrath to be poured out upon the Antichristian state, which, for about thirty years, shall render their persons and countries miserable; and, together with the pure preaching of the gospel, shall abolish their pretended religion, at the very same time that the delusions of Mahomet shall be banished from the east. The princes who had long supported the papal interest and their subjects, enlightened by the gospel, shall, with an active zeal, detest its wickedness and accelerate its ruin; Dan. vii. 11, 26; xi. 40—45; xii. 1, 10—12; Zeph. iii. 8; Joel iii. 12—14; 2 Thes. ii. 8; 2 Tim. iii. 9; Rev. ix; xi. 13, 18, 19; xiii. 10; xiv. 4—20; xv. 7, 8; xvi; xvii. 14—17; xviii; xix. 2, 11—21; Deut. xxxii. 36—43.

The Antichristian and Mahometan delusions being extirpated from the face of the earth, the gospel will, we expect, with amazing rapidity and success, spread through the whole habitable world. Both Jews and Gentiles shall heartily embrace it, and turn to the Lord with one consent, and unite in his body the church. Then shall her doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, be restored to the apostolic plan, and exactly correspond with the measuring line and reed of God's word. Astonishing shall be the abilities, labours, and success of her pastors and other officers; and amazing the knowledge, holiness, zeal, order, unanimity, and peace of her members. Such shall be their multitude and quality, as if all the ancient martyrs had risen from their graves to enjoy the most glorious fellowship with Christ. So general shall be the reformation of mankind, that perhaps few will remain apparently wicked: and long, perhaps a thousand years, shall this happy period continue; Gen. iii. 15; xii. 2, 3; xxii. 18; xxvi. 4; xxviii. 14; xlix. 10; Deut. xxxii. 36—43; Ps. ii. 8; xiv. 7; xviii. 43; xxii. 27—31; xlv. 3—6, 9—17; xlvii; lxv. 5; lxvi. 1—4; lxvii; lxviii. 22—35; lxix. 33—36; lxxii; lxxxvii; lxxxix. 2, 3, 18—29; xciii; xcvi—c; cx; cxxxii. 13—18; cxlix; Is. i. 25—28; ii. 2—5, 17—21; iv. 2—6; ix. 8; xi; xii; xviii. 7; xix. 18—25; xxiv. 23; xxv; xxvi; xxvii. 1—6, 12, 13; xxix. 18—24; xxx. 18—26, 29; xxxii. 1—4, 15—20; xxxv; xli. 10—20; xlii. 1—16; xliv. 2—5; xlv. 22—25; xlix. 6—26; lii. 15; liii. 10—12; liv; lv; lvi. 8; lvii. 14—19; lix. 16—21; lx—lxii; lxiii. 1—5; lxv. 16—25; lxvi. 8—14, 18—24; Jer. xxxi; xxxiii; Ezek. xvii. 22—24; xxxiv. 11—31; xxxvi—xlviii; Dan. ii. 35, 44; vii. 14, 22, 27; ii. 12; Hos. i. 10, 11; ii. 14—23; iii. 5; vi. 2; xiv; Joel ii. 28—32; iii. 16—21; Amos ix. 11—15; Mic. iv. 5; vii. 14—20; Zeph. iii. 9—20; Hag. ii. 6—9; Zech. ii. 10—13; viii. 20—23; xiv. 8—11, 20, 21; Mal. iv. 2; Rom. xi. 12, 15, 25—32; Rev. vii; xi. 11—19; xv. 2—4; xix. 1—9; xx. 1—5; xxi, xxii. 1—6.

At the end of this blessed period, perhaps about A.D. 2860 or 3000, Satan will be again loosed from his long restraint; and after corrupting the members of the church, will assemble the Turks, Russians, or others of a like savage temper, to destroy her; but the fearful vengeance of God shall overtake them in their attempts. Then cometh the end of the world, at what distance we know not; when Jesus who had all along from the creation managed whatever pertained to his church, whether in heaven or earth, shall appear with power and great glory, attended with all his holy angels, to judge the world; especially with respect to their behaviour towards him and his people. The unnumbered millions of mankind, now raised from their graves, shall attend at his bar for trial, and to receive their final sentence of everlasting happiness or misery. The saints being caught up to the right hand of Jesus Christ in the air, shall be openly acknowledged, acquitted, and adjudged to happiness. Devils, and their wicked seed among mankind, while their sins are publicly exposed, shall be condemned, and immediately driven to everlasting misery in hell. Then shall Jesus in solemn manner conduct his ransomed saints into the everlasting happiness of heaven, and present them before his Father faultless, with exceeding joy.—Then, to mark the emptiness of the carnalists' portion; to give them a terrible exclusion from it; and to purge this lower world from every effect of the curse; and that it may, for the eternal advantage of the saints and honour of God, be fashioned anew, it shall be wholly burnt; Luke xviii. 8; xvii. 24—37; Mat. xxiv. 36—41; Mark xiii. 24—27; Rev. xx. 7—15; Gen. iii. 15; Deut. xxxii. 36—43; Job xix. 25—27; Ps. l. 2—6; xcvi. 11—13; xcviii. 7, 8; cx. 5, 6; Is. xxvi. 19; Dan. xii. 2, 3; Eccl. xii. 14; Hos. xiii. 14; Mat. xxii. 11—13, 30, 31; xxiv. 29—31, 42—51; xxv. 6—13, 19—46; xxvi. 64; John v. 28, 29; xiv. 3; Acts iii. 21; xvii. 31; Rom. ii. 16; xiv. 9—12; 2 Cor. v. 10; 1 Thes. iv. 14—17; Heb. 9. 28; 1 Cor. xv. 20—55; 2 Thes. i. 6—10; 1 Tim. vi. 14, 15; Tit. ii. 13; 2 Tim. iv. 8; 1 Pet. iv. 5; Col. iii. 4. Jude 14, 16; Rev. i. 7; xxii. 12, 20; Ps. ix. 15, 17; xvi. 10, 11; —xxxi. 19; 1 Cor. xiii. 12; Is. xxxv. 10; li. 11; lx. 19, 20; Rev. xxi; xxii. 1—5; vii. 9—17; 2 Pet. iii. 10—13; Is. lxv. 17, 18; lxvi. 22.

CHAPTER V.

A CHRONOLOGICAL HARMONY OF THE SCRIPTURE HISTORIES AND OF THE FULFILMENT OF ITS PREDICTIONS.

Year of the World.	Before Christ.
		FROM eternity JEHOVAH himself alone subsisted in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; Gen. xxi. 33; Deut. xxxiii. 27; Ps. xc. 2; Is. xliv. 6; Hab. i. 12; 1 John v. 7; 2 Cor. xiii. 14; Mat. xxviii. 19; iii. 16, 17, &c.
——	——	God decreed whatever comes to pass; Acts xv. 18; Is. xlvi. 10; Eph. i. 11; 2 Tim. i. 9, &c. He made the covenant of grace with his Son as the Mediator and Representative of his elect; Ps. xl. 6—8; lxxxix. 3, 4; Is. liii. 10; Jer. xxx. 21; Zec. vi. 13.
1	4004	God created all things; covenanted with mankind; Adam fell into sin, and his posterity in him; God published salvation by Christ, but denounced troubles and sorrows in this life; Gen. i—iii; Exod. xx. 11; Eccl. vii. 29; Rom. v. 12—21; 1 Cor. xv. 22.
2	4003	Cain, and not long after, Abel is born, perhaps with twin-sisters. Some years after Cain becomes a husbandman, Abel a shepherd, Gen. iv.
129	3875	Cain and Abel offer sacrifice. Cain murders Abel, and is punished; but his family increases; Gen. iv; Heb. xi. 4; 1 John iii. 12; Jude. Next year Seth is born.
235	3769	Enos is born. Public societies for God's worship are introduced, to distinguish the Sethites from the offspring of Cain; Gen. v. 6; iv. 26.
987	3017	After predicting the last judgment, pious Enoch is translated to heaven without tasting of death; Gen. v. 23, 24; Heb. xi. 5; Jude 14, 15.
1056	2468	Noah, the famous preacher and patriarch, is born, to the great joy of Lamech his father; Gen. v. 28; Ezek. xiv. 14, 20.
1536	2468	The Sethites marrying with the Cainites, men become abominably wicked. Noah warns them of the flood, and begins to build his ark; Gen. vi; Heb. xi. 7; 1 Pet. iii. 20; 2 Pet. ii. 5.
1656	2348	Methuselah, son of Enoch, dies. The world, with perhaps double of its present inhabitants, is drowned by a flood. Noah, his family, and some animals, are preserved in the ark; Gen. v. 27; vii; Luke xvii. 26, 27; Mat. xxiv. 37—39; Job xxii. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 19, 20; 2 Pet. ii. 5; iii. 6.
1657	2347	The flood ceases; the ark settles in Armenia: Noah, his sons, and the animals, came forth of the ark. Noah offers sacrifices of thanksgiving. God covenants with him; allows him to eat flesh; forbids murder; gives him the rainbow, as a token that the earth should never more be drowned. Not long after Noah plants a vineyard; is drunk; and foretells the fate of his seed; Gen. viii, ix; Is. liv. 8—10.
1760	2244	Men, being generally recorrupted, build the tower of BABEL. God confounds their language, and disperses them. Nimrod founds
——	——	a kingdom in Chaldea, Ashur another in Assyria, and Mizraim a third in Egypt; Gen. x. 9—13.
2008	1996	Two years after the death of Noah Abraham is born, in the 130th year of Terah. Sarai or Iscah, his brother Haran's daughter, is born ten years after; Gen. xi. 26—32; xvii. 17; xx. 12.
2079	1925	Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, subdues the kingdoms of Sodom, Gomorrah, &c. Gen. xiv. 1—3.
2083	1921	Terah dying after they had dwelt five years in Haran, Abraham, directed by God, and encouraged by a promise of Christ, and a numerous seed, enters Canaan. The land is promised to his seed. A famine forces him into Egypt. From hence the 430 years of the Hebrew sojourning are reckoned by some; Gen. xii; Jos. xxiv. 2, 3; Neh. ix. 7, 8; Ps. cv. 9—15; Exod. xii. 40, 41; Acts vii. 2—5; Gal. iii. 17; Heb. xi. 8.
——	——	Returning to Canaan, Lot retires to Sodom. God renews his covenant with Abraham. He removed southward to Hebron, and built an altar for the worship of God; Gen. xiii.
2091	1913	After twelve years' servitude the kings of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar, revolted; Chedorlaomer and his allies ravage their country, defeat their troops, take Lot and others captive. Abraham defeats the conquerors, rescues the prisoners, recovers the spoil, and is blessed by Melchizedek. God promises him a numerous seed, and Canaan for their inheritance; Gen. ix. 25; xiv, xv; Heb. vii. 1—11; Acts vii. 6, 7; Gal. iii. 17; Ps. cv. 9—15; Neh. ix. 7, 8.
2093	1911	Despairing of the promised seed by herself, Sarah gives Hagar to Abraham for a concubine, that she might bear it. After Hagar had fled from the family, and returned, she bears Ishmael; Gen. xvi; xxv. 12—18; Gal. iv. 22—31.
2106	1898	God constitutes Abram, and his seed by Isaac, his peculiar people; appoints circumcision as the seal of this covenant; changes Abram's and Sarai's names. Soon after he and two angels visit Abraham and Sarah, renew the promise of Isaac's birth; Abra-
2107	1897	ham intercedes for the preservation of Sodom, &c.; the two angels warn Lot and his family to remove; Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, are destroyed by fire and brimstone;

Year of World.	Before Christ.
		Lot's wife is turned into a pillar of salt; the Dead Sea is formed out of this country. Not long after, Lot, made drunk by his two daughters, commits incest with them, and hence the Moabites and Ammonites proceeded; Gen. xvii—xix; Is. xiii. 19; i. 9, 10; Ezek. xvi. 46—50; Zeph. ii. 9; 2 Pet. ii. 6—8; Jude 7; Amos iv. 11.
2108	1896	Sarah bears Isaac. About three or four years after Ishmael mocks him; and he and Hagar are in consequence expelled from the family; Gen. xxi; Acts vii. 8; Rom. ix. 9; Heb. xi. 11, 12; Gal. iv. 22—31.
2144	1860	To try Abraham's faith and obedience, God commands him to offer Isaac in sacrifice. Abraham readily obeys; Isaac's death is prevented, and Abraham and his family greatly blessed; Gen. xxii; Heb. xi. 17—19; James ii 21. Soon after Sarah dies, and is buried at Machpelah; Gen. xxiii; xlix. 30—32.
2148	1856	Isaac, by the direction of Providence, is married to Rebekah the daughter of Bethuel, his Syrian cousin, Gen. xxiv; Shem, the son of Noah, dies ten years after; Gen. xi. 10, 11.
2168	1836	While Abraham's family by Keturah and Hagar mightily increase, Esau and Jacob are born to Isaac; Gen. xxv; Jos. xxiv. 4; Acts vii. 8; Rom. ix. 10—13.
2183	1821	Abraham dies. Four years after, Heber, the great grandson of Shem, dies, aged 464 years; from whom the HEBREWS were named; Gen. xxv. 7; xi. 17.
2208	1796	Esau having sold Jacob his birthright, marries two Canaanites, which grieves his parents; Gen. xxv. 27—34; xxvi. 34; Heb. xii. 16.
——	——	Being blessed of God, Isaac greatly prospers, notwithstanding the envy of the Philistines; Gen. xxvi.
2244	1760	Instigated by his mother, Jacob fraudulently obtains his father's principal blessing. Esau's rage hereat obliges him to flee to Mesopotamia. He receives a vision and promise at Bethel; arrives at Haran, and serves Laban his uncle; Gen. xxvii—xxix; Heb. xii. 16; Gen. xxxi. 13; Hos. xii. 3, 4, 12.
2251	1753	For his service Jacob receives Leah and Rachel, his two cousins, for wives; by whom, and their handmaids, within fourteen years, he has eleven sons and one daughter. God also renders him rich in flocks; Gen. xxix, xxx; Hos. xii. 12; Acts vii. 8.
2265	1739	After serving Laban for twenty years, Jacob and his family privately remove to Canaan. Laban pursues, but is pacified. Jacob meets with angels at Mahanaim; with God at Peniel; and with Esau in love; Gen. xxxi—xxxiii.
2270	1734	Dinah is deflowered, and the Shechemites circumcised and murdered. Jacob removes to Bethel, where Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, dies. Soon after Rachel dies in childbirth of Benjamin. Reuben commits incest with Bilhah; Gen. xxxiv, xxxv.
2276	1728	Joseph, now seventeen years old, is for his dreams, hated, and sold by his brethren to Ishmaelites and Midianites, who sell him to Potiphar the Egyptian; Gen. xxxvii; Ps. cv. 17; Acts vii. 9.
2286	1718	About seventeen years after his marriage with Shuah the Canaanitess, Judah commits incest with Tamar his daughter-in-law, who bears him Pharez and Zerah. Joseph refuses to commit adultery with his mistress; and by false accusation is imprisoned; Gen. xxxviii, xxxix; Ps. cv. 18.
2288	1716	Isaac dies, aged 180 years. Soon after Esau removes from Canaan, and finally settles in mount Seir; where his family, cohabiting with the Horites, wonderfully increase; Gen. xxxv. 28, 29; xxxvi.
2289	1715	Having, perhaps two years before, interpreted the dreams of the baker and butler, Joseph is liberated, and interprets those of Pharaoh; is made ruler of Egypt, and married to a princess; Gen. xl, xli; Ps. cv. 19—22; Acts vii. 10.
2296	1708	After seven plenteous years, a terrible famine begins in Egypt and the places about; Gen. xlii. 52; Acts vii. 11; Ps. cv. 16.
2298	1706	After Jacob's sons had twice gone to Egypt to buy corn, and been tried by Joseph, he and all his family go and reside there, and are nourished by Joseph; Gen. xlii; xlvi; Acts vii. 11—15; Ps. cv. 17, 23; Jos. xxiv. 4.
——	——	By the sale of the corn which he had laid up during the plenteous years, Joseph renders the money, cattle, lands, and persons of 2303	1701	the Egyptians, their king's property; Gen. xlvii.
2315	1689	After blessing Joseph's sons and his own, Jacob dies, and is with great pomp carried to Canaan and buried. Joseph's brethren supplicate forgiveness; Gen. xlviii—l; Acts vii. 15, 16; Heb. xi. 21.
2369	1635	Joseph, having foretold the deliverance from Egypt, and given orders concerning his bones, dies; Gen. l. 22—26; Heb. xi. 22.
2413	1591	The oppression of the Israelites begins. Twenty years after, Moses is born; and is saved from the water, and educated by Pharaoh's daughter; Gen. xv. 13; Exod. i; ii. 1—10; vii. 7; xvi. 20; Acts vii. 18—22; Heb. xi. 23.
2473	1531	Moses, now forty years old, kills a murderous Egyptian; flees into Midian; marries Jethro's daughter; Ex. ii. 11—22; Acts vii. 23—29; Heb. xi. 24—26.
		About this time Job is plunged into great distress; disputes with his friends; is reproved by his Maker, and graciously delivered; Job i—xlii; James v. 11; Ezek. xiv. 14, 20.
2513	1491	Pitying the Hebrews' affliction, God appears to Moses at Sinai in a burning bush; appoints him and Aaron to lead them out of Egypt. After ten plagues the Egyptians allow them to depart; but afterwards pursue them through the Red sea, and are drowned, to the great joy of the Hebrews; Gen. xv. 13, 14; xlvi. 4; Exod. ii. 23—25; iii—xv; xx. 2; Deut. iv. 20, 34; vii. 18, 19; xi. 2, 3; xxix. 2, 3; Josh. xxiv. 5—7; 1 Sam. xii. 8; Neh. ix. 9—12; Ps. lxvi. 10—12; lxxiv. 12—15; lxxviii. 12—14, 42—53; lxxx. 8; lxxxi. 5, 6; lxxviii. 13—20; cv. 26, 39; cxiv. 1—3; cxxxv. 8, 9; cxxxvi. 10—15; Is. lxiii. 7—14; Jer. xxxii. 20, 21; Ezek. xvi. 3—6; Acts vii. 30—36; Heb. xi. 27—29. Directed by the pillar of cloud, the Hebrews travel in the Arabian desert south-eastward to Sinai. The bitter waters of Marah are sweetened. Quails, manna, and water from the rock, are bestowed by God for their provision. They defeat the Amalekites, and have rulers appointed; receive God's laws from mount Sinai, and are entered into covenant with him. God directs the form of his tabernacle; appoints his priests, and their consecration. Moses receives the tables of the moral law, and breaks them when he beheld the Hebrews worshipping their golden calf. By his intercession their destruction is prevented, and the tables of the law renewed; Exod. xv. 22—26; xvi—xxxiv; Deut. i. 6—18; iv, v; ix; x. 1—5; Neh. ix. 12—20. Ps. lxviii. 7, 8, 17; lxxviii. 15—25; cv. 40, 41; cvi. 13—16, 19—23; Ezek. xvi. 8—14; xx. 5—16; Acts vii. 37—44.
2514	1490	The furniture of the tabernacle is formed. It is erected, consecrated, and dedicated; Exod. xxxv—xl; Num. vii. Aaron and his sons are consecrated for priests; Lev. viii; xi. Laws of oblations, purifications, and festivals, are enacted by God; Lev. i—vii; x—xxvii. The second passover is kept; Num. ix. The Hebrews are numbered and marshalled; Num. i, ii, x; the Levites appointed to serve God instead of the first-born, and consecrated; Num. iii, iv; viii. After the giving of some other laws concerning the purity of the camp, suspected adulteresses, Nazarites, the priests' blessing of the people, and making two silver trumpets, the Hebrews march from Sinai. They murmur, and are plagued; have seventy elders added or confirmed in office. Miriam is smitten with leprosy and healed. The spies search Canaan. On their false report the Israelites despise it, and are condemned to wander and die in the wilderness. Korah and his companions rebel, and are fearfully destroyed. The priesthood is confirmed to Aaron and his family by the budding of his rod; and some laws, relative to oblations and purifications, are given; Num. v; vi; x—xix; xxxiii. 15—20; Deut. i. 19—46; ix. 22, 23; xi. 5, 6; Ps. lxxviii. 30—40; cvi. 17, 18, 24—27.
2552	1452	After wandering thirty-seven years in the Arabian desert, the Israelites come back to Kadesh-barnea. They murmur for want of water: Moses smites a rock to provide them with it. He and Aaron offend God. The Edomites refuse the Israelites a passage. Aaron dies. The Israelites murmur at the manna,
2553	1451	and are plagued by fiery serpents, but healed by the sight of a brazen one. They conquer the Canaanitish kingdoms of Sihon and Og on the east of Jordan, which are afterwards given to the Reubenites, Gadites, and Manassites; Num. xxx. 21—47; xxxi, xxxii; Deut. ii, iii; x. 6; Ps. cvi. 32, 33; John iii. 14, 15; Josh. xii. 1—6; xiii. 8—32; xx. 8; Neh. ix. 16—23. Ezek. xx. 17—26.
		Balaam, at Balak's request, repeatedly attempts to curse the Hebrews; but God obliges him to bless them, and denounce destruction upon their enemies. Advised by him, the women of Moab and Midian seduce the Israelites to whoredom and idolatry; which issues in a plague to Israel, and in destruction to Balaam and the Midianites; Num. xxii—xxv; xxxi; Ps. cvi. 28—31; 2 Pet. ii. 14, 15; Jude 11; Rev. ii. 14; Mic. vi. 4; Deut. xxiii. 3—6; Jos. xxiv. 9, 10; xiii. 21, 22. The new generation of Israelites are numbered; the manner of dividing Canaan settled; Joshua appointed to conquer it; its boundaries marked out, and princes nominated to divide it; Gen. xv. 18—21. Num. xxvi, xxvii; xxxiv. Laws of oblations at festivals; of vows; of cities of refuge; and of marriage of heiresses, are instituted; Num. xxviii—xxx; xxxv, xxxvi.
——	——	After a most solemn rehearsal of God's providences; an inculcation, explication, and enlargement of his laws; and declaration of his blessings and curses; Moses retires to mount Nebo or Pisgah, and dies, and is buried by God; Deut. i—xxxiv.
2254	1450	Succeeding to Moses, and encouraged by God, Joshua sends spies to Jericho; passes Jordan in a miraculous manner; circumcises the Hebrews; causes them to observe the passover; takes Jericho; punishes Achan for his sacrilege; takes Ai by stratagem; makes a league with the Gibeonites; Josh. i—ix; Heb. xi. 30, 31.

		parts of Canaan, Joshua, in the seventh, divides it by lot to the tribes of Judah and Ephraim, the Manassites, the tribes Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, Asher, Naphtali, and Dan; sets up the tabernacle at Shiloh; appoints the cities of refuge, and assigns to the Levites forty-eight cities and their suburbs; dismisses the Reubenites and Gadites to their home on the east of Jordan, who erect an altar of memorial. The year after was the first sabbatical year, from which the years of release and of jubilee were afterwards reckoned; Gen. xv. 18—21; xlix; Exod. xxiii. 22—31; Deut. viii, xi; xxxii. 8—14; Josh. x—xxii; Neh. ix. 23—26; Ps. xliv. 2, 3; lxvi. 12; lxviii. 10—12; lxxviii. 54, 55; viii. 8—11; cv. 42—45; xxxv. 10—12; cxxxvi. 17—22; Jer. xxxii. 21, 22; Ezek. xvi. 8—14; xx. 28; Acts vii. 44.
2570	1434	Joshua assembles the Israelites; once and again he rehearses God's favours to them; renews their covenant with God; and dies, aged 110 years; Eleazar, the high priest, dies soon after; Jos. xxiii, xxiv.
——	——	Many of the Canaanites being left in the land, and permitted to entice them, most of the new generation abandon themselves to idolatry and its attendant impieties. Micah and the Danites are ringleaders herein. By refusing to punish the lewd rakes
2591 or 2579	1413 or 1425	of Gilbeah, the Benjamites procure their almost utter destruction. To punish their wickedness, the Lord delivers up the Israelites for eight years to the oppression of the Mesopotamians; Judg. i—iii; xvii—xxi; 2 Kin. xvii. 7, &c.; Neh. ix. 26, 27;
2599 or 2587	1405 or 1417	Ezek. xx. 28, 29. Othniel, of the tribe of Judah, delivers the Israelites, and the land rests forty years; Judg. iii. 10, 11.
		The Israelites having relapsed into idolatry, God delivers them
2679 or 2645	1335 or 1359	into the hand of the Moabites for eighteen years; Judg. iii. 12—14; after which Ehud, a left-handed man, of the almost ruined tribe of Benjamin, delivers them; and the land rests eighty
		king of the Canaanites who were left in the land, Deborah and 2759 or 2792	1245 or 1212	Barak deliver them, and celebrate their victory; Judg. iv, v; x, xi; 1 Sam. xii. 9—11; Heb. xi. 32; Neh. ix. 27—31; Ps. cvi, 40—43.
		After they had been seven years oppressed by the Midianites, 2799 or 2835	1205 or 1169	Gideon a Manassite delivers them; Judg. vi, vii. After Abimelech, a bastard son of Gideon, had murdered sixty-nine of his brethren, and tyrannized over Israel three years, he or 2771	or 1233	quarrels with his Shechemite friends; is knocked on the head with a stone thrown by a woman from a tower; and, at his de-
2799 or 2860	1205 or 1144	sire, killed by his armour-bearer; Judg. ix; 2 Sam. xi. 21. Tola began to judge the Israelites on the west of Jordan. Perhaps not long after, Jair the Gileadite began to judge those on the east of Jordan. It was perhaps while they were conjunct judges that the Ammonites terribly oppressed the Israelites eighteen years; Judg. x.
2815 or 2878	1187 or 1126	Jephthah, a bastard of Gilead, delivers the Israelites; sacrifices his daughter to fulfil a rash vow; and puts to the sword 42,000 insolent Ephraimites; Judg. xi, xii.
——	——	After, or while Jephthah judged Israel six years, Ibzan seven, Elon ten, and Abdon eight, God delivers the Israelites, for 2848 or 2869	1156 or 1135	forty years, into the hands of the Philistines. Meanwhile Eli the high priest of Ithamar's family judges Israel. Samson is born and appointed to be a Nazarite. About the same time, or a few years afterwards, Samuel is born; Judg. xii, xiii; 1 Sam. i.
——	——	After Samson had for twenty years harassed the Philistines, he is taken prisoner, and enslaved by them; but at his death pulls
2888 or 2909	1116 or 1095	down the house, and kills multitudes of them. Encouraged by this, the Israelites attack the Philistines; but, being defeated, bring the ark to the camp; they are again routed, and the ark is taken. The judgments attending the ark, on themselves, and on Dagon their idol beside which they placed it, oblige the Philistines to send it back with honourable presents. The curious Bethshemites looking into it, 50,000 of them are struck dead. It is never returned to Shiloh, but remains at Kirjath-jearim; Judg. xiv—xvi; 1 Sam. ii—vi; xii. 9; Heb. xi. 32; Acts xiii. 20; Ps. lxxviii. 59—67; Jer. vii. 12, 14.—Samuel, now almost forty years old, begins to judge Israel, and some time after delivers them from the Philistines; 1 Sam. vii; Heb. xi. 32.
2909 or 2939	1095 or 1065	The Israelites, weary of God's deputy judges, request a king, to render them like the neighbouring nations. Saul is made king, and defeats the Ammonites. Samuel resigns his government; 1 Sam. viii—xii; Acts xiii. 20, 21; Heb. xi. 32—35.
2949	1055	For intermeddling with priestly work, for neglecting the utter destruction of the Amalekites and their property, and for consulting with a witch, Saul's army is routed by the Philistines; and he murders himself about two years after the death of Samuel. David, who had been anointed king by Samuel about seven years before, and who for about four years had been persecuted, and had composed several of his Psalms, as vi, vii, xxxiv, xxxv, lii—lix, lxiii, lxiv, cxx, cxl, cxlii, clxiii, &c., returns from the country of the Philistines; resents Saul's death upon an Amalekite; laments over Saul and Jonathan's death; and praises God for his deliverances; Ps. ix, xviii. Directed of God, he repairs to Hebron, where he is made king of Judah. Meanwhile Abner made Ishbosheth king of Israel; 1 Sam. xiii—xxxi; 1 Chr. x; 2 Sam. i, ii, xxii.

2956	1048	After Ishbosheth had reigned seven years, much of which time had been spent in skirmishes with the servants of David, he is deserted by Abner and murdered by two of his servants; upon which the principal men of Israel, with a large body of the people, assemble and make David their king; 2 Sam. ii—v; 1 Chr. xii; Ps. lxxxix. 19, 20, &c.; Acts xiii. 22; Ps. lxxviii. 68—72.
2962	1042	David intends to build a temple; but God restrains him; allots that honour to his son; promises to establish his kingdom; and David, with great thankfulness, pleads for its accomplishment; 2 Sam. vii; 1 Chr. xvii; xxii. 6—13; Ps. cxxxii; 1 Kin. v. 2—5; viii. 15—19; 2 Chr. vi. 4—9; Acts vii. 46.
2970	1035	After he had subdued the Philistines, Moabites, Amalekites, Syrians, and almost all the Ammonites, and thus extended the dominion of the Israelites to the utmost extent promised; Gen. xv. 18—21; Exod. xxiii. 23—31; xxxiv. 11; Deut. xi. 24; 2 Sam. viii, x; 1 Chr. xviii—xx; he commits adultery with Bathsheba; murders Uriah her husband; and, being reproved by Nathan, bitterly repents. The child sickens and dies; 2 Sam. xi, xii; Ps. li.
2971	1033	Bathsheba, perhaps the grand-daughter of Ahithophel, now David's wife, bears Solomon; 2 Sam. xii. 24, 25; 1 Chr. iii. 5; xiv. 4.
2972	1032	Amnon, David's eldest son, deflowers his sister; and after two years is murdered by Absalom her full brother; 2 Sam. xii. 10; xiii.
——	——	After Absalom had lived three years an exile with his grandfa-
2977	1027	ther Talmai king of Geshur, he is, by Joab's means, brought back to Jerusalem; and two years after is reconciled to his father David; 2 Sam. xiii. 37—39; xiv.
2983	1021	Absalom rebels against David; is joined by Ahithophel, who hanged himself, and by most of the Israelites. David and his friends flee over Jordan. There Absalom's huge host is defeated, and himself slain by Joab.—After some altercation with the men of Judah, the Israelites again revolt under Sheba; but, he being slain, they return to their allegiance; 2 Sam. xv—xx; Ps. ii—vi; xlii—xliv.
2984	1020	While the Philistines in four battles attempt to recover their liberty, they are defeated. The Lord avenges Saul's murdering of the Gibeonites by a famine of three years; 1 Chr. xx: 2 Sam. xxi.
2987	1017	David numbers his subjects. God punishes his sin in the death of 70,000 of them. By his deep humiliation and sacrifice he stops the plague. He purchases a spot for the temple to be built on; 2 Sam. xxiv; 1 Chr. xxi; xxvi. 23, 24.
2988	1016	David being now extremely infirm, Abishag is procured to sleep with him as his concubine Assisted by Joab and Abiathar,
2989	1015	Adonijah his eldest son attempts to seize the throne; but, by the activity of Nathan the prophet and Bathsheba, David gives orders to anoint Solomon his successor; 1 Kin. i.
——	——	Having made immense preparations for the building of the temple, and given Solomon a plan of it, and a charge concerning it, he fixes the order of the priests, Levites, singers, and porters, for the temple; as either now, or before, he had regulated the trained bands and the royal property; and having solemnly charged Solomon and the princes of Israel to cleave to the Lord, he soon after died.—Not long after, Adonijah, Joab,
2989	1015	and Shimei, were slain by Solomon's order; 1 Chr. xxii—xxix; 1 Kin. iii.
2990	1014	Solomon, who already had Rehoboam by an Ammonitess, marries an Egyptian princess, to whom Pharaoh her father gave Gezer, a city of the Philistines, in compliment; 1 Kin. xiv. 21; iii. 1, 2; ix. 16. In answer to his prayer in his vision, God grants Solomon an uncommon share of wisdom, which he manifests in judging between two harlots; in fixing the crown officers and providers for his large household; and in his songs, proverbs and philosophical discourses, he becomes the admiration of the princes and nations around; 1 Kin. iii, iv; 2 Chr. i.

2993	1011	After securing the assistance of Hiram king of Tyre, and making great preparations, Solomon, in the 480th year of the deliverance from Egypt, lays the foundation of the temple. It was finished in seven years and six months, just 3000 years after the creation, and 1004 before Christ's birth. The next year it was dedicated by solemn prayer and large sacrifices; 1 Kin. v
3000	1004	—ix; 2 Chr. ii—vi; Acts vii. 47. Solomon finishes his magnificent palace; 1 Kin. vii. 1; ix 10; 2 Chr. viii. 1. About this time he wrote his inspired Song; Cant. i—viii; carried on his repairs of cities and enriching trade; and was visited by
3013	991	the queen of Sheba; 1 Kin. ix, x; 2 Chr. viii, ix; i. 15—17.
3029	975	After great licentiousness with heathenish women, and apostasy to their idolatries, Solomon, being reproved by a prophet, repents; writes his Ecclesiastes, and perhaps his Proverbs; and dies; 1 Kin. xi; Neh. xiii. 26; Eccl. i—xii; Prov. i—xxix.
3029	975	Provoked by Rehoboam's haughty threatenings, the Ephraimites, and other nine tribes, revolt from the family of David, and form a separate kingdom under Jeroboam the son of Nebat. To prevent their return to Judah, by going up to Jerusalem at the solemn feasts, he establishes the idolatrous worship of the calves of Dan and Bethel among them. Nor could the reproof of the man of God, nor the miracles attending it, render him penitent; 1 Kin. xii, xiii; 2 Chr. x.
——	——	Many Levites and others retiring from the kingdom of Jeroboam to that of Rehoboam, he and his subjects conducted themselves for three years regularly, and lived prosperously. But
3034	970	afterwards revolting to idolatry, Shishak, king of Egypt, ravages their country, and pillages Jerusalem and the temple; 1 Kin. xiv. 21—31; 2 Chr. xi, xii.
3046	958	Abijam succeeds Rehoboam. He routs Jeroboam's army of 800,000, slays 500,000 of them, and takes Beth-el and other cities from him: 1 Kin. xv. 1—8; 2 Chr. xiii.
3049	955	Asa succeeds Abijam; reigns forty-one years; zealously extir-
3063	951	pates idolatry; strengthens his kingdom with forts; defeats an Ethiopian army of 1,000,000; renews his subjects' covenant with God; and deposes Maachah his idolatrous grandmother; 2 Chr. xiv, xv; 1 Kin. xv. 9—15.
3052	952	Baasha murders Nadab the son of Jeroboam and the whole fam-
3074	930	ily, and reigns over Israel. Engaged in a war with Baasha, or	or	Asa hires the Syrians treacherously to invade the kingdom of
3064	940	Israel, and imprisons the prophet who reproved his conduct; 1 Kin. xv. 16—22; 1 Chr. xvi. 1—10.
3075	929	Zimri murders Elah the son of Baasha; reigns over Israel seven days; but, being besieged by his master's troops, he burns the palace upon himself; 1 Kin. xvi. 9—20.
3079	925	After four years of civil war between Omri and Tibni, Omri prevails and reigns wickedly; builds Samaria, and renders it his capital; 1 Kin. xvi. 21—28; Mic. vi. 16.
3086	918	Ahab, still more wicked than his father, reigns over Israel; marries Jezebel a Zidonian princess; and by her advice introduces the worship of Baal: Hiel, with the loss of his sons, rebuilds accursed Jericho; 1 Kin. xvi. 29—34; Mic. vi. 16.
3090	914	Asa dying, Jehoshaphat succeeds him. He reforms his kingdom, fortifies his cities, and forms a militia of 1,160, 000; 2 Chr. xvii; 1 Kin. xxii. 41—46. He first made friendship with the kings of Israel, and took Ahab's daughter to be the wife of Jehoram his son.
——	——	In answer to Elijah's prayer, a drought of three years and a half plagues the kingdom of Israel. Ravens at first, and afterwards a poor widow of Zarephath, whose son he restores to life, feed Elijah.
——	——	Having by his sacrifice, burnt with fire from heaven, demonstrated that not Baal, but JEHOVAH, was the true God, he causes the prophets of Baal to be slain, and procures rain—Terrified by the threatenings of Jezebel, he retires far southward to Sinai; but is reproved by God for his flight, and ordered back to anoint Jehu king over Israel, Hazael over Syria, and Elisha prophet in his own room; 1 Kin. xvii—xix.
3103	901	Benhadad king of Syria having insolently threatened the destruction of Samaria, God punishes him with a signal defeat
3104	900	by a handful of Israelites. Next year, to punish his captain's blasphemy, his army is almost utterly cut off. He submits; and Ahab, to his own ruin, makes a treaty of peace with him; 1 Kin. xx.
3105	899	By seizing upon Naboth's vineyard, whom Jezebel had for this purpose basely murdered, Ahab draws upon himself and family fearful denunciations of wrath; but his external repentance for a time defers the execution; 1 Kin. xxi.
3107	897	Having in the preceding year associated their eldest sons, Ahaziah and Jehoram, in power with themselves, Ahab and Jehoshaphat, encouraged by the false prophets, march against the Syrians for the recovery of Ramoth-Gilead. Jehoshaphat is endangered, and Ahab slain; 1 Kin. xxii; 2 Chr. xviii.
3108	896	While Jehoshaphat, reproved by a prophet, proceeds in the reformation of his kingdom, Ahaziah, the successor of Ahab, dies of a fall from a window.—Elijah destroys two idolatrous troops by fire from heaven; is translated. Elisha succeeds him; heals the bitter water and barren fields of Jericho: and by two she-bears destroys forty-two insolent children of Bethel; 1 Kin. xxii. 49—53; 2 Chr. xix; 2 Kin. i, ii.
3109	895	The Moabites, who had been subject to the Israelites since David conquered them, rebelling after the death of Ahab, Jehoram his son, assisted by Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom, and miraculously supplied with water by Elisha, ravages their country; 2 Kin. iii.
——	——	Elisha multiplies the widow's oil; promises a son to the Shunammite, and restores him to life; renders poison harmless; multiplies provision; heals Naaman of his leprosy, and smites Gehazi with it; makes iron swim; blinds and opens the eyes of the Syrian soldiers. The Syrians, affrighted by God, raise the siege of Samaria, when the inhabitants were almost famished, and leave plenty of provision; 2 Kin. iv—vii.
3112	892	Meanwhile Jehoshaphat is miraculously victorious over the allied army which had invaded his kingdom with a view to extirpate the Israelites; 2 Chr. xx; Ps. xlviii, lxxxiii.——He allots his younger sons presents and fenced cities; and, for the second time, installs Jehoram on his throne; 2 Chr. xxi. 2, 3; 2 Kin. viii. 16.
3115	889	After Jehoshaphat's death, Jehoram, being sole king, introduces the idolatry of the house of Ahab his father-in-law into Judea, murders his brethren, and contemns the warning which the prophet Elijah had left him. The Edomites and Libnites revolt. The Philistines, Arabs, and others, ravage his kingdom and murder his family; 2 Chr. xxi; 2 Kin. viii. 16—24.
3119	885	Ahaziah, his only surviving son, succeeds; and having reigned about a year alone, he and Jehoram king of Israel, and other male descendants of Ahab, together with Jezebel and the priests of Baal, are slain by Jehu, to whom God had given the kingdom of Israel; 2 Kin. viii. 25, 29; ix, x; 2 Chr. xxii.
		After Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, had murdered all the seed-royal of David she could find, and had tyrannized six years, Jehoiada the high priest, assisted by his fellow priests
3126	878	and nobles, installs Joash, Ahaziah's son, when seven years of age, on the throne; kills Athaliah and Matan her idolatrous high priest; reforms the nation; and renews their covenant with God; 2 Kin. xi; 2 Chr. xxiii.
3149	855	Jehoash, in the twenty-third year of his reign, gives orders for repairing the temple, which are executed with great prudence and fidelity; 2 Kin. xii; 2 Chr. xxiv. Jehu king of Israel is succeeded by Jehoahaz his son. Under both, especially the latter, Hazael, who, by murdering his master Benhadad had become king of Syria, terribly ravaged their kingdom; 2 Kin. x. 29—36; xiii. 1—9; viii. 7—15.
3164	840	Joash, king of Judah, and his subjects, turn idolaters. He murders Zechariah the priest, son of Jehoiada, and his own cousin, for reproving him. Soon after the Syrians ravage his kingdom, and his servants murder him; 2 Kin. xii. 17—21; 2 Chr. xxiv. 17—27.
3165	839	Jehoash, grandson of Jehu, succeeds his father Jehoahaz as sole king of Israel; visits the prophet Elisha on his deathbed; according to whose predictions he gives the Syrians three terrible defeats; 2 Kin. xiii. 10—23; xiv. 15, 16.
3166	838	Amaziah succeeds his father Joash on the throne of Judah; punishes the murderers of his father: ravages the country of the Edomites with inhuman barbarity; provokes Jehoash king of Israel to war, in which his army is routed, Jerusalem and the temple pillaged, and himself taken prisoner; 2 Kin. iv. 1—14; 2 Chr. xxv.
——	——	Jonah the prophet foretells the relief of the Israelites. Unwilling to denounce the destruction of Nineveh, he flees to Tarshish. A whale swallows him up, and, after three days, casts him out upon dry land. He warns the Ninevites; they repent and are spared; 2 Kin. xiv. 25; Jonah i—iv; Mat. xii. 39—41; xvi. 4.
3180	824	After being his father's partner twelve years, Jeroboam succeeds his father Jehoash, and restores the kingdom of Israel almost to its ancient glory; 2 Kin. xiv. 16, 23—28.
3194	810	Amaziah king of Judah being murdered by his subjects, Azariah or Uzziah succeeds him and reigns prosperously fifty-two years; 2 Kin. xiv. 21, 22; xv. 1—4; 2 Chr. xxvi. 1—15.
——	——	The prophets Amos, Hosea, and perhaps Joel, prophesy; reprove the Israelites for their sins, and foretell their approaching, but just judgments; Amos i—ix; Hos. i—xiv; Joel i—iii.
3221	783	A terrible earthquake is felt in Judea; Amos i. 1; Zech. xiv 5; Jeroboam II. dying, a civil war, at least an interregnum of eleven years and a half, ensues; at the end of which Zachariah his son, the fourth in descent from Jehu, reigns six months; 2 Kin. xv. 8—12; x. 30.

3233	771	Shallum his murderer had reigned but one month, when Menahem, probably Zechariah's general, slew him, and reigned ten years. While he was butchering his opponents, Pul king of Assyria invaded the kingdom, and laid it under tribute; 2 Kin. xv. 13—22.
3241	763	About this time Uzziah, proud of his conquests and wealth, attempts to offer incense in the temple, is withstood by Azariah the high priest, and struck with a leprosy. Jotham his son governs the kingdom; 2 Kin. xv. 5, 6; 2 Chr. xxvi. 16—23.
——	——	Isaiah and Micah begin to prophesy; Is. i—vi; Micah i.
3245	759	Having murdered Pekahiah the son of Menahem, Pekah begins to reign over Israel, and reigns twenty years.
3246	758	Next year Jotham begins his prosperous reign over Judah; 2 Kin. xv. 27, 28, 32—38; 2 Chr. xxvii.
3262	742	Ahaz succeeds Jotham, and reigns very wickedly and unhappily. Pekah king of Israel kills 120,000 of his best troops in one battle, and carries off 200,000 prisoners, which, by order of the prophet Oded, are sent back. He and Resin king of Syria ravage Judea, and intend to render it tributary to them, under a deputy of their own. The Edomites and Philistines, from the south and west, also distress it. Ahaz hires Tiglath-pileser of Assyria to attack his enemies, who, after murdering multitudes of the Syrians and Israelites on the east of Jordan and in Galilee, carries the rest captive to Media. Ahaz introduces the Syrian idolatry, and pollutes the temple; 2 Chr. xxviii; Is. vii. 1—9; 2 Kin. xvi; xv. 29.
3262	742	Hosea, Isaiah, and Micah, still continue prophesying; Hos. iv—xiv; Is. vii—xiv; Mic. i, ii.
3274	730	Hoshea, who had killed Pekah nine years before, at last, by a long civil war, renders himself king of Israel, and is less wicked than his predecessors. Shalmaneser king of Assyria renders him tributary; 2 Kin. xv. 30; xvii. 1, 2.
3278	726	After being partner with his father one year, Hezekiah begins to reign alone over Judah. He, with great zeal and diligence, reforms his kingdom; refuses to pay tribute to the Assyrians; and reduces the Philistines; 2 Chr. xxix—xxxi; 2 Kin. xviii. 1—8; Is. xiv. 29.
3283	721	Finding that Hoshea had, with the assistance of the Egyptians, conspired to render himself independent, Shalmaneser invades his kingdom; demolishes Samaria his capital; takes him prisoner; and transports the remaining Israelites to Assyria and Media, whence few, if any of them, ever returned to Canaan; Is. vii, viii, xxiv, xxviii; Hos. iv—xiii; Amos ii—ix; Mic. ii, iii, vi, vii; 2 Kin. xvii. 3—23; xviii. 9—12; 2 Chr. xxx. 6; Neh. ix. 32. He soon after ravaged Phenicia, and besieged Tyre five years, &c.
3291	713	Having reduced the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Philistines, if not also the Egyptians, Sennacherib the Assyrian, contrary to treaty, invades Judea, and takes all the fenced cities except 3294	710	Jerusalem: his army is cut off, perhaps in the third year, by an angel, on the east of Jerusalem. During this war Hezekiah was miraculously delivered from his deadly distemper; Amos i, ii; Is. xv, xxiv—xxxviii; Mic. i—iii; 2 Kin. xviii—xx; 2 Chr. xxxii.
——	——	Chaldean ambassadors coming to Hezekiah, he vainly shows them his wealth. God threatens him, that it and his seed should be carried captive to Babylon; Is. xxxix; 2 Kin. xx. 12—21; 2 Chr. xxxii. 25—33.
——	——	While Judah flourishes, Isaiah, and perhaps Micah, prophesy; Is. xl—lxvi; Mic. iv, v.
3306	698	Manasseh succeeds Hezekiah. He introduces idolatry, persecution, and other abominations; 2 Kin. xxi; xxiv. 3, 4; xxii. 1, 17; Jer. xv. 4; 2 Chr. xxxiii. 1—10.
3328	676	Esarhaddon invades Judea; carries Manasseh prisoner to Babylon; where he repents, and is restored to his kingdom, perhaps as a tributary of the Assyrians, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 11—19.
——	——	About this time Esarhaddon transported the remains of the Israelites to the East, and further repeopled their country with heathen tribes from Persia, Chaldea, &c. They formed a religion, partly Jewish, partly heathen; and were called Samaritans, 2 Kin. xvii. 21—41; Ezra iv. 2, 9, 10, 17; John iv; viii. 48; Luke ix. 52, 53.
3363	641	Josiah, a child of eight years, succeeds his obstinately wicked father Amon: he, with great zeal, reforms his kingdom; repairs the temple; renews his subjects' covenant with God; solemnly celebrates the passover.—During his reign Jeremiah and Zephaniah prophesy, if not also Nahum and Habakkuk; Jer. i, perhaps to xvii; Zeph. i—iii; Nah. i—iii; Hab. i—iii.
3394	610	Unadvisedly giving battle to Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, Josiah is slain; after which the kingdom of Judah becomes miserable; 2 Kin. xxiii. 29, 30; 2 Chr. xxxv. 20—24.
3395	609 (xlvi)	Jehoahaz, whom the people had made king, being carried prisoner into Egypt, Pharaoh-necho makes Jehoiakim king, who reigns wickedly eleven years, 2 Kin. xxiii. 31—37; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 1—5. Under him Jeremiah and Urijah, if not also, Habakkuk and Zephaniah, prophesy; Jer. xix, xx, xxvi, xxii, xxiii, xxv, xxxv, xxxvi, xlv, xlvi—xlix; Hab. i—iii; Zeph. i—iii.
3398	606	Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean, now partner in the kingdom with his father, invades Judea; renders Jehoiakim his tributary; carries off Daniel, his companions, and others, to Babylon, with part of the vessels of the temple of God, which he places in that of Belus: 2 Chr. xxxvi. 6, 7; Jer. xxxv. 11; xxix. 10; Is. xxxix. 7; Dan. i. 2, 3, 7, &c.
3401	603	Jehoiakim rebels against Nebuchadnezzar, now sole king of Babylon; 2 Kin. xxiv. 1.
——	——	Daniel makes known and interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the image, which the wise men could not; Dan. ii.
3403	601	After a long and furious war, Nineveh is destroyed by the Medes, assisted by Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldean; Nah. i—iii; Ezek. xxxi.
3405	599	His son Jehoiakin, whom, it seems, he had made his partner ten years before, after reigning alone three months and ten days, surrenders himself to Nebuchadnezzar, who carries him and his family, courtiers, and principal magistrates, warriors, and artificers, in all 18,000, to Babylon; together with Ezekiel the priest, afterwards a prophet, and Mordecai, and part of the furniture of the temple; 2 Kin. xx. 17, 18; Is. xxxix. 6, 7; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 9, 10; 2 Kin. xxiv. 6—10; Jer. xxii. 24—30; xxix. 1, 2; xxiv; Ezek. xvii. 4, 12; i. 2, 3; Esth. ii. 6.
3406	598	Zedekiah, brother of Jehoiakim, being made king by Nebuchadnezzar, as his tributary, reigns wickedly —Jeremiah continues prophesying in Judea; Jer. xxi, xxvii—xxxiv, xxxvii, xxxviii, l, li; if not also xix, xx; and Ezekiel begins to prophesy in Chaldea; Ezek. i—xxxi.
——	——	Zedekiah, depending on the Egyptians, rebelled; to punish which,
3416	588	Nebuchadnezzar, after a siege of almost two years, burns Jerusalem and the temple; carries off captive all the Jews who remained, except a few of the poorer sort; whom, together with Jeremiah, now liberated from prison, he commits to the care of Gedaliah. But Gedaliah being quickly murdered, the rest retire into Egypt, and force Jeremiah along with them; Jer. lii, xxxix—xliv; 2 Kin. xxv; 2 Chr. xxxvi; Lam. i—v.
——	——	Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Obadiah, prophesy; Jer. xliii, xliv; Ezek. xxxii—xlviii; Ob. i; Ps. lxxiv, cxxix, cxxxvii, are penned; and Jeremiah's Lamentations i—v.
3433	571	Having desolated the countries of Ammon, Moab, Edom, Phenicia, Philistia, and Egypt, Nebuchadnezzar returns to Babylon, where, out of his immense spoils, he forms a gigantic image to his god Belus. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, refusing to worship it, are miraculously preserved in the fiery furnace, and are promoted to great honours; Jer. xxv, xlvi—xlix; Ezek. xxv—xxxi, xxxv; Is. xv—xxiii; Hab. i, ii; Dan. iii. He also builds palaces, hanging gardens, the temple of Belus, &c., Dan. iv. 30.
3434	570	Daniel interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the tree cut down. Next year, Nebuchadnezzar, for his pride, is deprived of his reason, and dethroned for seven years; Dan. iv; v, 18. 21.
3442	562	Nebuchadnezzar hath his reason restored; he acknowledges God's sovereignty; is restored to his throne; and dies, having reigned forty-five years.
3443	561	Evil-merodach; his son, succeeds, and exalts Jehoiachin king of the Jews; 2 Kin. xxv, xxvii—xxx. Jer. lii. 31—34.
3449	555	Neriglissar, Nebuchadnezzar's son-in-law, who had murdered Evil-merodach, and his family being murdered in their turn, Belshazzar, the son of Evil-merodach, becomes king of Babylon; Jer. xxvii. 7. Daniel hath his vision of the four beasts; and about two years after, of the ram and he-goat; Dan. vii, viii.
3466	538	While the Medes and Persians besiege Babylon, Belshazzar and his lords celebrate an impious revel. A hand-writing, interpreted by Daniel, denounces their immediate ruin. That same night Babylon is taken, Belshazzar slain, and his monarchy rendered subject to the Medes and Persians; Dan. v; Is. xiii, xiv, xxi, xlvi, xlvii; Jer. xxv. 12; xxvii. 7; l. li; Hab. ii.
——	——	Daniel is advanced by Darius the Mede; but, by the envy of his fellow-rulers, is cast into the den of lions. He is delivered and his accusers destroyed; Dan. vi. Hé solemnly supplicates the restoration of the Jewish nation; has the coming of Christ and the disasters attending it, intimated to him by the angel Gabriel; Dan. ix.

3468	536	Cyrus succeeding his father Cambyses as king of Persia, and Darius his uncle and father-in-law as king of Media, proclaims liberty for the Jews to return to Canaan and rebuild their temple, and restore to them their sacred vessels, which had been dedicated to the Chaldean idol Bel. About 30,000 of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and perhaps 12,000 of the other tribes, 7337 proselytes and servants, return under the direction of Zerubbabel and Jeshua; Is. xliv. 23—28; xlv. 13; xlviii. 20; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 22, 23; Ezra i, ii; Neh. vii.
3469	535	After observing the feast of tabernacles, and making preparation for seven months, the Jews, amidst joy and grief, lay the foundation of the second temple; Ezra iii. But their Samaritan neighbours, by their open influence at court, and by accusing them as rebels to Cambyses and Artaxerxes Magus, long hinder the building; Ezra iv. Daniel hath his last vision; x—xii.
3480	524	Cambyses, after the death of Amasis, ravages Egypt and part of Ethiopia, and ruins his own army.
3484	520	Encouraged by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, and after this by a decree of Darius Hystaspes in their favour, the Jews re-
3489	515	sume the building of their temple; and in about four years finish and dedicate it, about seventy-two years after it had been burnt by the Chaldeans; Ezra v, vi; Hag. i, ii; Zech. i—xix. About this time Darius reduced the revolted Babylonians; Is. xiii, xiv, xxi, xlvii; Jer. l, li.
3490	514	Perhaps about this time Esther was made queen of Persia instead of Vashti; and after five years the plot and ruin of Haman took place. But some historians place these events thirty-six years later, under Xerxes, or rather fifty six, under Artaxerxes Longimanus; Esth. i—x.
3517	487	The Egyptians revolt from Darius. About six years after, Xerxes his son reduces them.
3525	479	Darius having, for the last sixteen years of his life, carried on an unsuccessful war with the Greeks, Xerxes his son, after four years' preparation, invades their country with an army of some millions: but he and his Carthaginian allies are shamefully repulsed; Dan. xi. 2; x. 20; vii. 5; viii. 4.
3540	464	Artaxerxes Longimanus succeeds his father Xerxes. The Egyptians again revolt, but are reduced.
3547	457	Ezra is sent to Jerusalem by Artaxerxes, as his deputy governor of Judea. With great zeal he separates the Jews from their strange wives; Ezra vii—x. Perhaps it was now that Esther was married to Ahasuerus, and Haman's plot and ruin five years after; Esth. i—x; and, by her influence, Artaxerxes greatly favoured the Jews.
3559	445	Nehemiah is appointed deputy governor of Judea, and rebuilds Jerusalem. Continuing in that office 18, or perhaps 36 years, he labours to reform his nation; Neh. i—xiii; Dan. ix. 25.
3574	430	Malachi the prophet reproves the Jews for their contempt of God's ordinances, sacrilege, marriages with heathens, and cruelty to their Jewish wives; Mal. i—iv.
3591	413	The Egyptians revolt from Darius Nothus king of Persia. It required 64 years to reduce them; Is. xix; Ezek. xxix, xxx; Zech. x. 11; Joel iii. 19; Is. xxvii. 1.
3596	408	Scarcely had Nehemiah finished his reformation, when Manasseh, the son-in-law of Sanballat, began to build the Samaritan temple on mount Gerizzim; Neh. xiii. 28, 29; John iv. 20.
3655	349	After reducing the revolted Cyprians and Phenicians, and ravaging part of Judea, Artaxerxes Ochus, king of Persia, finally reduces the Egyptians; since which they have never been governed by a prince of their own; Ezek. xxix. 14, 15; xxx. 13; Zech. x. 11; Is. xix.
3670	334	After the Persians and Greeks had been generally in a state of war for 160 years, Alexander the Great marches 35,000 Greeks into Asia, with whom, in six years, he conquers the whole Persian empire; Dan. vi, vii; viii. 5—7; x. 20; xi. 3; Zech. vi. 6.
3672	332	Alexander furiously destroys Tyre and Philistia. The Jews and Egyptians submit to him; Is. xxiii. 1—18; Zech. ix. 1—8.
3681	323	Alexander dies. Within fifteen years after, his whole family is murdered, and his empire divided among four of his principal generals; Dan. vii. 6; viii. 8; xi. 4. The two principal divisions were the kingdom or empire of Egypt on the south of Canaan, and of Syria on the north. For more than 150 years these were generally in a state of war one with another; nevertheless, the Jews, whose country lay betwixt them, were marvellously protected by Providence; Dan. xi. 5—29; Zech. x. 8.
3829	175	Antiochus Epiphanes, succeeding his brother Seleucus, persecutes the Jews, and sets to sale their high priesthood. He makes four attempts to rob Ptolemy his nephew of the kingdom of Egypt.
3834	170	In his return from his second expedition into Egypt he takes Jerusalem, murders 40,000, and takes as many more prisoners to be sold for slaves.
3836	168	In his return from his fourth expedition, when he was checked by the peremptory demands of the Roman ambassadors, he stops the daily sacrifice, and attempts to abolish the Jewish worship.
3840	164	After some years' struggling, Judas Maccabeus defeats Antiochus army at Jerusalem, restores the worship of God in the temple, and institutes the feast of dedication. Not long after this Antiochus dies miserably; Dan. xi. 21—35; viii. 23—25; Zech. i. 20, 21; ix. 13—17; xii. 2—7; John x. 22.
——	——	For thirty years after, Judas and his brethren Jonathan and Simeon protect their nation; governing their church as high priests, and their state as civil rulers dependent on the Syro-Grecians.
3870	134	After this John Hircanus the son of Simeon, and Alexander Janneus his son, having rendered the Jewish nation independent, reign prosperously for about fifty years, and subdue the Samaritans, Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, and Philistines; Is. xi. 14; Mic. iv. 12, 13; Ob. xviii—21.
3926	78	After a war of six years with his subjects, Alexander dies. Alexandra his widow wisely governs the state nine years, Hircanus her son being high priest.
3940	64	After five years' contention between Hircanus, her elder but peaceable son, and Aristobulus the younger, they both apply to the Romans for help.
3941	63	Pompey the Roman general takes part with Hircanus; and taking Jerusalem from Aristobulus, carries him prisoner to Rome, where he is poisoned about 14 years after.
3957	47	Antipater, who had been a partisan of Hircanus, obtains for his son Phasael the government of Judea, and for Herod the Great the government of Galilee.
3960	44	Julius Cæsar, who, after great success in war, had altered the republican form of the Roman government, and made himself emperor, is slain by Brutus, Cassius, and others, in the senate-house.
3964	40	Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, having been made king of Judea by the Parthians; Herod of Galilee, by the assistance of the Romans, wrests the kingdom from him.
3982	18	Herod having offended the Jews, by some heathenish structures in compliment to Augustus the Roman emperor, attempts to regain their favour by rebuilding their ruinous temple.
4000		After a solemn annunciation of their birth by the angel Gabriel, John Baptist and Christ are born, to the great joy of their parents. Jesus' birth is published to the shepherds. He is circumcised, and presented at the temple; and solemnly acknowledged the Messiah by Simeon and Anna; Mat. i, ii; Luke i; ii; 1—38; iii. 23—38.
		Wise men of the Gentiles come from the east to worship him. God admonishes them not to return to Herod to inform him concerning the divine Babe. To secure his destruction, Herod murders all the babes under two years old in and about Bethlehem; but an angel had previously warned Joseph and Mary to carry Jesus into Egypt, where he was safe; Mat. ii. 1—18.
4002		Herod being dead, Joseph and Mary, with the babe Jesus, return to Canaan, and settle at Nazareth in Galilee; Mat. ii. 18—23;
A.D.
4009	6	Judas of Galilee raises an insurrection; Acts v. 37. Archelaus, who reigned in the room of his father Herod, being accused of mal-administration, is deposed by the Romans, and Judea is formed into one of their provinces.
4012	9	Jesus goes up with his parents to the passover, and disputes with the doctors in the temple; Luke ii. 39—52.
4030	27	John Baptist begins to preach and baptize, warning the Jews to prepare for receiving the Messiah, who was about to be manifested; Mat. iii. 1—12; Mark i. 1—8; Luke iii. 1—18; John i. 7—19.
4032	29	Jesus is baptized by John at Bethabara near Jericho; and is attested by his Father and the Holy Ghost from heaven; Mat. iii. 13—17; Mark i. 9—11; Luke iii. 21—23. He is led by the Spirit into the wilderness of Judah to fast, and to be forty days tempted of the devil; Mat. iv. 1—11; Mark i. 12, 13; Luke iv. 1—13. Being examined concerning his character, John acknowledges himself the Messiah's forerunner, and points out Jesus as the Messiah to his hearers and disciples; John i. 20—37. Having become acquainted with Andrew, Peter, Philip, and Nathanael, Jesus returns into Galilee, perhaps attended by the last two: and there, at a marriage, turns water into wine; John i. 35—51; ii. 1—12.
4033	30	After making a short visit to Capernaum, Jesus goes up to the passover at Jerusalem; where he expels the merchants from the courts of the temple; foretells his own death and resurrection; and confers with Nicodemus concerning the new birth, the end of his mision, &c. John ii. 12—25; iii. 1—21. Departs from Jerusalem, and preaches with great applause; which John hearing of, joyfully extols him; John iii. 22—36; and is soon after cast into prison; Mat. xiv. 10; Luke iii. 19, 20; Mark vi. 17. Jesus returns northward to Galilee through Samaria, where he converts a harlot and many of her neighbours; is welcomed to Galilee; at Cana restores to health a nobleman's son; John iv; preaches at Nazareth to the hazard of his life; Luke iv. 6—30; removes to Capernaum, where he preaches with acceptance; calls Peter and Andrew, James and John to be his stated attendants; casts out a devil in the synagogue and heals Peter's mother-in-law; after which he takes a tour through the other cities of Galilee; multitudes following him to hear his sermons, or to obtain his miraculous cures; Mark i. 14—39; Luke iv. 31—44; v. 1—11; Mat. iv. 13—25; viii. 14, 15. Preaches the sermon on the Mount; Mat. v—vii. Descending from thence, he cures a leper; Mat. viii. 1—4; Mark i. 40—46; Luke v. 12—16. Returns to Capernaum, where he cures a man of the palsy, and calls Matthew to be his disciple; Mat. ix. 2—9; Mark ii. 1—14; Luke v. 17—28.

4034	31	Goes up to his second passover at Jerusalem, where he cures the lame man at the pool of Bethesda on the Sabbath, and vindicates his conduct, from his equality with God, and the office he had from God; John v. Returning to Galilee, he vindicates the rubbing out ears of corn by his hungry disciples for their refreshment on the Sabbath-day; cures a man's withered hand on the Sabbath, and justifies his conduct; is followed by multitudes to the sea of Galilee; many of whom he heals of their diseases, and forbids the possessed to acknowledge his Messiahship; Mat. xii. 1—21; Mark ii. 23—28; iii. 1—12; Luke vi. 1—11.
——	——	Having prayed all night on a mountain, he chooses his twelve disciples from among his other followers; descends to the plain; works many miracles; repeats part of his celebrated sermon on the Mount; Mark iii. 13—19; Luke vi. 12—49; heals the centurion's servant, and commends his faith; Mat. viii. 5—13; Luke vii. 1—10; raises the widow of Nain's son to life; Luke vii. 11—17; Mark iii. 19—21; answers John Baptist's inquiry, Whether he was the promised Messiah? discourses concerning John, and bewails the fate of the impenitent cities of Galilee; Luke vii. 18—35; Mat. xi; dines with a Pharisee, and vindicates the woman who anointed his feet; Luke vii. 36—50. Takes another tour through the cities of Galilee, attended by his disciples and some pious women; answers the Pharisees' charge of correspondence with Satan; warns them of the danger of sinning against the Holy Ghost, and of idle words; upbraids the Pharisees' perverseness in seeking a sign from heaven; pronounces the parable of the relapsed demoniac against them; intimates his resolution to persevere in his work, and his endeared affection to his obedient disciples; Luke viii. 1—3; xi. 14—36; Mat. xii. 22—50; Mark iii. 22—35.
——	——	Retiring to the west side of the sea of Tiberias, he delivers the parables of the sower and of the tares, which he afterwards explained to his disciples: and of the springing field, the mustard-seed, the leaven, the hid treasure, the pearl, and the net; Mat. xiii; Mark iv. 1—34; Luke viii. 4—18. After answering some who professed their inclination to follow him, he crosses the sea eastward, and stills a tempest; Mat. viii. 18—27; Mark iv. 35—41; Luke ix. 57—62; dislodges the devils out of two madmen, the one extremely furious; and permits them to enter into and drown the swine; and, at the request of the Gadarenes, leaves the country, and crosses the sea to Capernaum; Mat. viii. 28—34; ix. 1; Mark v. 1—21; Luke viii. 26—40. Being feasted at Matthew's house, he justifies his conversing with sinners; vindicates his disciples' present omission of religious austerities; cures an inveterate bloody issue, and restores to life Jairus' daughter; Mat. ix. 10—34; Mark ii. 15—22; v. 22—43; Luke v. 29—39; viii. 41—56. Removes from Capernaum to Nazareth, where, being again rejected, he begins another new circuit through the cities of Galilee: Mat. xiii. 54—58; ix. 35—38; Mark vi. 1—6. Sends forth his disciples to preach in different parts, with proper directions and encouragements: Mat. x; xi. 1; Mark vi. 1—13; Luke ix. 1—6. Herod the tetrarch of Galilee suspects him to be John Baptist, whom he had lately beheaded at the instigation of Herodias his incestuous harlot; Mat. xiv. 1—12; Mark vi. 14—29; Luke ix. 7—9.
4035	32	Jesus' disciples being returned from their missions, he retires to the desert of Bethsaida; multitudes flocking to hear him, he miraculously feeds 5000 with a few loaves. To avoid their making him a king, he crosses the sea westward; walks on the sea; stills a tempest; heals many diseased; is followed by the multitude whom he had feasted; he represents himself as the bread of life; is quickly deserted by multitudes; tries the constancy of his disciples, and foretells that one of them should betray him; Mat. xiv. 13—36; Mark vi. 30—56; Luke ix. 10—17; John vi. He condemns Pharisaic washings and traditions; and inculcates purity of heart; Mat. xv. 1—20; Mark vii. 1—23.
——	——	About the time of the third passover he withdraws into the borders of Tyre and Zidon; commends the Syro-Phenician woman's faith, and casts the devil out of her daughter; returning through Decapolis, cures a deaf man; and after feeding 4000 with a few loaves, crosses the sea of Tiberias westward, and lands near Dalmanutha and Magdala; Mat. xv. 21—39; Mark vii, 24—37; viii. 1—10. Again upbraids the Pharisees for asking a sign of his Messiahship, and heals a blind man at Bethsaida. Returning thence to Cesarea Philippi, near the springs of Jordan, he acknowledges himself the Messiah; foretells his sufferings; rebukes Peter; and encourages his disciples to self-denial and martyrdom; Mat. xvi; Mark viii. 11—38; ix. 1; Luke ix. 18—27. On the eighth day after he is transfigured; foretells his death and resurrection; declares that John Baptist was the New Testament Elias; descends from the mount; casts out an obstinate devil; warns his disciples of his future sufferings; causes a fish to bring money for his tribute at Capernaum; Mat. xvii; Mark ix. 2—32; Luke ix. 28—45; recommends harmony and humility; directs how to deal with offending brethren; and, by the parable of the unmerciful servant, inculcates forgiveness of injuries; Mark ix. 33—37, 42—50; Luke ix. 46—48; Mat. xviii; and reproves John for rebuking a caster-out of devils; Mark ix. 38—41; Luke ix. 49, 50.
——	——	After discoursing with his unbelieving kinsmen, he goes up to the feast of tabernacles at Jerusalem, where he preaches in the temple; vindicates his conduct and mission; and the Sanhedrim attempt to apprehend him; John vii. Next morning he returns to the court of the temple; declines judging in the case of the adulteress; represents himself as the light of the world; warns his hearers against unbelief and a dependence on their descent from Abraham; and declares his own pre-eternity; whereupon the Jews attempt to stone him; John viii. The seventy disciples return with a joyful account of their success; he shows the scribe the way to eternal life; delivers the parable of the good Samaritan; and, leaving Jerusalem, comes to Bethany, where he commends Mary's attention and choice; Luke x. 17—42. Returning to Galilee, he instructs his disciples how to pray; delivers the parable of the importunate friend; dining with a Pharisee, he admonishes him and his brethren of their sin and danger; Luke xi. 1—13, 37—54; cautions his disciples against hypocrisy and the fear of man; declines to decide a case of property between two brothers; pronounces the parable of the rich fool; repeats the cautions against covetousness which he had given in his sermon on the Mount; inculcates watchfulness for his second coming, and care to entertain his present message; Luke xii; urges the necessity of repentance; delivers the 4035	32	parable of the barren fig-tree; cures a deformed woman on the Sabbath; and, regardless of Herod's hatred, prosecutes his work; Luke xiii. Invited to dine with a Pharisee, he cures a man of a dropsy on the Sabbath, and vindicates himself; recommends humility and generosity; in his parable of the marriage-supper, foretells the rejection of the Jews and calling of the Gentiles; and urges a deliberate resolution in religion; Luke xiv. To vindicate his familiar converse with publicans and sinners he pronounces the parable of the lost sheep, lost piece of silver, and prodigal son; Luke xv; and of the unjust steward and rich glutton; Luke xvi; and exhorts his disciples to simplicity, forgiving offences, and humility; Luke xvii. 1—11. Travelling through Samaria to Jerusalem, he rebukes the intemperate zeal of James and John against the Samaritans, and heals ten lepers; Luke ix. 51—56; xvii. 12—19. Coming near to Jerusalem, he warns the Jews against expecting a pompous kingdom of the Messiah; and foretells their approaching miseries; Luke xvii. 20—37; and, by his parables of the importunate widow and the humbled publican, he recommends importunity, perseverance, and humility, in prayer; Luke xviii. 1—14. At Jerusalem, during the feast of dedication, he opens the eyes of one born blind; encourages him when excommunicated by the Sanhedrim; admonishes the proud Pharisees of their danger; represents himself as the Messiah and Shepherd of God's flock, and as one with his Father; and, to avoid being stoned as a blasphemer on that account, retires beyond Jordan.
4036	33	Here he declares against rash divorces; blesses the little children; tries the young ruler's obedience; represents the danger of riches; Mat. xix; Mark x. 1—31; Luke xviii. 15—30; and, by the parable of labourers in a vineyard, warns the Jews not to envy the Gentiles' admission to fellowship with God in his church; Mat. xx. 1—16. Informed of Lazarus' sickness, after his death he returns to Bethany near Jerusalem, and raises him from the dead: the Sanhedrim having agreed he should for this be put to death, he retires to a city called Ephraim; John xi. Returning towards Jerusalem, he foretells his sufferings; rebukes the ambition of James, John, and their mother; and, passing through Jericho, cures two blind men; Mat. xx. 17—34; Mark x. 32—52; Luke xviii. 31—43. He converts Zaccheus the publican; and, by the parable of the pounds, represents the misery coming on the Jewish nation; Luke xix. 1—28. At Bethany he is feasted by Lazarus, and anointed by Mary; John xii. 1—11; Mat. xxvi. 6—13; Mark xiv. 3—9. On the first day of the week he rides in triumph to Jerusalem; weeps over it upon sight of it; drives out the traders from the court of the temple, and works miracles there; converses with some Greeks, and retires to Bethany. Returns to Jerusalem; next morning curses the barren fig-tree, and again expels the merchants from the temple, which exasperates the priests; and at even returns to Bethany; Mat. xxi. 1—19; Mark xi. 1—19; Luke xix. 28—48; John xii. 12—50. Returns to Jerusalem on Tuesday morning; the fig-tree is withered; he confounds the Jewish rulers who had questioned his authority; delivers the parables of the two sons, the vineyard let out to husbandmen, and the marriage-dinner; Mark xi. 20—33; xii. 1—12; Luke xx. 1—19; Mat. xxi. 20—46; xxii. 1—14; confounds the Jews in their attempt to insnare him about paying tribute; proves the resurrection of the dead; shows what is the great commandment; silences the Pharisees with respect to the Messiah's divinity; and repeats his denunciations against them; Mark xii. 13—40; Luke xx. 20—47; Mat. xxii. 15—39; xxiii. Going out of the temple at even, he applauds the liberality of the poor widow; foretells his coming to destroy Jerusalem and to judge the world, and the signs thereof; and by the parables of the servants, ten virgins, and talents, and by the description of the last judgment, inculcates watchfulness, sincerity, and activity in religion; Mark xii. 41—44; Luke xxi. 1—36; Mat. xxiv, xxv; and warns his disciples that he should be betrayed in two days to his enemies. That same night the Jewish rulers plot his death; and Judas coming in at the very time, agrees to betray him; Mat. xxvi. 1—5, 14—16; Mark xiv. 1, 2, 10, 11; Luke xxi. 37, 38; xxii. 1—6.

——	——	On Thursday he directs two of his disciples to prepare the passover; and having spent that day, and perhaps most of the Wednesday, in solemn prayer, he sits down with his disciples at night, and eats the passover; rebukes their ambition; washes their feet; intimates that Judas should betray him; who thereon retires to the Jewish rulers; he exhorts them to brotherly love; foretells Peter's denial of him; administers the Eucharist; Mat. xxvi. 17—29; Mark xiv. 12—25; Luke xxii. 7—27; John xiii; and entertains his disciples with a consolatory discourse, which he concludes with a solemn prayer; Luke xxii. 28—32; John xiv—xvii. After singing a hymn, and warning Peter and his fellow-disciples of their future trial and fall, he retires to the garden of Gethsemane; where, after terrible inward trouble and prayer, he is betrayed by Judas; but makes his apprehenders fall backward, and heals Malchus' ear. Being carried to the palace of Caiaphas, he is examined and abused; Peter thrice denies him; Mat. xxvi. 30—75; Mark xiv. 26—72; Luke xxii. 31—71; John xviii. 1—27.
		On Friday morning the Jewish rulers remit him to Pilate, who, after examination, sends him to Herod as tetrarch of Galilee. After some insolent abuse, he is returned to Pilate as an Innocent Person. After several attempts to release him, Pilate, protesting his own innocence, condemns him to be crucified to please the Jews; Mat. xxvii. 1—26; Mark xv. 1—15; Luke xxiii. 1—25; John xviii. 28—40; xix. 1—16. Judas repents and hangs himself; Mat. xxvii. 3—10; Acts i. 16—20; Jesus is led to Calvary, bearing his cross, and there nailed to it. While his garments are divided, and himself insulted, he converts a fellow-sufferer; recommends his mother to the care of John his beloved disciple; supplicates pardon to his murderers; recommends his departing soul to God; and expires in triumph. Amazing prodigies attend his death; his body being pierced, but not a bone of it broken, is begged and buried by Joseph of Arimathea. His enemies secure the grave by a large stone sealed, and a strong guard; Mark xv. 16—47; Luke xxiii. 26—56; John xix. 16—42; Mat. xxvii. 26—66.
4036	33	Early on the first day of the week Jesus rises from the dead, his grave being opened by angels, who affrighted the guard, and made them run from the sepulchre. Mary Magdalene, finding the grave open, calls Peter and John, who enter into it and return. Mary staying at the grave, Jesus appears to her; Mark xvi. 1—4; Luke xxiv. 1, 2, 12; John xx. 1—17. Leaving her, he appeared to the other women whom the angel had before informed of his resurrection. This they reported to his incredulous disciples; Mat. xxviii. 5—10; Mark xvi. 2, 5—11; Luke xxiv. 3—11; John xx. 18. While the guard report to the Jewish rulers how they had been terrified by the earthquake and angels, and are instructed to use an ill-formed falsehood, Jesus appears to Peter, and then to the two disciples on their way to Emmaus; and, in fine, to ten of them that evening; Mat. xxviii. 11—15; Mark xvi. 12, 13; Luke xxiv. 13—43; John xx. 19—23; 1 Cor. xv. 4, 5. On that day week he appears to all the eleven, and cures Thomas of his unbelief; John xx. 24—29. Some time after he appears to his disciples at the sea of Tiberias; tries Peter's affection, and foretells his martyrdom; John xxi. 1—24. He appears to the whole body of his followers in Galilee; and afterwards, on several occasions, to his disciples. At last, leading them out of Jerusalem to the mount of Olives or Bethany, he, in their sight, ascends into heaven; 1 Cor. xv. 6, 7; Mat. xxviii. 16—20; Mark xvi. 15—20; Luke xxiv. 44—52; John xx. 30; xxi. 25; Acts i. 1—12.

——	——	The apostles return to Jerusalem. Upon Peter's motion, Matthias is elected in the place of Judas; Acts i. 13—26. On the tenth day after Jesus' ascension the Holy Ghost is poured out upon his disciples, to guide them into all truth, direct them to work miracles, and to speak the languages they had never learned. That very day the apostles preach, and all the different tribes, assembled at Pentecost, hear them in their own language, and 3000 are converted to Christ; Joel ii. 28—32; Luke xxiv. 49; Mark xvi. 17, 18; John vii. 39; xiv. 16—20, 26; xv. 26, 27; xvi. 7—15; Acts ii. Peter and John cure a lame man. Peter adds an affecting discourse to the spectators; Acts iii. Behaving courageously before the Sanhedrim, they are threatened; but returning to their brethren, they thank God, and are again filled with the Holy Ghost; Acts iv. 1—31. The number and zeal of the converts still increasing, many devote their substance to the Lord. God's striking Ananias and Sapphira dead for keeping back a part of the price of their lands, and other miracles, promote the enlargement of the church; Acts iv. 4, 32—37; v. 1—16. Enraged hereat, the Jewish rulers imprison the twelve apostles; but an angel liberates them. Being again apprehended, they are, by Gamaliel's advice, dismissed with their life; Acts v. 17—42.
		The converts daily increasing, seven deacons are chosen to manage their sacred donations. Stephen, one of them, confounding the Jews with proofs of Jesus' Messiahship, is called before the Sanhedrim as a blasphemer; and, while he was making a long defence, is interrupted and tumultuously stoned; Acts vi, vii. A violent persecution ensues at Jerusalem, which scatters all the preachers but the apostles. Philip, another deacon, preaches to the Samaritans. Peter and John, sent by the apostles, go there, and communicate the miraculous influences of the Holy Ghost. Simon, a pretended convert, offers them money for such power; but his offer is detested. Philip baptizes the Ethiopian eunuch, and preaches along the west borders of Canaan; Acts viii.
4038	35	Saul, who had assisted at the stoning of Stephen, and had been a most furious persecutor, is miraculously converted near Damascus, and becomes a most zealous preacher; preaches in Arabia; returns to Damascus; escapes a snare laid for his life. After three years he repairs to Jerusalem; sees Peter and John; but the Jews being enraged at his bold discourses, he is sent to Tarsus in Cilicia, his native place; Acts vii. 58. viii. 1—3; xxii. 3—21; xxvi. 4—20; ix. 1—30; 1 Cor. xv. 8—10; Gal. i. 12—24; 1 Tim. i. 12—16.
——	——	The persecutions ceasing, the Jewish converts greatly increase. Peter cures Æneas of a palsy at Lydda, and restores Dorcas to life at Joppa. Called by the order of an angel, encouraged by a vision of animals, and directed by the Holy Ghost, Peter preaches to, and baptizes, Cornelius and other Gentiles at Cesarea, and, to the great joy of his brethren, accounts for his conduct; Acts ix. 31—43; x; xi. 1—18. The gospel is preached at Antioch in Syria with great success. Barnabas and Saul, for about a year, labour in confirming the converts there. Agabus, foretelling a famine, a collection is made for the poor saints at Jerusalem; Acts xi. 19—30.
4047	44	Herod Agrippa murders James the apostle and brother of John, and imprisons Peter, who is liberated by an angel. When Herod had just displayed his pride, and accepted blasphemous flattery, he is smitten by an angel, and eaten up of worms; Acts xii.
4048	45	Having delivered the collection, Barnabas and Saul return from Jerusalem to Antioch along with John Mark. By the direction of the Holy Ghost they are separated to preach to the Gentiles. They preach in Cyprus, where Elymas the sorcerer is struck blind, and Sergius the Roman governor is converted, and in Pamphylia, at Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe, and all places in Lesser Asia, &c.; and in all meet with opposition; Acts xiii, xiv.
4052 or 4055	49 or 52	Some Jewish preachers insisting that the Gentile converts ought to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses, the dispute is referred to a synod of apostles and elders at Jerusalem; whose determination being given, is dispersed among the churches, to their great joy; Acts xv. 1—35; xvi. 4, 5. Peter coming down to Antioch, sinfully dissembles, and is rebuked by Paul; Gal. ii. 11—21. Paul with Silas, and Barnabas with John Mark, separate, and visit the churches which they had lately planted; Acts xv. 36—41. Paul, Silas, and Timothy, travel through much of Lesser Asia. Directed by a vision, Paul crosses the Mediterranean Sea into Macedonia in Europe; preaches at Philippi, where Lydia is converted and the devil dislodged from a sorceress, on which account they are cast into prison, but quickly liberated, and the jailor converted; Acts xvi.

4057	54	They plant churches at Thessalonica and Berea; Paul preaches at Athens; proceeds to Corinth, whence he writes his epistles to the Thessalonians, and perhaps that to the Galatians; and where Gallio takes their part against the furious Jews; Acts xvii; xviii. 1—18. An Egyptian Jew pretends to be the Messiah, and is followed by 30,000, whom Felix disperses; Acts xxi. 38.
4059	56	Paul returns from Europe to Asia; touches at Ephesus; leaves there Priscilla and Aquila who had followed him from Corinth; and hastens by Cesarea to Jerusalem against the time of the passover; Acts xviii. 18—22.
4060	57	After visiting the regions of Galatia and Phrygia, Paul preaches a considerable time at Ephesus; whence Apollos, an Alexandrian, had been sent to Corinth; but is opposed by Demetrius the silversmith and his mob; writes his first epistle to the Corinthians, if not also that to the Galatians; Acts xviii. 23—28; xix;1 Cor; i—xvi; Gal. i—vi.
4063	60	Departs from Ephesus to Macedonia in Europe; collects a contribution for the poor saints at Jerusalem. Informed of the good success of the former, writes his second epistle to the Corinthians, and perhaps the first to Timothy; comes to Corinth, whence he writes his epistle to the Romans; Acts xx. 1—3; 2 Cor. viii. 1, 2, 6, 9; i—xiii; 1 Tim. i—vi; Rom. xvi. 1; i—xvi.
4064	61	Paul purposes to sail directly to Syria with the collection; but, being informed that the Jews laid wait for his life, he travels through part of Europe and Lesser Asia; earnestly exhorts the elders of Ephesus to faithfulness and diligence in their office; arrives at Jerusalem; is apprehended in the temple; claims the privilege of a Roman and escapes scourging; pleads his cause before the Sanhedrim. To prevent his assassination by the Jews, Lysias the Roman captain sends him to Felix the governor of Judea at Cesarea; who, though he trembled at his discourse, kept him prisoner two full years; Acts xx—xxiv.
4066	63	Paul is pannelled before Festus the new governor; appeals to Cæsar; pleads his cause before Festus and Agrippa. After a dangerous passage, and shipwreck on the isle of Malta, he arrives at Rome, where he is continued a prisoner at large for two years; Acts xxv—xxviii; and writes his epistles to the Philippians, Philemon, Colossians, Ephesians, and Hebrews; Phil. i—iv; Col. i—iv; Eph. i—vi; Heb. i—xiii.
4068	65	About the end of this year he is set at liberty; preaches in Crete, and leaves Titus to set things in order; perhaps preaches in Spain.
4077	70	Jerusalem utterly laid waste by the Romans, and the Jewish nation destroyed in the most miserable manner. This, together with the disasters which followed under Trajan about A.D. 116, and under Adrian about 134 or 136, plainly marked God's abolition of the Levitical ceremonies, as none of the principal ones could be any more observed; and so weaned the Christians from their attachment to them; Mat. viii. 11, 12; xxiii. 34—39; Luke xxix. 42—44; xxi. 20—26, &c.
4093	90	About this time, or some years after, John wrote his Revelations, and perhaps also his Epistles.
——	——	From A.D. 66 to 312, particularly about 66, 95, 107, 120, 160, 202, 235, 250, 257, 272, and 303, the Christian church was terribly persecuted by the Roman emperors; and heresies and contentions, especially in the interval of persecution, rendered her state very miserable. Meanwhile the Roman empire, by the murder of emperors, by the ravages of the Scythian tribes, and by famines and pestilences, was no less unhappy. These things were foretold by the opening of the second, third, fourth, and fifth seals; Rev. vi. 3—11; xii. 1—4.
4316	313	After a terrible persecution of the Christians for ten years, the heathen emperors and their armies are quite overthrown by Constantine; heathenism is abolished, and christianity made the established religion of the empire; Rev. vi. 12—17; xii. 5—12; Ps. xxi. 8—12; cx. 5, 6; lxviii. 28—31.
4326	323	The church began to enjoy a considerable calm of fifteen years, in which multitudes were converted to Christ; Rev. vii; viii. 1.
Year of World.	A. D.
4341	338	After Constantine's death, by means of the partition of the empire into the Western and Eastern, and by the ravages of the Goths and other barbarians, (especially after 395, till the Western empire was utterly abolished in A.D. 476, and the whole power of Rome extinguished about 566), the Roman empire was generally miserable. And in the same period, by the schism of the Donatists; by the heresies of the Arians, Pelagians, Nestorians, and Eutychians, and the contentions and persecutions attending the same; and by the gradual introduction of Antichristian hierarchy and superstition, the church became more and more miserable; Rev. viii. 5—12; xii. 13—17.
4609	606	The Antichristian state, which had been long forming by the gradual corruption of the doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of the christian church, arrived at its perfect form, the bishop of Rome being constituted her UNIVERSAL HEAD; who has ever since generally ruled over most part of the Roman empire in the West; Dan. vii. 8. 24—26; xi. 36—39; 2 Thes. ii. 3—12; 1 Tim. iv. 1—3; 2 Tim. iii. 1—9; iv. 3, 4; Rev. ix. 1—11; xiii, xvii. Meanwhile the Mahometan delusion was introduced into the East, and furiously propagated far and wide by fire and sword. It still continues established in the extensive empires of Indostan, Persia, Turkey, and Morocco; Rev. ix. 1—11; Dan. xi. 40.
4803	800	The German empire is founded by Charles the Great; Rev. xiii. 3, 14, 15.
5058	1055	After pouring themselves south-westward into Persia for several ages, the Seljukian Turks about this time formed the four kingdoms of Bagdad, Iconium, Aleppo, and Damascus, near the Euphrates; but, by their own contentions, by the Tartar invasions, and by the war of the European Crusades, their power was restrained for two hundred years; Rev. ix. 14.
5284	1281	The Ottoman Turks began their conquests upon the Christians, and for about 390 years gradually carried it on, murdering an infinity of men, and forming a very extensive empire, which still subsists; Dan. xi. 40—43; Rev. ix. 15—19.
——	——	Claude of Turin and his followers, in the ninth and tenth; the Waldenses in the twelfth and thirteenth; the Wickliffites in the fourteenth; and the Hussites in the fifteenth centuries; and others, amidst poverty and persecution, faithfully testified against the popish abominations.
5520	1517	A more extensive reformation began by Luther, Zuinglius, Calvin, and others, which issued in the revolt of about half of the pope's subjects from him; Rev. xi. 3—6.
5869	1866	About this time, or 150 years later, Christ's witnesses who have been much persecuted, and often reduced very low, will be almost utterly extirpated by Antichristian influence. But God,—who has already scourged the Antichristians by the wars of the Saracens, Seljukian and Ottoman Turks, and by the contests between the popes and emperors of Germany, or between rival popes, or by the Protestant Reformation,—will, by terrible wars, or some other means continued perhaps for thirty years, pull down the Antichristian and Mahometan powers, and introduce the glorious THOUSAND YEARS' REIGN of the saints; Ps. ii. 9; xxi. 8—12; cx. 5, 6; Isa. lxvi. 6, 15, 16; Dan. ii. 34, 35, 44, 45; vii. 14, 26, 27; xi. 45; xii. 11, 22; Rev. xi. 2, 7—19; xiv. 8—20; xvii. 14—17; xvi, xviii, xix; xx. 1—6; Ezek. xxxvii—xlviii, &c.
6903	2900	Or, about 150 years later, there will perhaps be a great decay of religion, and the final war of Gog and Magag against the church; Luke xviii. 8; Rev. xx. 7—10.
——	——	The general judgment of the world, and the renovation of the earth, will take place, Rev. xx. 11—15; xxi; 2 Pet. iii. 7—13; Isa. lxv. 17; lxvi. 22; Mat. xxv. 30—45.
——	——	The wicked shall be for ever punished in hell; and the saints eternally blessed with the full enjoyment of God in heaven; Mat. xxv. 46; 2 Thes. i. 8—12; Rev. xiv. 10—13; xx. 15; xxi. xxii. 1—15, &c.

TABLE OF THE PSALMS,

CLASSED ACCORDING TO THEIR SEVERAL SUBJECTS, AND ADAPTED TO THE PURPOSES OF PRIVATE DEVOTION.

I. PRAYERS.

1. Prayers for pardon of sin, Ps. 6; 25; 38; 51; 130. Psalms styled penitential, 6; 32; 38; 51; 102; 130; 143.

2. Prayers composed when the Psalmist was deprived of an opportunity of the public exercise of religion, Ps. 42; 43; 63; 84.

3. Prayers in which the Psalmist seems extremely dejected, though not totally deprived of consolation under his afflictions, Ps. 13; 22; 69; 77; 88; 143.

4. Prayers in which the Psalmist asks help of God, in consideration of his own integrity, and the uprightness of his cause, Ps. 7; 17; 26; 35.

5. Prayers expressing the firmest trust and confidence in God under afflictions, Ps. 3; 16; 27; 31; 54; 56; 57; 61; 63; 71; 86.

6. Prayers composed when the people of God were under affliction or persecution, Ps. 44; 60; 74; 79; 80; 83; 89; 94; 102; 123; 137.

7. The following are likewise prayers in time of trouble and affliction:—Ps. 4; 5; 11; 28; 41; 55; 59; 64; 70; 109; 120; 140; 141; 143.

8. Prayers of intercession, Ps. 20; 67; 122; 133; 144.

II. PSALMS OF THANKSGIVING.

1. Thanksgivings for mercies vouchsafed to particular persons, Ps. 9; 18; 22; 30; 34; 40; 75; 103; 108; 116; 118; 138; 144.

2. Thanksgivings for mercies vouchsafed to the Israelites in general, Ps. 46; 48; 65; 66; 68; 76; 81; 85; 98; 105; 124; 126; 129; 135; 136; 149.

III. PSALMS OF PRAISE AND ADORATION, DISPLAYING THE ATTRIBUTES OF GOD.

1. General acknowledgments of God's goodness and mercy, and particularly his care and protection of good men, Ps. 23; 34; 36; 91; 100; 103; 107; 117; 121; 145; 146.

2. Psalms displaying the power, majesty, glory, and other attributes of the Divine Being, Ps. 8; 19; 24; 29; 33; 47; 50; 65; 66; 76; 77; 93; 95; 96; 97; 99; 104; 111; 113; 114; 115; 134; 139; 147; 148; 150.

IV. INSTRUCTIVE PSALMS.

1. The different characters of good and bad men—the happiness of the one, and the misery of the other—are represented in the following Psalms:—1; 5; 7; 9; 10; 11; 12; 14; 15; 17; 24; 25; 32; 34; 36; 37; 50; 52; 53; 58; 73; 75; 84; 91; 92; 94; 112; 119; 121; 125; 127; 128; 133.

2. The excellence of God's laws, Ps. 19; 119.

3. The vanity of human life, Ps. 39; 49; 90.

4. Advice to magistrates, Ps. 82; 101.

5. The virtue of humility, Ps. 131.

V. PSALMS MORE EMINENTLY AND DIRECTLY PROPHETICAL.

Ps. 2; 16; 22; 40; 45; 68; 72; 87; 110; 118.

VI. HISTORICAL PSALMS.

Ps. 78; 105; 106.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

1. The centre column contains the day of the month. The two first columns contain the chapter to be read in the family. The two last columns contain the portions to be read in secret.

2. The head of the family should previously read over the chapter for family worship, and mark two or three of the most prominent verses, upon which he may dwell, asking a few simple questions.

3. Frequently the chapter named in the Calendar for family reading might be read more suitably in secret; in which case the head of the family should intimate that it be read in private, and the chapter for secret reading may be used in the family.

4. Let the conversation at family meals often turn upon the chapter read. Thus every meal will be like a Sacrament, being sanctified by the Word and prayer.

5. Let our secret reading prevent the dawning of the day. Let God's voice be the first we hear in the morning. Mark two or three of the richest verses, and pray over every line and word of them.

ADVANTAGES FROM USING.

1. The whole Bible will be read through in an orderly manner in the course of a year—the Old Testament once, the New Testament and Psalms twice. It is to be feared many never read the whole Bible; and yet it is all equally Divine. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect." If we pass over some parts of Scripture, we shall be incomplete Christians.

2. Time will not be wasted in choosing what portions to read. Often believers are at a loss to determine toward which part of the mountains of spices they should bend their steps. Here the question will be solved at once in a very simple manner.

3. Parents will have a regular subject upon which to examine their children and servants. It is much to be desired that family worship were made more instructive than it generally is. The mere reading of the chapter is too often like water spilt on the ground. Let it be read by every member of the family beforehand, and then the meaning and application drawn out by simple question and answer.

THE FIRST BOOK OF MOSES,

CALLED

That is, GENERATION. Heb. BERESHITH, in the beginning.

IN this Book we have the inspired history of the great events of 2369 years, viz. the creation of all things; the original happiness and fall of man; the expulsion from Eden; the progress of various arts, the general corruption of society, and the deluge sent to punish it; the preservation of Noah and his family in the ark, and their repeopling the earth; God's confounding of languages at the building of the tower of Babel, with his marvellous providences towards the families of Lot and Nahor, but especially of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph.

BEFORE CHRIST, 4004.—JULIAN PERIOD, 710.—INDICTION, 5.—CREATION FROM TISRI OR SEPTEMBER 1.

CHAPTER I.

All religion being founded on our knowledge of God, as the Maker of all things, and of our relation to him, as our sovereign Ruler, we have (1) A general account of the Divine Persons (ELOHIM) creating the heavens and the earth, and (2) An historical narrative of the progressive work of the week—viz. in verses 1 and 2, we have the work of the First Day, the creation of the heavens and the earth, and the production of light; 6—8, on the Second Day, an account of the firmament and its uses; 9—13, on the Third Day, the separation of sea and land, and production of plants; 14—19, on the Fourth Day, the sun, moon, and stars; 20—23, on the Fifth Day, fishes and birds; 24—31, on the Sixth Day, first, beasts, &c. and, finally, man in the image of God, with dominion over the creatures.

B. C. 4004.

IN the beginning [a] God created the heaven and the earth.

2 And the earth was [*] without form, and [†] void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep: [‡] and the [b] Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

5 And God called the light Day, [‖] and the darkness he called [*] Night. [†] And the [‡] evening and the [§] morning were the first day.

6 ¶ And God said, [d] Let there be a firmament [‖] in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.

7 And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were [*] above the firmament: and it was so.

8 And God called the firmament [†] Heaven. [‡] And the evening and the morning were the second day.[‡]

9 ¶ And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto [e] one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.

10 And God called the dry land Earth; [§] and the gathering together of the waters called he [‖] Seas: and God saw that it was good.

11 And God said, Let the earth bring forth [*] grass, [†] the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. 1. Ver. 1. That is, In the beginning of time and things, the three Divine Persons, in one Godhead, made of nothing the third heaven, or residence of the blessed, and the whole matter out of which the air and starry heaven, the sea and earth, were afterwards formed. Heb. xi. 3. "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." Psal. cii. 25. "The earth standing out of the water, and in the water."—It was without form; without any agreeable shape, order, or ornament: and void, without either vegetables to furnish it, or animals to inhabit it. And, not the wind, which was not yet formed, as there was no air, but the Holy Ghost, in his almighty influence, moved, or sat brooding, upon this mingled mass, to prepare it for the intended separation of earth and water, and for the production of vegetables and animals.——Ver. 3. 2 Cor. iv. 6. "God commanded the light to shine out of darkness." It, as well as all things else, was produced by Christ, who is God's personal Word, John i. 3.; his wisdom and power, 1 Cor. i. 24.—This light was some bright shining body, perhaps somewhat like the pillar of fire in the wilderness, and out of it the sun and stars appear to have been afterwards formed.——Ver. 4. God divided the light from the darkness, by making them to take different places by turns; the light always shining upon the one half of the mingled mass, and the darkness covering the other; in much the same manner as our sun, by turns, illuminates the one half of the globe, and leaves the other in darkness.——Ver. 5. The time of the first revolution of the darkness and of the light were the first day; for both the light and the darkness existed together at the same time, but on different parts of the mingled mass.——Ver. 6. This firmament includes the region of the sun, moon, stars, and comets: and the air or atmosphere which surrounds our earth, and separates between the water which is in the clouds and that which is in the seas and rivers. [*] Vegetables and animals are arranged each after his kind, and referred to no higher denomination. But when MAN is to be formed, we read, in ver. 26. "Let us make man in our image. So God created man in his own image." Now what is this image? The apostle tells us (Heb. 1. 3.) "The Son is the express image of the Father's person." He is farther described (1 Tim. 3. 16.) as "God manifest in the flesh." Being thus ever seen in the eternal purpose (Eph. 1. 9.) he constitutes the glorious original after which man is formed. Of the image of God in man, knowledge, righteousness, and holiness, are the principal features, (Eph. 4. 24. Col. 3. 10.); but every other attribute of God, even eternity, (Job 10. 23.) is, in created measure, exhibited in man.—Ed.

26 ¶ And God said, [l] Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him: [k] male and female created he them.

28 And God blessed them; [†] and God said unto them, [l] Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that [‡] moveth upon the earth.

how well-ordered and adorned earth than had been formed on the first day. The sun is in itself a very extensive body of light; and the moon, though it hath no light in itself, enlightens our earth by reflecting the light of the sun; and both are called great lights, since by reason of their nearness, they appear to us much larger than any of the stars. These lights not only form the day and night, but also form or mark out the seasons of sowing, planting, reaping, sailing, travelling, or the like; and are for signs of the weather, and sometimes of remarkable providences. Psal. cxxxvi. 7—9. "God made great lights—the sun to rule by day, and the moon and stars to rule by night." And lxxiv. 16, 17. "The day is thine, the night also is thine: thou hast prepared the light and the sun. Thou hast made summer and winter." And civ. 19, 20. CHAPTER II.

An appendix to the preceding history of the creation: more particularly explaining that part of it which relates to man. We have in it an account, (1) Of God's institution and blessing of the Sabbath: 1—3. (2) Of the manner in which the first vegetables were produced, and Adam formed: 4—7. (3) Of the garden of Eden, and of God's placing man in it under the form of a law and covenant: 8—17. (4) Of Adam's dominion: 18—20. (5) Of the need and the making of the woman; of God's marriage of her to Adam, and their happy fellowship between themselves: 21—25.

THUS [a] the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the [*] host of them.

2 And on the [b] seventh day God ended his work which he had made: and he rested [†] on the seventh day from all his work which he had made.

3 And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God [‡] created and made.

4 ¶ These are the [§] generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the [‖] day that the LORD God made the earth and the heavens,

5 And every plant of the [c] field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew: for the LORD God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the ground.[*]

6 But [†] there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground.

7 And the LORD God formed man [‡] of the [d] dust [‡] of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and [e] man became a living soul.

8 ¶ And the LORD God planted a garden [f] eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed.

9 And [g] out of the ground made the LORD God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

10 ¶ And [h] a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.

11 The name of the first is Pison: that is it which [‖] compasseth the whole land of [*] Havilah, where there is gold;

12 And the gold of that land is good: there is [†] bdellium and the onyx-stone.

* Two things were wanting to the economy of creation at this period—rain to moisten, and man to till the ground. The place of the rain is supplied, according to our translation, by a mist going up by exhalation, and descending again as dew. The Septuagint translate it by a word signifying "a spring or fountain," and other highauthorities translate it "a flood," which, rising from the earth, watered the garden. In whatever sense we understand it, Moses ascribes the effect, not to what is commonly called nature, but traces it directly to God.—Ed.

§ The formation of man from dust or earth, rendered incoherent from dryness, and subject to be carried about by every wind, is revealed and recorded as a wonderful example of the work that God can produce from the most unpromising materials; whilst it is no doubt intended to repress all pride, and inculcate humility.—Ed.

vast, so well furnished worlds of creatures, rational and irrational, animate and inanimate! What infinite wisdom appears marked in the vast variety, the comely order, and the mutual subserviency of all things to the good of one another, and to his glory! What goodness, in forming such multitudes of beings to partake of his bounty as their all in all! and especially towards man, in forming him after his own image, and in so preparing this lower world to be a commodious lodging for him in his way to the mansions of light! Let me, then, in all things, in heaven, in earth, in air, in sea, and in land; in grass, in herbs, in trees, in sun, in moon, in stars, in fishes, in fowls, in cattle, and creeping things; in angels, and in man; behold the excellencies of my God! Let me enjoy God himself in all things, and all things in God! Let me use them all as his property, his product, and for his glory and honour! And notwithstanding my nothingness, confusion, darkness, and deadness, let me hope that my all-creating God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, will fashion me, as an abridged world, into a monument of redeeming mercy, to the praise of the glory of his grace! Am I a Christian philosopher? Let me, as I have access, contemplate the creatures of God, in their almost infinitely diversified natures, qualities, and uses! Light and celestial luminaries, in their mysterious nature, extensive range, prodigious but duly proportioned distance, rapid motions, and powerful influences—Air, fixed and unfixed, inflammable and uninflammable, in its fluidity, weight, elasticity, and usefulness for forming of wind, promoting of animal life, transmission of light, and the like—Water, in its fluidity, plenteousness, dispersion, saltness, or freshness, penetration, and fitness for forming rains, dews, sea-productions; and for promoting trade and intercourse between nations—Earths, stones, metals, moulds, in their adhesion, ductility, forms, colours, and uses—Vegetables, in their structure, growth, curious parts, almost infinitely diversified forms, colours, and uses—Animals, in their curious parts, connected structure, mysterious life, and dependence on food; their motions in limits, fitness for procreation and self-preservation, beautiful forms, melodious, awful, or plaintive sounds, exquisite and diversified smell and taste: and, along with these, the unlimited divisibility of matter, the laws of air, attraction, gravitation, electricity, magnetism, of muscular motion, and of nervous influences—Rational spirits, in their powers of thinking, willing, recollection, sociality, and union with bodies—as proofs of the existence and manifestations of the mysterious nature and manifold perfections of God, my God in Christ, of whom, through whom, and to whom, are all things. Let me always consider his creatures as memorials of his creating, preserving, and ruling powers, and as means of delightfully and awfully impressing my heart with his presence, observation, and influence! Let me rejoice to view all creatures as formed and fitted for subserving and promoting God's great and principal work of our redemption through Christ, and multitudes of them as instituted emblems of his persons, perfections, relations, and operations, as manifested in it! Let me, by faith, appropriate a particular new covenant-right to, and property in them all in and through Christ as my head and husband, as means of my present, and pledges of my future and everlasting enjoyment of God as my ALL IN ALL: as means of exciting and leading me habitually to think on, admire, adore, and live to his glory, while I remain here in his lower sanctuary on earth; and to be always mild and humble, as brother and sister to, and dependent on, the meanest animal, insect, or atom in it!

CHAP. II. Ver. 5. God, by his creative power, brought the vegetables at first to perfection without seed, and without concurrence of the soil, sun, rain, or any other natural cause.——Ver. 7. God, with most exquisite art and skill, formed man's body of the dust, and created, in personal union with it, a rational soul; and so made him a human person, capable of exercising the functions of all sorts of life. Isa. lxiv. 8. "Lord, thou art our father; we are the clay, and thou our potter; and we are all the work of thy hand." Rom. ix. 20. Psal. c. 3. "God made us, not we ourselves." Psal. cxxxix. 14, 15. "I am fearfully and wonderfully made." 1 Cor. xv. 47. "The first man is of the earth, earthy." Job xxxiii. 6. "I am formed out of the clay." And iv. 19. "Men dwell in houses (bodies) of clay; their foundation is in the dust." Job xxxiii. 4. "The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life." And xxvii. 3. "The spirit, or breath, of God is in my nostrils." Zech. xii. 1. "The Lord formeth the spirit of man within him." Hence he is called (Heb. xii. 9.) "the Father of spirits." Num. xvi. 22. and xxvii. 16. "the God of the spirits of all flesh."——Ver. 8—16. Man being thus formed, the Lord graciously placed him in a garden which was an emblem of the heavenly state, called the paradise of God. Rev. ii. 7; in a garden, which himself had planted on the third day, ch. i. 11; in a garden eastward from Canaan, in Eden, a spot of pleasure, which probably lay not far from the ancient Babylon, where the rivers, Euphrates on the west, and Hiddekel, or Tigris, on the east, joined into one, and watered the garden; and after running a little southward, were parted into the two streams of Gihon on the east, and Pison on the west; in a garden decked and enriched with every choice and fruitful vegetable; the principal of which were, the tree of life, so called because of the invigorating nature of its fruit, and because it was made a sacramental pledge of man's eternal life in heaven, provided he kept the covenant which God made with him;—and the tree of knowledge of good and evil, so called, because, by the fruit thereof, God tried Adam's obedience, and by the eating thereof, man knew the good he had fallen from, and the evil he had fallen into.——Ver. 16, 17. Here we have God entering into a covenant of works with Adam, and with all his natural posterity in him. This is the covenant afterwards published from Sinai, and which gendereth to bondage, Gal. iv. 24. This is the covenant which Adam transgressed, Hos. vi. 7. The breach of this covenant was necessarily supposed by the remedial one, published after the fall, Gen. iii. 15. Rom. v. 12—21. The annexing of death to a positive command of abstinence from fruit, indifferent in itself, by an infinitely good, gracious, and wise God, inferred likewise the annexing of a glorious reward to his obedience: and in this the form of a covenant consists. The adjoining of the tree of life, and of knowledge of good and evil, to this transaction, as confirmatory seals of life or death; the frequent republication of the moral law, in a covenant form, to men, when they could not keep it as such, Lev. xviii. 5. Deut. xxvii. 26. Mat. xix. 17. Gal. iii. 10, 12. Rom. x. 5. and iii. 27, but especially the imputation of Adam's first sin to his natural posterity, Rom. v. 12—19, plainly establish this point. Here we have the parties of a covenant: God, manifesting his supreme authority, his unbounded goodness, and infinite condescension, on the one hand; and Adam, as perfectly holy and righteous, capable of performing whatever God required, Gen. i. 26, 27. and v. 1. Eccl. vii. 29. and as the common head and representative of all his posterity, Rom. v. 12—19. 1 Cor. xv. 22. on the other,

[†] The Hebrew literally translated dying thou shalt die, removes every difficulty arising from the apparent want of fulfilment in the divine threatening. We are accustomed to say, a man is dying, just as we say a fire is dying,—that is, one part dies, another is following, till finally the whole expires. Just so is man, since death entered by sin. Every moment of his life, some part of the youngest and the healthiest is actually dying; and this process goes on till, at last, like the spark perishing in the midst of the ashes its own burning has produced, the light of life is extinguished, and man returns to the dust from which he was taken.—Ed.

[§] Where there is no sin, there is no shame.—Ed.

—Here we have a condition required; abstinence from the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, which supposed and implied perfect obedience to the whole law of God written on man's heart, or revealed to him. The end of this covenant being to render mankind happier than the duties of the natural state necessarily entitled them to be, it was proper that some positive institution should be added to the natural laws inscribed on the heart of Adam at his creation, and which might promote obedience to them. This institution, relative to the tree of knowledge, which, being in the midst of the garden, was almost continually in his view, was extremely proper, as it tended, (1) To manifest the high sovereignty of God over men, as one who could enact his mere will into an awful law. (2) To render Adam's obedience or disobedience, and consequently the justice of God in rewarding or punishing him, more conspicuous, Rom. iii. 4. (3) To mark that, even in paradise, he held all which he enjoyed of God as his great proprietor and landlord, and ought to do nothing without his allowance. (4) To be a standing monitor to Adam, that he was fallible, and needed to take heed to his ways, and watch against every spiritual enemy; that he was not come to his full happiness and rest, since, even in paradise, he was under remarkable restraint; that his happiness lay in God himself alone; and that nothing was to be desired, but in submission to his will, and for his sake. (5) To be a summary of the law of nature, by obedience to which he might honour God, loving him with all his heart, soul, mind, and strength, and loving himself, and his posterity as himself. Here is a penalty threatened in case of disobedience; certain, manifold, and dreadful death, viz. (1) Death legal, or a sentence of condemnation fixing upon the covenant-breaker in the very moment he begins to transgress. (2) The execution of this sentence in real death; which is either spiritual, comprehending every thing relative to the soul's loss of God's favour and image, and to its defilement and misery in this life, Rom. i. 28—31. iii. 10—18. and viii. 7, 8. Eph. ii. 1, 3, 12; or natural, which comprehends every calamity on the body, and whatever its comfort depends upon in this world, Gen. iii. 16, 19. Deut. xxviii. Eccl. xii. 7. 2 Pet. iii. 12; or eternal, comprehending all the misery of loss or of pain, to which the damned are for ever subjected in hell, Mat. xxv. 41. Rev. xiv. 10, 11. —In the express annexing of so great a death, especially to the breach of the positive part of the law of the covenant, a promise of a life directly opposite, as the reward of perfect fulfilment of the condition, was implied; comprehending the continuance of the natural and spiritual life, which he had, in all the vigour, comfort, and prosperity of it; and the enjoyment of a more glorious and eternal life in heaven, in consequence of his finishing his course of unfailing obedience. Thus the sum of the covenant was, Mat. xix. 17. "If thou wilt enter into life eternal, keep the commandments." Gal. iii. 10, 12. "The man that doeth these things shall live in them." "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." Ezek. xviii. 4. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."—The fruit of the tree of life, as a seal of the covenant, confirmed the promise of life upon condition of perfect obedience; and the fruit of the tree of knowledge confirmed the threatening of death annexed to disobedience.—The representation of all Adam's natural posterity in him was most reasonable and kind; as it was the shortest, and, humanly speaking, the safest means of securing their eternal happiness.—The whole tenor of this covenant was so highly equitable and gracious, that man's uncorrupted conscience could not but approve of it; his love to himself and his posterity could not but incline him to it; his perfect conformity to the divine image could not but make him consent to whatever terms God proposed, and to receive his favours in a method so answerable to the divine perfections. ——Ver. 21—24. God formed the woman of a rib with the flesh thereon, out of Adam's side, to note the wife's equality with her husband, and that she is his companion, and to be treated with the utmost kindness and affection. He brought her to Adam, to honour the institution of marriage, and to teach us that children ought to marry by the disposal or consent of their parents, and all, only in the Lord, ch. xxi. 21. xxiv. 4. and xxviii. 2. Judg. xiv. 2. 1 Cor. vii. 38, 39.—Adam accepted her as an help meet for him, suitable to his nature, acceptable to his person, and useful on all occasions for their mutual comfort and the propagation of their species. And God, by Adam, declared the general law of marriage, requiring the most affectionate cohabitation, inseparable union, and intimate communion during life, as if the parties were but one person. 1 Pet. iii. 1, 7. "Wives, be in subjection to your husbands. Husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife as to the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life." Eph. v. 22—28. "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands as unto the Lord; for the husband is the head of the wife. Let the wives be subject to their own husbands in every thing. Husbands, love your wives: as Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it, so ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself."—Gen. iii. 16. 1 Cor. xiv. 34. and vii. 16. Tit. ii. 5. Col. iii. 18, 19. 1 Tim. v. 8. and ii. 11, 12. Mal. ii. 14—16. Mat. xix. 3—9. 1 Cor. vii. 14, 15.——Ver. 25. They had no cause of shame; as there was neither deformity in their bodies, nor guilt on their consciences, nor any sinful inclination in their hearts.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—In the faith of God's institution and blessing of the Sabbath, let me always observe it as in his sight, ceasing from my own works, as he did from his. Let me never prefer the example of a wicked generation to that of God; nor prefer the pleasures of recreation or sloth, or the profits of carnal labour, to fellowship with, and enjoyment of, God and his blessings. Let my care be to receive out of his fulness, and grace for grace; to remember his mighty works of creation and redemption, and to worship him in the beauty of holiness. How easy is it for him to work, with or without means, as he pleaseth! —But O how great his kindness to man! In him the animal and the angelical natures were united; the best of this world was allotted him for his residence; and while its choicest fruits were assigned him for his food, the multitudes of its animal inhabitants were subjected to his dominion and service. A woman, every way perfect, was provided for his comfort, and for the increase of mankind. Nay, God himself entered into familiar fellowship and a gracious covenant with him, in which everlasting happiness was promised to him and his posterity upon the easiest terms. But in this first Adam, as in a figure, do I not behold the second, the Lord from heaven, Jesus the Redeemer? He is indeed the Son of God, the express image of his Father's person; the image of the invisible God; the new thing created in the earth, and the blessed fruit of it, excellent and comely. He, as Mediator, is the great product of Jehovah's counsels, the illustrious ornament and glorious centre of all his works. He is our head and representative in the second and better covenant, established upon better promises. He is our spiritual parent, who communicateth to us his indelible image, and entitles us to all the fulness of God. He is our great Prophet, Priest, and Governor, to whom all things in heaven and earth are subjected for our sake. Having by his blood purchased, and by his Spirit planted a gospel-church, he dwells there, and cultivates the same; and, having regained the celestial paradise, there we shall be for ever with the Lord. In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; and, having all life and fruitfulness in his own person, he giveth to us power to eat of himself, the Tree of life. Being, by the determinate counsel of God, cast into the deep sleep of debasement and death in this world, his church was formed out of his broken body and

CHAPTER III.

Here we have an account, (1) Of Satan's crafty and successful temptation: 1—8. (2) The Lord's gracious arraignment of Adam and Eve; 9—13. (3) God's condemnation of the serpent, and of Adam and Eve, to their respective punishments; 14—19. (4) Adam and Eve are, in a mixture of mercy and wrath, excluded from the garden of Eden; 15, 21—24.

NOW the serpent[a] was more [a] subtile than any beast of the field which the LORD God had made. And [b] he said unto the woman, [†] Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?

2 And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden:

3 But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye [c] touch it, lest ye die.

4 And the [d] serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die:

5 For God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then [e] your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

6 ¶ And when the woman [f] saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was [‡] pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat; and [g] gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat.

B. C. 4004.

[a] The word serpent signifies creeping; and is, in ordinary language, used to describe the manner of progression of a great variety of animals—some venomous, and some innoxious. In seeking the meaning of a scriptural word, we should always have reference, not to common use or representation, but to the scriptures themselves. Accordingly, in Rev. xx. 2. we read of "the dragon, that old serpent, the devil, and Satan;" and, consequently, we find that the tempter was called the serpent, not because of employing the form or body of an animal, but because of the subtile, cunning, hidden, and creeping manner, in which he effected his wicked purpose.—Ed.

[§] This is the first instance of a curse; and from the details of its several parts, has no doubt, contributed still farther than the word serpent to suggest the idea of that animal having been employed as an instrument of the temptation. But if the curse were pronounced against a mere animal, the seed of the woman must bruise that very animal's head, and the same animal must bruise his heel. Besides the cursed serpent has a seed at enmity with the seed of the woman, a circumstance totally inapplicable to any mere animal. Let us examine the constituents of his curse. 1. Upon thy belly shalt thou go. This phrase, when applied to Satan, represents that state of abasement under righteous judgment, in which God punishes him. 2. Dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. This phrase is employed to signify reluctant yielding to a conqueror, as in (Psal. 72. 9.) 3. An unholy enmity of Satan against the human race, and specially against the seed of the woman, Christ—which unholy enmity is encountered by a holy enmity in Christ against all evil. 4. The bruising of Satan's head the seat and emblem of his usurped dominion over the world.—Ed.

8 And they heard the voice [h] of the LORD God walking in the garden in the [‡] cool of the day: and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God amongst the trees of the garden.

9 ¶ And the [i] LORD God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou?

10 And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, because I was naked; and I hid myself.

11 And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat?

pierced side. She is divinely brought and espoused to him; and to her he cleaves, at the expense of once leaving his Father in heaven, and of now leaving his mother, the people of Israel.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—6. Serpents in general have a natural subtilty beyond other creatures. Mat. x. 16. "Be wise as serpents." But this one had an extraordinary measure of it, being actuated by a fallen angel who had just apostatized from his holy and happy state. Rev. xx. 2, 3, 8. "The dragon, that old serpent, the devil and Satan, goeth out to deceive the nations." 2 Cor. xi. 3. "The serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty." John viii. 44. "The devil was a murderer from the beginning, a liar, and the father of it." 2 Cor. ii. 11. "We are not ignorant of his devices." And xi. 14. "Satan is transformed into an angel of light." In the temptation of our first parents, Satan acted with the utmost subtilty. (1) He chose a serpent, which was seemingly simple, but really subtile, and perhaps beautiful, which might make Eve take it for an angel, to be his instrument. (2) He accosted the woman—who perhaps had only heard the terms of the covenant from Adam—in the absence of her husband. (3) According to some, he improved their being more naked than the wild beasts of the earth, to render them discontented with their condition. But it is more certain that he moved the doubt relative to God's prohibitory charge in such ambiguous terms that it was hard to discern whether he intended merely to ask if God had really forbidden the use of that fruit, —or to insinuate that the forbidder could not be the true God, who had kindly created them but just before,—or to suggest that God was a hard master, who had forbidden them to eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden in which he had placed them. (4) Finding that the woman adhered to the command, he endeavoured to make her believe that the threatening was dark in its meaning, and uncertain or false with respect to its execution. (5) He pretended a great regard for her and her husband's welfare, as if he had been extremely desirous of promoting their knowledge and happiness. (6) Perhaps he pretended that himself had acquired what knowledge he had above other brutes by eating of that prohibited fruit. It is certain he attempted to confirm his contradiction of the threatening by a solemn appeal to God. (7) Having prevailed with the woman, he by her means tempted her husband, who complied, not from any such fondness for her as rendered him willing to be damned with her, but as deceived: and the rather, as he saw she did not immediately die upon her eating of the fruit. This sin of our first parents, in eating this forbidden fruit, was exceeding great. It contained, (1) Horrid unbelief to such a degree, that the devil, in the form of a beast, was believed in opposition to the solemn declaration of God. (2) The most presumptuous pride, ambition, and bold curiosity; they were in paradise, and lords of the lower world,—they knew and enjoyed very much,—but nothing would content them but to be as God in knowledge and happiness. (3) The most shocking ingratitude and discontent; God had given them every thing proper for conveniency and delight,—He had made them the lords of animals and earth, the companions of angels,—and yet they revolted at the inconsiderable reserve of a tree. (4) The most contemptuous apostasy from, and rebellion against God; they renounced his covenant of friendship, and threw off all subjection to and professed dependence on him. (5) In this one act the whole law of God was transgressed. The authority of God, which is the foundation of it, was trampled under foot; the love, which is the complete fulfilment of it was neglected, and hatred established, James ii. 10. The symbolical law, which was a summary of, and a fence to the moral, was expressly contemned and violated. Nay, each of the moral precepts was plainly broken. The aggravations of this sin were no less remarkable. (1) It was committed by persons newly made after the image of God; perfectly holy and righteous, and capable of continuing so. (2) It was committed by them just after he had graciously received them into the most honourable covenant of friendship with himself. (3) It was very early committed, perhaps on the same day they were created, Ps. xlix. 12. (4) It was committed against God's most express command, and when they had the fullest warning of the danger thereby incurred to them and their seed. (5) It was committed in paradise, where God dwelt as in his temple; and where every thing concurred to proclaim his infinite kindness to mankind, and invite to obedience. (6) It was committed upon a very slight, and but one single temptation. (7) It was occasioned by an object of very small importance, which man had no need of in paradise. (8) It respected what had been solemnly separated to the service of God, and so amounted to a sacrilegious robbing of him. In this manner, 1 Tim. ii. 14. "The woman being deceived, was first in the transgression." Rom. v. 12—19. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for, or in whom, all have sinned.—Death reigned over them which had not sinned actually after the similitude of Adam's transgression. Through the offence of one many be dead.—The judgment was by one to condemnation.—By one man's offence death reigned by one.—By the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation.—By one man's disobedience many were made sinners." 1 Cor. xv. 22. "In Adam, by his first sin, all die."——Ver. 7—13. Here we have their wretched evasions after their fall. (1) When their eyes were opened—their consciences being touched with a sense of the heinousness of their sin, whereby they had defiled their souls, and of the greatness of that misery which they had brought upon themselves and their posterity, they began to be ashamed of their nakedness, which they now found to be an occasion of sinful motions and affections; and covered with fig-leaves those parts by which the corruption of nature is propagated, upon which, for that reason, God hath put the deepest impression of shame, that fruit of sin;—and to which he appointed circumcision, the sacrament of remission, regeneration, and mortification to be applied, ch. xvii. 11. (2) When the Son of God, probably in human shape, as a presage of his future incarnation, came to seek and to save them, they, sensible of guilt, and dreading punishment, foolishly sought to hide themselves from him. But "there is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers in iniquity may hide themselves," Job xxxiv. 22. Amos ix. 3. Ps. cxxxix. 7—9. Prov. xv. 3. Jer. xxiii. 24. (3) When, to convince them further, he questioned them concerning their conduct, they attempted to excuse themselves, and shift the blame upon their tempters; and Adam appears inclined to lay the blame of his fault upon God himself, as if he had given him a tempter under the character of an help meet for him, Job xxxi. 33. Prov. xix. 3.——Ver. 14—19. In this condemnation of the criminals, the serpent, which had been only an irrational instrument is cursed, as a mark of God's high detestation of the crime; as Exod. xxi. 28, 29. Lev. xx. 15. Perhaps he had formerly moved upon the hinder part of his body, and so was numbered among the wild beasts which eat herbs, and are distinguished from creeping things, ch. i. 25, 30. But now he, and all his kind, must henceforth be reckoned most despicable and detestable. They must creep along the earth, take down part of its dust with their food (Isa. lxv. 25. Mic. vii. 17.), and must be the stated objects of the hatred of mankind. But this sentence, directed against the serpent, chiefly respected Satan and his angels. He is cursed above all the irrational animals; is left under the power of invincible folly and malice; and is in disgrace depressed below the vilest of beasts, and appointed to misery, when they have perished in death. He goes on his belly, and eats dust. His actions are base and troublesome to himself: he can never ascend higher than this world. He is trampled under the feet of Christ and his people. His power is restricted to earthly men, or to killing of the bodies of believers,—for their souls he cannot kill; nay, their temporal death promotes the destruction of sin in them. He takes such pleasure as he is capable of, in seducing reprobates to the basest wickedness, and in vexing the godly with his abominable temptations. God further threatens, that the very woman whom he had seduced, and many of her posterity, should, by their free justification, and their reconcilement and conversion to God, be made stated enemies to him and his friends; and enabled, through Jesus Christ, to tread on his policy, power, and his life of permitted authority on earth, to his great grief and agony of mind, notwithstanding all he should be able to do to oppose them by temptation or persecution. But the principal part of Satan's curse lay in the ruin brought on him by Jesus Christ, the eminent seed of the woman, in his redemption of mankind. Jesus Christ is called the seed of the woman, not only to import the reality of his manhood, and his close connexion with believers—who are also called her seed, as followers of her in faith and holiness—but chiefly to signify that he was none of Adam's natural posterity represented in the covenant of works, and that he would be born of a virgin. He, by fulfilling the broken law—which is the strength of sin—in our stead, by making atonement for sin, and by removing the curse, has undermined the whole power and authority which Satan had over an elect world as the executioner of God's justice. And as, by the word of his power, he dislodged him from the bodies of multitudes, —and by the word of his grace, in the ministration of the gospel, did and will expel the worship of him from multitudes of nations; so, by the powerful application of his word, Spirit, and blood, to men's consciences and hearts, he casts him and his works down from their throne in them; and, by the influences of his grace, enables his people to resist the devil and make him flee from them; and to mortify the deeds of the body that they may live. Thus, 1 Pet. v. 8. "Our adversary the devil goeth about seeking whom he may devour." Job i. 7. "Going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it." John viii. 41, 44, "Wicked men are of their father the devil, and the lusts of their father they will do." Acts xiii. 10. 1 John iii. 8, 10. Mat. xiii. 38. Rom. ix. 8. "Only the children of the promise are counted for Eve's seed." Gal. iv. 29. Prov. xxix. 27. "An unjust man is an abomination to the just; and he that is upright in the way is an abomination to the wicked." John xv. 18. Mark xiii. 13. But, 1 John iii. 5, 8. "The Son of God was manifested to take away sin,—to destroy the works of the devil." Isa. vii. 14. "A virgin did conceive, and bring forth a Son—Immanuel." Dan. ix. 24, 26. "The Messiah shall be cut off, not for himself, but to finish transgression, and make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in an everlasting righteousness." Ps. xci. 13. "The lion, adder, and dragon, shall be trampled under feet." Col. ii. 15. "Having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in his cross." Heb. ii. 14. "That through death he might destroy him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil." John xii. 31. "Now shall the devil, the prince of this world be cast out," of his kingdom and authority in and over men. John xvi. 11. Isa. xlix. 24—26. Luke x. 18, 19. Rom. xvi. 20. "God shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." 1 John ii. 13. "Ye have overcome the wicked one." 1 Pet. v. 9. Jam. iv. 7. Ps. xci. 13.—While Satan receiveth the ruinous bruise in his head, he bruiseth the heel of the seed of the woman; that is, he assaults by temptations, stirs up persecution and trouble against the human nature of Christ, and against his people, while they continue on the earth: or their bodies, crushed to the dust of death, by his influence, lie in the grave. But at the last day he, and his agent death, shall be quite overthrown, and swallowed up in eternal victory. Heb. iv. 15. 2 Cor. xiii. 4. Isa. liii. 4, 5. John xvi. 33. Acts xiv. 22. Isa. xxv. 8. 1 Cor. xv. 25—57. The woman was condemned to a multitude of sorrows and pains, particularly in the conception, bearing, and bringing up of her children; and to a further degree of subjection to her husband, whom she had overlooked in parleying with the serpent as her instructor. 1 Tim. ii. 12, 15. 1 Cor. vii. 28, and xiv. 34. Tit. ii. 5. 1 Pet. iii. 6. Eph. ii. and iv. Mat. xix. 8, &c. To punish Adam, the proprietor, the whole ground was cursed with respect to its soil and product. The whole lower world, being defiled under its inhabitants, was devoured by the curse, and subjected to the bondage of corruption. Is. xxiv. 5, 6. Rom. viii. 20—22. Gen. v. 29. Job xxxi. 40. Heb. vi. 8. Jer. xii. 13. Himself was condemned to much grief and sorrow. Ps. cxxvii. 2. To eat the herbs of the field, instead of the delicious fruits of paradise; and to be occupied in hard labour, in the cultivation of them, till he died. 2 Thess. iii. 10. Eph. iv. 28. Eccl. i. 1, 2, 13, 14. and ii. 11, 17, 21, 26. Thus, in these few verses, we have a predictory description of the agency and success of Satan the destroyer; and of the incarnation, office, state, and work of Jesus our Redeemer; and, in fine, of the whole fate, of this lower world, particularly of mankind, from the fall of Adam till the end of time. Nor can any one seriously review the state of the world,—of fields, of persons, of families, of churches, or nations, for almost six thousand years past,—but he must perceive a constant and exact accomplishment thereof. Nor are the subsequent predictions, whether of mercies or judgments, any thing else but a gradual opening and explication of this; the latter always pointing out more clearly and circumstantially what had been contained in the former; nor are the histories aught else but an account of the fulfilment. But one thing is remarkable, that in this declaration of Jehovah now before us, the first intimation of a Saviour, and salvation through him for mankind, is not directed to Adam or Eve, but is included in a threatening directed to Satan; plainly intimating, that the work of our redemption remarkably aggravates the misery of our original destroyer; and that we are not immediate parties in the covenant of our recovery, nor doth it, either in point of purchase or application, depend on our free will, but on the blood of Jesus Christ, and the free grace of God manifested in him. Rom. v. 20, 21. Eph. ii. 1—8.——Ver. 20. Having heard, and perhaps believed, the promise relative to the seed of the woman, Adam gives his wife a new name, importing her being the mother of Jesus, the quickening spirit, and author of eternal life, and of his living members. John x. 10, and xi. 25.——Ver. 21. The Lord, who had taught them to offer animals in sacrifice, as a figure of Jesus' oblation of himself for the salvation of men, taught them to make coats of the skins, as a memorial that, by sinfully hearkening to the serpent, they had made themselves as the beasts which perish; and that there could be no salvation from shame and danger but by the garment of Jesus' imputed atonement. Is. lxi. 10. Rom. xiii. 14.——Ver. 22. Perhaps we have here no ironical derision of man's folly in attempting to become wise as God: but God's affectionate lamentation over his ruined condition, and gracious resolution to turn him out of paradise, lest his vain hopes to fortify himself against death, by eating of the tree of life, should tempt him to neglect the great salvation which was offered to him in the covenant of grace. Rom. ix. 30—32, and x. 2, 3.——Ver. 23, 24. The words used for the turning of man out of paradise, import, that he was turned out as a divorced woman from the house of her husband, never to be admitted back to a state of happiness under the broken covenant of works. Perhaps, while the flaming sword turned every way to keep men from the tree of life, the Divine Majesty, as reconciled in Christ, manifested himself between the cherubims, as on

AND Adam knew Eve his wife: and she conceived, and bare [a]Cain, and said, I have gotten a man from the LORD. [†]

2 And she again bare his brother [‡]Abel. And Abel was [§]a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground.

3 And [‖]in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the LORD.

4 And Abel, he also brought of [*]the firstlings of his [†]flock, and of the fat thereof. And the LORD had respect unto Abel and to his offering:

5 But unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell.

6 And the LORD said unto Cain, [a]Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen?

7 If thou doest well, [‡]shalt thou not [§]be accepted? and if thou doest not well, [‖]sin lieth at the door. [*] And [†]unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him.

8 ¶ And Cain [b]talked with Abel his brother: and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and [c]slew him.

9 And the LORD said unto Cain, [d]Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, I [e]know not: Am I my brother's keeper?

10 And he said, [f]What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's [‡]blood crieth unto me from the ground.

11 And now art thou [g]cursed [*] from the earth, which hath opened her [h]mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand.

12 When thou tillest the ground, [i]it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength: [k]a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

13 And Cain said unto the LORD, [†]My punishment is greater than I can bear.

14 Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a [l]fugitive and a vagabond in the earth: and it shall come to pass, that every one [‡]that findeth me shall slay me.

15 And the LORD said unto him, [m]Therefore, whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him [§]seven-fold. And the LORD set [‖]a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

16 ¶ And Cain went out [n]from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of [*]Nod, on the east of Eden.

17 And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived and bare [†]Enoch: and he builded a city, and [o]called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch.

18 And unto Enoch was born Irad: and Irad begat Mehujael: and Mehujael begat Methusael: and Methusael begat [‡]Lamech.

19 ¶ And Lamech took unto him two wives: [§] the name of the one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah.

20 And Adah bare Jabal: he was the [‖]father of such as dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle.

21 And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the [*]father of all such as handle the harp and organ.

his throne of grace, to encourage them to humble and familiar fellowship with himself. Heb. iv. 16.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Be sober, be vigilant, my soul, lest thine adversary the devil get an advantage of thee, and beguile thee through his subtilty. Never encounter him, separated from Jesus, or in thy own strength. Never dally with, but boldly and immediately resist him, and he will flee from thee. Never indulge the smallest doubt of the veracity or importance of what the Lord hath spoken. Let me always be content with such things as I have. It is not in becoming a God, but in enjoying God, as my ALL AND IN ALL, that my happiness consists. In what shame, what misery, sin always issueth!—Behold, how the offended Majesty of heaven flies on the wings of infinite love and mercy for the immediate relief of self-ruined men, and to proclaim, offer, and bestow upon them redemption through the blood of his Son! But, alas! how they flee from him; and, by covering their transgression, endeavour even to evade his favours!—Blessed Jesus, if thou arraignest me, let me always fly into thy bosom of mercy and kindness; let me gladly entertain thy convictions, and acknowledge my offence, that I may not fall into the condemnation of the devil! Let all the troubles which affect this world call my sin to my remembrance, and deeply affect me with it! Blessed be Jehovah, that his only-begotten Son became the seed of the woman, Immanuel, God with us,—that he had his heel bruised, travailed in pangs of woe, at Love's delivery of an elect world, was made sin, made a curse, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief,—was crowned with thorns, and being in an agony did sweat great drops of blood,—that dust he was, and to dust he returned,—and all for men,—all for ME! Let my naked soul put on, not the fig-leaves of my self-righteousness, but his law-magnifying atonement. Bewailing the tremendous fall of my race, and turning my back on the law as the ministration of death, and on this blasted world, as emptied of all enjoyments, let me embrace the better covenant, founded on better promises, and seek a better paradise, where not merely angelical cherubims, but divine arms of infinite and everlasting love, shall for ever shut me up to the most immediate fellowship of Jesus the Tree of life, which beareth twelve manner of fruits every month, and whose leaves are for the healing of the nations.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. If Eve thought that in Cain she had gotten THE MAN,—JEHOVAH, THE MESSIAH, as the words in the Hebrew may bear, she found herself sadly mistaken.——Ver. 3. By instruction from God, more or less express, several of the Mosaic rites were practised long before the giving of the law at Sinai; as the distinction between clean and unclean beasts, Gen. vii. 2; priests, altars, burnt-offerings and drink-offerings, viii. 20. xiv. 18. xxii. 13. and xxxv. 14; abstinence from blood, ix. 4; oil for consecration, xxviii. 18. and xxxv. 14; marriage of brothers' widows, xxxviii. 8, 9, 20.——Ver. 4. Heb. xi. 4. "By faith—as to the divine appointment, of which their father had informed them, and by faith in the promised Messiah, signified thereby, Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain; perhaps more proper in its matter, and certainly so in its manner, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts." Perhaps the Lord testified his respect by consuming his sacrifice with fire from heaven, as in the case of Aaron, Lev. ix. 24; Gideon, Judg. vi. 21; David, 1 Chron. xxi. 26; Solomon, 2 Chron. vii. 1; and Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 38.——Ver. 5—15. Full of rage against God and his brother, Cain's looks became sour, dejected, envious, and angry. To convince him of his fault, God showed him that it was his own want of faith and sincerity which hindered his acceptance; and that, if he did not repent, his sin would quickly subject him to punishment; and that in temporals, Abel continued as subject to him and was as affectionate as ever. While they talked in the field, Cain, still enraged in his heart, murdered his righteous brother on account of his piety, Ps. lv. 21. 1 John iii. 12. Abel's blood cried to God for just vengeance upon Cain, Heb. xii. 24. God, notwithstanding Cain's denial and insulting pretence that he had given him no charge of his brother, condemned him to punishment, and cursed the fields which he should cultivate into a farther degree of barrenness, Ps. ix. 12. Cain never lamented the heinousness of his sin, but complained that it could not be pardoned, and that his punishment was Contains a brief account of the woman's seed, the patriarchal progenitors of Christ, in the line of Seth, from Adam to Noah, and his sons. The chief things remarkable are, (1) The sad change of the human nature, through the loss of the divine image, in Adam's fall; 1—3. (2) The pious conversation of Enoch, and God's translation of him to heaven without tasting of death; 21—24. (3) The prediction of Lamech, the descendant of Seth, concerning Noah's becoming a distinguished comfort and blessing to the world; 28, 29. The rest merely remarks the time of the birth, life, and death of the patriarchs.

THIS is the [a] book of the generations of Adam. In the day that God created man, in the [b] likeness of God made he him:

2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and [c] called their name [*] Adam, in the day when they were created.

3 ¶ And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his [d] own likeness, after his image; and called his name [e] Seth.

4 And the days of Adam, after he had begotten Seth, were eight hundred years; and he [f] begat sons and daughters.

too great; and that now every body would be ready to kill him, as the public enemy of mankind, and devoted of God to destruction. But God marked him with some visible token, and denounced a still heavier vengeance against the person who should kill him. Thus, Job xviii. 11. and xv. 20—24. Terrors made him afraid on every side, and drove him to his feet. He travelled in pain all his days, &c.—Lev. xxvi. 17, 36. "But God slew him not, lest his people should forget," Ps. lix. 11.——Ver. 19. Contrary to God's original institution of marriage, and the stated equality preserved by his providence among the males and females of mankind, Lamech, the descendant of Cain, to gratify his intemperate lust, first took a plurality of wives, and introduced a custom which still remains in many places of the world; and with which not a few of the pious Hebrews, inadvertent to the sinfulness thereof, complied; Gen. xvi. and xxix. 2 Sam. iii. v. 1 Kings xi. &c. But Christ fully laid open the iniquity of this practice, and restored marriage to its original form: Gen. ii. 18—24. Mal. ii. 14, 15. Mat. xix. 8.—— Ver. 23, 24. To deter his wives from hurting him, or to render them fearless of his being hurt by others, he boasts that he was well able to take care of himself; and that God, who took so much care of Cain, would certainly take much more care of his life, who had never been a murderer. Perhaps for this purpose he puts it to them as a question, "Have I slain a man to my wounding, or a young man to my hurt?" &c.——Ver. 26. The professors of the true religion, descended from Seth or others, called themselves the children of God, as a mark of distinction from the profane descendants of Cain; and they set up, or re-established, the more public and solemn worship of God on the sabbath, or on other occasions.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Let me believe the promise of God; but never sinfully hasten to obtain the promised blessing, lest I grasp a devil, a murderer, instead of the great God my Saviour! Never let me partially esteem children, or any thing else, lest what I regard become the plague of my soul, or my house; while what I contemn as vanity be highly favoured of the Lord! Let me train up my children betimes in proper callings, and especially in the fear and service of God! Let me always honour the Lord with the best I possess, ever remembering that "without faith it is impossible to please him!" If he show a superior regard to others, never let my eye be evil because he is good, but let me ascribe righteousness to him, and take to myself shame and confusion of face! But how great is the strength of enraged natural corruption! Nothing is so base, so impious, so unnatural, but it will attempt it. How fearful for guilty transgressors to fall into the hands of an angry God! No falsehood can deceive him, nor force withstand him. Nor can all the carnal expedients on earth relieve a conscience divinely charged and burdened with guilt. Never let me envy the prosperity of the wicked, their cities erected, their numerous and thriving families, their artful inventions, or pleasures of sense! But when Jesus adds to his church, or reforms the worship of it, let me rejoice thereat. Meanwhile, in the name, the employ, the sacrifice, and death of Abel, let me behold Jesus appearing in the likeness of sinful flesh, and sullied with the vilest reproach!—Jesus, as the great Shepherd of his Father's church:—Jesus, as the faithful offerer of himself unto God for a sacrifice of a sweet-smelling savour:—Jesus, the hatred and murder of whom, by his brethren the Jews, issued in the curse of their country, the rejection of their church, and the scattering and misery of their nation, as a lasting monument of the vengeance of heaven!

CHAP. V. Ver. 3. Seth was begotten, not in the image of God, in which Adam had been created, but in the image of fallen Adam, that is, guilty of, and depraved with sin. "He was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did his mother conceive him;" Ps. li. 5. "A child of disobedience,—by nature a child of wrath, even as others," the profane descendants of Cain not excepted; Eph. ii. 2, 3.—What was born of flesh, corrupted parents, was flesh infected with sinful corruption: John iii. 6. Job xiv. 4. Observe: believing parents produce children according to their nature, not according to their grace.——Ver. 22—24. The pure use of conjugal life does not hinder the strictest practice of holiness. Amidst all the cares and pleasures of a family, Enoch walked with God as his intimate and glorious Friend and Companion, who manifested to him his amiable perfections in their new-covenant form, and bestowed his gracious blessings and influences upon him: Mic. vi. 8. Gen. vi. 9. He walked after God, imitating him as his perfect and engaging pattern, and always dependent on his drawing and supporting grace: Deut. xiii. 4. Cant. i. 4. and viii. 5. He walked before God, as his Master, Witness, and future Judge, always deeply impressed with a lively sense of his authority, presence, and purity;

CHAPTER VI.

In this chapter we see (1) God so highly provoked with the wickedness of men, that he condemned the whole earth to be drowned with a flood—after they should have had an hundred and twenty years given them for a space to repent: 1—7, 11—13, 17. (2) Noah made the publisher of his purpose, and the mean of preserving a sample of every living creature on the earth by an ark which God directed him to build: 8—10, 14—16, 18—21. (3) In the faith of God's predictions, and in obedience to his command, Noah prepares the ark, 22.

AND it came to pass, when [*] men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them,

[*] Seth's posterity. (The sons of God, born of the spirit (John 3. 6.) by faith, (Gal. 3. 26.) have been from the beginning the only real divisions of the human race. But as believers are by grace gathered out of the sons of men, so hypocrites and unbelievers are by temptation (Mat. 13.) discovered amongst the sons of God, their apostasy in principle soon degenerates into sensuality of practice, and whilst power is extended, riches increased, and luxury indulged, mercy is pleading with them, but justice is ready to smite.—Ed.)

3 And the LORD said, [a] My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his [†] days shall be an hundred and twenty years.

4 There were giants [‡] in the earth in those days; and also after [§] that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of [‖] renown.

5 And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that [*] every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil [†] continually.

6 And it repented the LORD that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart.

7 And the LORD said, I will destroy man, whom I have created, from the face of the earth, [‡] both man and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air: for it repenteth me that I have made them.

ch. xvii. 1. and xxiv. 40. Ps. xvi. 8. and cxvi. 9. He walked worthy of the Lord, fruitful in every good word and work, answerable to what God was to him, and had done or had promised to do for him, Col. i. 10.—answerable to his clear foresight of the future judgment: Jude 14, 15. 2 Pet. iii. 11, 14. He walked in Christ, living by faith on him, and through the grace of God "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously and godly:" Col. ii. 6. Gal. ii. 16. Tit. ii. 11, 12. Publicly to approve and reward his holiness, and to render him a type of Christ's ascension, and a pledge of the complete and eternal glorification of the saints, God took him out of this world to heaven, both soul and body: Heb. xi. 5. "By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death; and was not found on earth, for God had translated him to heaven; for he had this testimony,—that he pleased God."——Ver. 29. Noah brought rest and comfort by the building of his ark, in which the seminary of both the world and church did rest and was saved: Gen. vii. viii. and ix. And, by his inventions in husbandry, he freed men from much of their toil occasioned by the curse on the ground: Gen. ix. 20. with iii. 17, 18. And, as a type and a preacher of righteousness, he was a mean of directing them to everlasting rest and consolation in Christ: 1 Pet. iii. 18—20.——Ver. 32. Japheth was the eldest of Noah's sons, ch. x. 21., and Ham the youngest, ch. ix. 24: but Shem is first mentioned, because of his piety, and his being one of the Messiah's progenitors, and because his posterity are the principal subject of Moses' writings; for the same reason Abram, though born sixty years later than Haran, is put first in the family of Terah: ch. xi. 26. with xii. 4. In the early ages of the world, Providence wisely ordered it that people should live long, for the speedy replenishing of the world, and for the more effectual propagation of the true religion and other useful knowledge; and, no doubt, the superior wholesomeness of the air, and of their diet, and their temperance in the use of it, contributed to promote this longevity.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—Whilst I read, let me with deep concern cry out, "How is the gold become dim, and the most fine gold changed!" Behold how death reigns, through sin, from Adam to Noah; and how sure, though sometimes slowly, it strikes! Ah! what a nothing must I, my age, and all my labours be in his sight, before whom the long, long lives of ten patriarchs and replenished world, make so insignificant a figure! To be born, to breathe, to rear up a family, and give up the ghost, how mean! Yet this is all of man! and how few, in a replenished world, are worthy of God's notice! Let therefore Enoch who walked with God,—or rather Jesus, the dedicated servant of God,—Jesus, who set the Lord always before him, and did always the things which pleased the Father,—Jesus, who foretold the breaking forth of the floods of wrath upon Judah, and the world of the ungodly,—Jesus, who clearly predicted the last judgment, and the procedure in it, and who, "having by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high,"—be my pattern in life, and my forerunner to glory! And let him be my rest and consolation to comfort me concerning my labour and toil, to take away the curse from all my enjoyments, to afford security and rest through all my trials, till he bring me to his new world of righteousness and glory!

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1, 2.—The descendants of Cain, or other profane persons who had joined them, are here called men, because they had quite cast off all regard to God and his ways, and the professors of the true religion are called the sons of God,—they had a visible relation to him, lived in his church, and professed to be born from above, and to be ready to yield a cheerful and evangelical obedience to his commands: ch. iv. 26. Deut. xiv. 1. 2 Cor. vi. 18. These wantonly gazed on the daughters of Cain, who seem to have been extremely handsome and jovial: Judg. xiv. 1. 2 Pet. ii. 14. Mat. v. 28; and, regardless of God's direction or allowance, they followed their fancies, and married them. Such unequal marriages of professors with the carnal and profane are expressly prohibited by the law of God, and have been a common plague to families, nations, and churches: 1 Cor. vii. 39. 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15. Mal. ii. 11. Deut. vii. 3, 4. Exod. xxxiv. 16. Josh. xxiii. 12. Gen. xxiv. 3. xxvi. 34, 35. xxvii. 46. xxviii. 1, 2. and xxxviii. 2 Sam. iii. 3; with xiii. 28, 29. and xv. 1 Kings xi. Ezra ix. 1, 2, 3, 12. Neh. xiii. 24—27.——Ver. 3. God's Spirit strove with them by his inward good motions, by the checks which he caused their consciences to give them, and by the counsels and warnings given them by Noah, the preacher of righteousness, or others: 1 Pet. iii. 18, 19. 2 Pet. ii. 5. Neh. ix. 30.—They were flesh, not only frail and weak in their nature, but exceedingly and obstinately corrupt, carnal, and sensual in their heart and life,—under the reign of indwelling sin, which is called flesh; Rom. viii. 1, 4, 7, 8. Jude 19,—and mad on practising the manifest works of the flesh: adultery, fornication, &c. Gal. v. 19—21.——Ver. 4. These giants, or huge-bodied men, in the pride and confidence of their stature and strength, became despisers of God and goodness, and oppressors of mankind.——Ver. 5. Jer. xvii. 9, 10. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. I, the Lord search the heart, and try the reins, to give to every man according to his works." Rom. viii. 7. "The carnal mind is enmity against God, and is not subject to his law, neither indeed can be." Mat. xv. 19, "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies." Ps. lviii. 3, "The wicked are estranged from the womb; they go astray as soon as they are born." And liii. 1—3, "the fool hath said in his heart, There is no God—Corrupt are they, they have done abominable iniquity. God looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, that did seek God. Every one of them is gone back, they are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one." Ps. xiv. 1—4. Isa. i. 2—6. Hos. iv. 1, 2. Mark vii. 21—23. Rom. 28—31. iii. 10—19. and viii. 8. Gal. v. 19—21. Eph. ii. 1—3. Tit. iii. 3.——Ver. 6, 7. God's repentance denotes not any change of his purpose or will within himself. In this respect he is unchangeable, and cannot repent: Mal. iii. 6. Num. xxiii. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 29. James i. 17. But it denotes the change of his providence correspondent with his fixed purpose: 1 Sam. xv. 11. Ps. cvi. 45. Jer. xviii. 10. Deut. xxxii. 36. Hos. xi. 8. It is a word suited to our capacity; and here it denotes God's detestation of sin, and his fixed resolution to punish it, after man had made himself quite another thing than God had made him at first.——Ver. 8. To find grace in the eyes of the Lord, is to be freely loved and delighted in by him, in order to preservation from some remarkable destruction, or to the bestowal of some distinguished blessing: Gen. xix. 19. Exod. xxxiii. 12, 13. 2 Sam. xv. 25. Luke i. 30. Acts vii. 46. 2 Tim. i. 18. Heb. iv. 16. Thus Prov. viii. 35; "Whoso findeth Christ findeth life, and shall obtain favour of the Lord." And xii. 2. "A good man obtaineth favour of the Lord. And iii. 4. and xviii. 22.——Ver. 9. Noah was a just man, justified by faith in the imputed righteousness of Christ: Hab. ii. 4. Heb. xi. 7. Rom. i. 17. iii. 22, 24. v. 1. and viii. 33. Rom. v. 19. "By the obedience of one (Christ) shall many be made righteous;" 2 Cor. v. 21. "For God made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." Isa. xiv. 24, 25. Jer. xxiii. 6. and xxxiii. 16. Phil. iii. 9. He was perfect, upright, and sincere,—a man of great integrity and godly sincerity, having his heart wholly consecrated for God, entire in his obedience to all God's commandments, and watchfully keeping himself unspotted from the world; as ch. xvii. 1. Deut. xviii. 13. Job i. 1, 8. Ps. xxxvii. 37. and cxix. 1, 5, 6. Prov. ii. 21. Mat. v. 48. Luke viii. 15. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. and ii. 9. Eph. iv. 11, 12. Phil. iii. 15. Col. i. 28. 2 Tim. iii. 17. Heb. xiii. 21. 1 Pet. v. 10. Rev. iii. 2. Luke i. 6. "Righteous before God, and walking in all the commandments of the Lord blameless." 2 Cor. i. 12. "in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in this world." Noah was perfect in his generation, amidst men extremely wicked, and notwithstanding their evil counsels, examples, and persecutions. Phil. ii. 15.—"Be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world," 1 Pet. ii. 15.—"That with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." And iii. 16.——Ver. 11. Multitudes of the most enormous sins abounded among all ranks, and were committed before God in an open and presumptuous manner, without any fear of him; nay, in defiance to his vengeance. So the wickedness of Nimrod and the Sodomites was committed: ch. x. 9. xiii. 13. and xix. 13.——Ver. 13. The end of all flesh is come before me. The time for the destruction of mankind and animals, fixed in my purpose, is near at hand; as Jer. li. 13. Ezek. vii. 2, 3, 6. Amos. viii. 2.——Ver. 22. Heb. xi. 7. "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not "seen as yet, moved with fear" of the approaching flood, and notwithstanding manifold scoffs from his neighbours, "prepared an ark to the saving of his house."

month, [a] the same day were all the [b] fountains of the great deep broken up, and the [†] windows of heaven were opened.

12 And the rain was upon the earth forty [k] days and forty nights.

13 [l] In the self-same day entered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, into the ark:

14 They, and every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every [‡] sort.

15 And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life.

16 And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, as God had commanded him: and the LORD [m] shut him in.

17 ¶ And the [§] flood was forty days upon the earth; and the waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lift up above the earth.

18 And [n] the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth; and the ark went upon the face of the waters.

19 And the waters [o] prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; and all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered.

20 [‖] Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail; and the mountains were covered.

21 ¶ And [p] all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man:

22 All in whose nostrils was [*] the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died.

23 [q] And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: [†] and [r] Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark.

24 And the waters prevailed upon the earth [s] an hundred and fifty days.

AND God remembered Noah, and [a] every living thing, and all the cattle that was with him in the ark: and God made [b] a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged:

2 The [c] fountains also of the deep, and the windows of heaven, were stopped, and the rain from heaven was restrained:

3 And the waters returned from off the earth [*] continually; and [d] after the end of the hundred and fifty days the waters were abated.

4 ¶ And the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the [†] mountains of [*] Ararat.[‡]

5 And the waters [§] decreased continually until the tenth month: in the tenth month, on the first day of the month, were the tops of the mountains seen.

6 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of forty days, that Noah [f] opened the window [‖] of the ark which he had made:

7 And he sent forth a [g] raven, which went forth [*] to and fro, until the waters were dried up from off the earth.

8 Also he sent forth [h] a dove from him, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground:

9 But the dove [i] found no rest for the sole of her foot, and she returned unto him into the ark; for the waters were on the face of the [†] whole earth. Then he put forth his hand, and took her, and [‡] pulled her in unto him into the ark.

10 And he [k] stayed yet other seven days, and again he sent forth the dove out of the ark:

11 And the dove came in to him in the evening; and, lo, in her mouth was [l] an olive-leaf pluckt off. So Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth.

12 And he [m] stayed yet other seven days, and sent forth the dove, which returned not again unto him any more.

macy and matrimonial connexions with the carnal and profane! How sin transforms this world into a kind of hell, filled with corruption, wickedness, and disorder! Behold how quickly it ripens it for a destructive deluge of divine wrath! How long and how patiently God bears with the manners of these monsters of impiety, after they seem ripened for ruin! But how sad their case when his Spirit ceaseth to strive with their consciences for their conversion and reformation!—What a blessing are upright saints in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation! How highly regarded and honoured of God! And what distinguished means of preserving families, nations, churches, or even the world, from utter ruin!

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—Behold, my soul, the goodness and severity of God! His goodness,—in saving the man whom his own grace had qualified for that mercy,—in saving others, even the wicked part of his family, for his sake,—in saving the brute animals in proportion to their serviceableness to man,—in adding seven days' space of repentance to the wretched profligates who had abused the former reprieve of 120 years, and, after all, bringing the flood gradually on them, for their awakening, and to give them still further space to repent! But let me tremble at his righteous judgments! How the clouds from above, the wells from below, so long beneficial to mankind, now concur to destroy them! What multitudes, who had despised his warnings, now perish by his hand! And how ineffectual is every attempt to escape! While the ark of God's testament his new covenant, is open, let me escape thither for my life, and bring with me, of my fellow-sinners, all whom I can. The day is at hand, when the earth and the works thereof shall be burned up, and the door of mercy for ever shut. God forbid that I should be among those multitudes who shall then be shut out into outer darkness, where there is "weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth!"

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. God's remembering persons or things denotes his manifesting his notice of them, either in a way of mercy for their deliverance or benefit, according to his promise, as here, and ch. xix. 29. and xxx. 22. Exod. xxxii. 13. Neh. xiii. 14, 22. Job xiv. 13. Ps. cxxxii. 1. cvi. 4. and cxxxvi. 23; or, in a way of wrath for their punishment, Ps. cxxxvii. 7. Amos viii. 7. Rev. xvi. 19. and xviii. 5.—— Ver. 20. It was common for the patriarchs to erect altars and offer sacrifices of thanksgiving, for mercies received, and for the expiation of their own guilt, as in the case of Abraham, chap. xii. 7, 8. and xiii. 18; Isaac, xxvi. 25; and Jacob, xxxv. 7; and Moses, Ex. xvii. 15. These were typical of Christ our New-Testament altar, as the sacrifices were of his oblation of himself, Heb. x. 10—15.—— Ver. 21. The Lord accepted it as a thing pleasant and delightful, proceeding from faith and gratitude: 1 Sam. xxvi. 19. Lev. xxvi. 31. Amos v. 21. God would hereafter improve the sinfulness of mankind as an occasion of manifesting his patience 13 ¶ And it came to pass in the six hundredth and first year, [a] in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth; and Noah removed the covering of the ark, and looked, and, behold, the face of the ground was dry.

14 And in the second month [n], on the seven and twentieth day of the month, was the earth dried.

15 ¶ And God spake unto Noah, saying,

17 Bring forth with thee every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth; that [p] they may breed abundantly in the earth, and be fruitful, and multiply upon the earth.

18 And Noah went forth, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him:

19 Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatsoever creepeth upon the earth, after their [†] kinds, went forth out of the ark. [‡]

20 ¶ And [q] Noah builded an altar unto the LORD, and took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt-offerings on the altar.

Nov. 17th, the fountains of the great deep broken open. Dec. 26th, the rain begins, and continues forty days. Jan. all men and beasts on earth perish. Feb. rain continued. March, the waters remained covering the mountains till the 27th, when they began to abate. April 17th, the ark rests on Ararat. May, the waters are receding. June 1st, mountain tops appear. July 11th, Noah lets go a raven; 18th, a dove which returns; 25th, the dove returns with an olive leaf. Aug. 2d, the dove let out, returns no more. Sept. 1st, dry land appeared. Oct. 27th, Noah leaves the ark with his family.—Ed.

CHAPTER IX.

Here we have (1) God's covenant of preservation with Noah and his family further explained, importing that they should be multiplied for replenishing the earth; that the brute animals should stand in awe of them; that they might eat the flesh of animals, but not with the blood; that the earth should never more be drowned with a flood—of which the rainbow, though a sign of rain, should be the infallible token; 1—17: and requiring them to take care of human life, by punishing murderers with death: 5, 6. (2) An account of Noah, his family, his employment, his drunkenness, the behaviour of his sons towards him in it, and their correspondent blessings and curse; and, in fine, of his death: 18—29.

Now, when he extends to Noah the permission to use animal food, he likewise retains a portion—the blood, which is the life, to testify that he is the alone giver of life, to remind man that he is subject to the sentence of death, and to lead him to the blood of "the Lamb (in purpose, promises and types) slain from the foundation of the world."—Ed.

14 And it shall come to pass, when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud:

"Though we have sinned with our fathers, have committed iniquity, have done wickedly, nevertheless he saved, for his name's sake, that he might make his mighty power to be known." Ezek. xvi. 60—63. "Nevertheless, notwithstanding innumerable and grievous provocations, I will remember my covenant with thee; I am pacified towards thee for all that thou hast done." And xx. 4—44. "I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings." Compare xxxvi. 16—32. Rom. v. 20, 21. "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; that as sin had reigned unto death, grace might reign through righteousness unto eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."——Ver. 22. How remarkably exact, over all the world, hath been the fulfilment of this prediction for more than 4000 years past!

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VIII. How graciously God remembers, and in mercy visits his favourites in due time! therefore, though the vision tarry, let me wait for it. How easily, and often gradually, the Lord accomplishes his merciful designs! As he never wants instruments of affliction and ruin, so neither of gracious deliverances. Whatever means I may use of information, or of affecting my conscience and heart, let me in all my ways acknowledge God, and wait for his direction out of straits, as well as in them. If I receive deliverance, let my heart be lifted up in his way, and my thanksgivings wait for him in Zion! Let my hopes of future favours wholly depend upon his sovereign mercy, not on my own or others' reformation: for, alas! blessed or chastised, we are flagrant rebels still! But, in this patriarch's ark, do I not discern Jesus Christ? He is the absolutely necessary mean of our escaping the justly deserved and destructive floods of God's everlasting wrath. Every thing in his mediatorial person and office was devised and appointed of God. He was gradually reared up in promises before he was actually incarnate, and gradually he finished his all-covering atonement. How wide is the gate of access to him revealed in the gospel! and what abundant room is there in his saving power, his love, his blood, his intercession, his covenant, and promise, for endangered sinners of mankind! His stories are his ancient undertaking, his humiliation, and his endless glory. No light is in him but what is of a spiritual and heavenly nature. By exposing himself to the deluging rains, the fearful billows of his Father's wrath; to depths wherein was no standing, till at last he rested in his grave, and at his Father's right hand he bears up and saves his chosen. How many despise him and his atonement! But, by the power of God, what multitudes, both of Jews and Gentiles, are saved by him, and made heirs of new promises, inhabitants of a new covenant state, and an eternal world of blessedness!—And is not the same a figure of the gospel-church, in which, reared by Jesus' labours of love, the nations of them that are saved do live in this world, "till the winter be past, and the floods be over and gone?" And, happy period, when, after tossings unnumbered, the Lord shall call us forth into our fields, "our house eternal in the heavens," where rains, where storms, where nights, where winters, where curses never enter!

‡ We find in Jacob, (Chap. 27. 2. & 48. 36.) if not a distinguishing partiality, at least a strong and special attachment to Joseph, as the son of his old age. May not this furnish us with the reason why the prophetic denunciation of Noah is not against Ham the immediate transgressor, but against Canaan, (Chap. 10. 6.) as his youngest son? The wickedness of the father is punished by the bad education he gave to his son, and the consequences to which it conducted both him and his posterity. Note.—The good or evil in parents, is not merely personal, but is propagated by education through remote generations.—Ed.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 25—27. These predictions are greatly extensive; almost every prediction in scripture relative to the Egyptians, Canaanites, Tyrians, and Sidonians, is comprehended in this repeated curse of Canaan. Almost every prediction relative to the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, and Arabs, and especially what relates to the Jewish nation and Jesus Christ, is included in the blessing of Shem. Almost every prediction relative to the Greeks, Romans, Goths, Tartars, and Turks, and especially what relates to the gospel-church among the Gentiles, is contained in the blessing of Japheth.—The fulfilment of these predictions is no less remarkable. Much of the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, much of the history of nations, is no more than an account of it. The descendants of Ham, by his sons Cush, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan, peopled Africa, and part of Western Asia.—For about four thousand years past, the bulk of the Africans have been abandoned of Heaven to the most gross ignorance, rigid slavery, stupid idolatry, and savage barbarity. Scarcely ever hath a State formed of them made any respectable figure,—the Egyptians and Carthaginians excepted; and even they had little dominion over any part of the descendants of Shem or Japheth. For many ages, the northern parts of Africa were enslaved or harassed by the Assyrian, Chaldean, and Persian descendants of Shem; and next by the Greeks, but especially the Roman and Vandal descendants of Japheth. For eleven hundred years past they have been enslaved by the Ishmaelite Saracens descended from Shem, or by the Seljukian and Ottoman Turks descended of Japheth. And what multitudes of the Western Africans were formerly bought for slaves by the English, and are still by the Spaniards, the French, Portuguese and Dutch; and condemned to the hardest drudgery in their American plantations! It was Canaan, I suppose, who first saw the nakedness of Noah, and told his father of it. His posterity first settled in the west of Asia, and the curse hath pursued them in a still more remarkable manner. About A. M. 2079, Chedorlaomer, and his Elamite descendants of Shem, rendered tributary the Canaanitish kingdoms of Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar. Upon their revolt, he invaded and pillaged their country, Gen. xiv. Not long after, they, Zoar excepted, were destroyed with fire and brimstone from heaven, for their unnatural lewdness and other abominations, Gen. xix. The Hebrews, chiefly under Moses, Joshua, and Barak, cut off most of the other Canaanites, and seized on their country. Num. xxi. Josh. vi—xix. Judg. iv. The Gibeonites and others, whose lives were spared, were subjected to slavery, Josh. ix. Judg. i. 2 Sam. v. Solomon had more than 150,000 of them employed as slaves in the building of the temple, 1 Kings ix. 20, 22. and v. 15, 16. They who settled in the north-west of Canaan, and formed the once flourishing states of Tyre and Sidon, were by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Persians, but chiefly by the Greeks, Romans, Saracens, and Turks, reduced to great misery and bondage, till at last they were totally ruined, Isa. xxiii. Ezek. xxvi. xxviii. They who fled from Joshua, or afterwards to northern Africa, and formed the Carthaginian and other states, were, after much contention and mutual enslavement, reduced by the Romans to the basest servitude and misery: and for about two thousand years that country hath been one continued scene of slavery to the Romans, Vandals, Saracens, or Turks. The Phœnician Canaanites, who, pushing their fortunes, settled in the Mediterranean islands, or in Greece, Italy, or on the border of the Euxine sea, have shared a similar fate of thraldom and misery from the Persians, Greeks, Romans, Saracens, Normans, or Turks. But the countries of Persia, Assyria, Chaldea, Lydia, Syria, Arabia, India, and I suppose most of China, were peopled by the posterity of Elam, Asshur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram, sons of Shem. The blessings bestowed upon them by God have been remarkable. The most rich or fertile parts of the world fell to their share. They formed the Assyrian, Chaldean, Persian, and Saracen monarchies, which in their turns enslaved the offspring of Canaan. For two thousand years, from the death of Noah, to that of Christ, the knowledge of the true religion, and the new covenant relation to God, as his church and people, were almost wholly confined to them, particularly to the Jews; and from them the Messiah, the Lord from heaven, had his human descent; and from them the apostolic founders of the gospel-church did spring. The sons of Japheth were Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech, and Tiras. Their descendants, the Celts or Gauls, the Tartars, Medes, Greeks, Romans, Goths, Turks, &c. prodigiously multiplied, and peopled the whole of Europe, the northern half of Asia, and I suppose most of America. For many ages they have been settling themselves in the original habitations of the posterity of Shem. The Medes, assisted by the Chaldeans, overturned the Assyrian empire; and afterwards, assisted by the Persians, whom they had subdued, ruined the Chaldean. Perhaps it was their Scythian brethren, who about two hundred years after founded the powerful monarchy of the Parthians in Persia, and the places about; while multitudes of the overstocked Gauls from Europe invaded Asia, and partly took up their residence in Mesopotamia. About three hundred and thirty years before the birth of our Saviour, the Greeks, under Alexander, overran Asia, to the river Indus, and for several ages held it in subjection. Next the Romans pushed their conquests into Syria, Assyria, and Canaan; and for more than seven hundred years retained what they could of it. For many ages the Tartarian Huns and Turks continued to pour themselves into Persia, and the countries about. In the eleventh century of the Christian reckoning, the Seljukian Turks formed themselves into the four kingdoms of Bagdad, Damascus, Aleppo, and Iconium, and quickly extended their dominion as far as the Indus. Meanwhile Mahmud-Gazni, with an army of Tartars and others, invaded India, and founded there a mighty empire, which continued about two hundred years. In the 13th century, Jenghis Khan and his sons, with their Tartar troops, conquered the greater part of Asia. The empires which they founded in China and in Persia continued about nine generations. In the beginning of the 15th century, Tamerlane, with his Tartars, overran great part of Asia, and founded an empire in Persia, and another in Western India, which still subsists under the great Mogul. For about three hundred years, the Ottoman Turks have been masters of Assyria, Syria, Canaan, and the places about; while the Portuguese, the Spaniards, the English, the Dutch, the Danes, and French, have been rendering themselves masters of islands or settlements, almost innumerable, in the East Indies. Thus there is scarce one single country of note which originally pertained to the offspring of Shem, but is now possessed or governed by the enlarged posterity of Japheth, Arabian Hejiaz excepted. Multitudes too of the posterity of Japheth in Asia and America, but chiefly in Europe, have been persuaded of God to embrace the true religion, and become his church, ever since the Jews were rejected. The far greater part of that race known to us do, and for many ages have, at least in word, made profession of the Christian faith, while very few of the descendants of Shem or Ham have so much as pretended it. Nor do I remember that the Christian religion ever had a public establishment from one of them, the Abyssinians excepted. What an exact, an explicatory, and confirming counterpart is the whole providence of God to his word! What understanding of the divine authenticity of the scriptures, and of the love and faithfulness of God, may I attain by a wise and careful observation thereof!

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IX.—Lord, what is man, that thou shouldst be so mindful of him and his concerns! that thou shouldst so care for his welfare and his life! that thou shouldst so familiarly covenant with him, and so often repeat thy declarations for the strengthening and confirmation of his faith! May I always accept thy favours with thankfulness, and obey thy commandments with cheerfulness! But ah, how quickly do we forget his mighty works! how fearfully do the best stumble and fall, if the Lord uphold them not mightily! How readily do fools trample on every tie of relation or duty, in order to make a mock of sin! But dreadful is the curse, lasting and extensive the vengeance, which awaits those who contemn and deride their aged parents! while blessings shall be on their head who regard them, and cover their infirmities. But let me not bid adieu to the dying patriarch, till in him I contemplate the great God my Saviour! His name is a bed of rest, and source of comfort. He is the distinguished favourite of Heaven. In the midst of a crooked and perverse generation he dared to be singularly good: at once he gave an unblemished pattern of uprightness, and boldly preached righteousness in the great congregation. To him mankind owe their recovery from ruin. By him the church is gradually built up as the mean of our salvation, and his little flock are rendered true members thereof. Upon the savour of his sweet-smelling sacrifice God hath promised no more to curse the elect. With him and his seed is the new covenant infallibly established; and to them are the inheritance and rules of the new covenant state conferred. By him is the church, the vineyard of the Lord of hosts, planted and cultivated; and in his word is irreversibly declared the everlasting fate of his professed seed. Behold how those who love his person, and hide the infirmities of his saints, are blessed with all spiritual blessings! Behold how the curse of sin pursues both wicked Jews and carnal professors, who stumble at this corner-stone, who turn his grace into licentiousness, and the infirmity of his saints into ridicule! and what everlasting ruin it entails upon them.

CHAP. X. Ver. 5. Europe, Lesser Asia, and the islands of the Mediterranean sea, are these Isles of the Gentiles. The Jews called countries, situated on the seashore, or parted from their own by sea, isles, Jer. xlvii. 4. "Country (Heb. isles) of Caphtor." And xxv. 22. To these Isles of the Gentiles the gospel promises are peculiarly directed, and on their inhabitants they have been peculiarly fulfilled: Ps. lxxii. 10. and xcvii. 1. Isa. xxiv. 15. xlii. 4, 10, 12. xlix. 1. li. 5. lx. 9. and lxvi. 19. Zeph. ii. 11, &c.——Ver. 8, 9. Perhaps Nimrod first made himself popular by hunting down the wild beasts which began to infest the country, and then openly, and without fear of God, he usurped the government over his neighbours, and became so cruel an oppressor or persecutor, Jer. xvi. 16. Lam. iv. 18. Ezek. xiii. 18. that his name became a proverb of reproach. Compare 2 Chron. xxviii. 22.——Ver. 21. The children of Eber are the Hebrews, who being followers of him in his faith and holiness, and the peculiar people of God from whom the Messiah sprung, were the principal descendants of Shem, and those on whom his blessing was chiefly conferred, Num. xxiv. 24. What nations these descendants of Noah formed, and what countries they inhabited, may be seen in ch. ix. 25—27.

26 And Terah lived seventy years,[*] and [o] begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran.

27 ¶ Now these are the generations of Terah:[†] Terah begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran; and Haran begat Lot.

28 And Haran died before his father Terah in the land of his nativity, in [p] Ur of the Chaldees.

29 And Abram and Nahor took them wives:[‡] the name of Abram's wife was [q] Sarai; and the name of Nahor's wife [r] Milcah, the daughter of Haran, the father of Milcah, and the father of [s] Iscah.

30 But Sarai was [t] barren; she had no child.

31 ¶ [s] And Terah took Abram his son,[‖] and Lot the son of Haran his son's son, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, his son Abram's wife; [u] and they went forth with them from [*] Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan; and they came unto [v] Haran,[†] and dwelt there.

32 And the days of Terah were two hundred and five years: and Terah died in Haran.

¶ We learn from Acts 7. 2. that God's first appearance and direction to Abram, was before he dwelt in Charran. We learn from Josh. 24. 2. that Terah and his progenitors were all idolaters previous to this call; and from this verse (31.) we find that Terah took Abram his son, &c. from Ur, to go into the land of Canaan. Is it not therefore reasonable to conclude that Terah had been converted by the testimony of Abram his son, when he not merely accompanied, but took him forth to the promised land?—ED.

[†] Haran, or Charran, situate in the north-west of Mesopotamia, has retained its name with little variation in all ages. The Greeks and Romans called it Carræ. It is mentioned by Ezek. (27. 23.) as a place that traded with Tyre. Benjamin of Tudela, a Spanish Jew, who travelled in the 12th century, found it altogether decayed; and in 1765, it was reported to Neibhur as a small place much frequented by Jews. The fierce Bedouin tribes by whom it is surrounded, have prevented modern travellers from visiting and describing its present state.—ED.

CHAPTER XII.

Abram (1) authorized by the call, and encouraged by the promises of God, with Lot his nephew, with their families, remove from Haran to Canaan, where he builds two altars for the service of God: 1—9. But, (2) in a famine he retires into Egypt: 10—20.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. X.—How quickly God can repair the most remarkable breaches in external things, and make families increase and spread when he pleaseth! But alas! how soon human pride, and lust of dominion, revive, notwithstanding the most tremendous judgments of God upon them! Neither floods, nor flames, nor sword, nor famine, nor pestilence, but Jesus' blood and Spirit alone, can extirpate our sinful inclinations. How insatiably do carnal men covet and grasp at power or property! and the more they have, the more they hunt after! But let me remember, that all my hunting after these vanities is against, as well as before, the Lord. How often God prospers the wicked under his curse, that he may ripen them for destruction, and prepare their wealth for his people! But much happier is it to be with Eber, a father of saints, than to be with Ham, a parent of ambitious and tyrannical hunters, or of numerous Canaanites devoted to misery and ruin.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 5. God's coming down to see their work denotes his manifesting his notice of it in his deliberate and just judgments upon them for it; ch. xviii. 20, 21.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XI.—How awful the presumption of sinners, who dare attempt to withstand the known command and purpose of the Almighty! Deeply should it affect us that we find the serpent's seed so harmonious and active in wickedness, while the children of promise are so divided and inactive in holiness. But with equity and ease the Lord frustrates the devices of the crafty, and turneth the counsel of the froward headlong, while he causes men's sinful attempts towards fame and power effectually to issue in their infamy and weakness. What a mercy that, as the confusion of tongues effected the dispersion of mankind, the miraculous gift of tongues contributed to spread the gospel, to gather sinners to Jesus, and to build up his church throughout the earth!—Behold how the blessing of Noah begins to operate in the family of Shem, and will do till after the ascension of Christ! How proper to remark the providences of God in the names of our children, or otherwise! How precious are the saints, the church, in God's sight! They are NOW the [a] LORD had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee.

2 [b] And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing:

3 [c] And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.

4 ¶ So Abram departed, as the LORD had spoken unto him; and Lot went with him: and Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran.*

5 And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan;† [d] and into the land of Canaan they came.

6 ¶ And Abram passed through the land unto the place of [e] Sichem, unto the plain of Moreh. And the [f] Canaanite was then in the land.

7 And the LORD appeared unto Abram, and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land: and there builded he an [g] altar unto the LORD, who appeared unto him.‡

8 And he removed from thence unto a mountain on the east of [h] Beth-el, and pitched his tent, having Beth-el on the west, and Hai on the east; and there he builded an altar unto the LORD, and called upon the name of the LORD.

9 And Abram journeyed, [i] going on still toward the south.

10 ¶ And there was a [l] famine in the land: and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the [k] famine was grievous in the land.

11 And it came to pass, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he said unto Sarai his wife, Behold now, I know that thou art [l] a fair woman to look upon:

12 Therefore it shall come to pass, when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they shall say, This is his wife; and they [m] will kill me, but they will save thee alive.

13 [n] Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee.*

14 ¶ † And it came to pass, that, when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians [o] beheld the woman that she was very fair.

15 The [p] princes also of Pharaoh saw her, and commended her before [q] Pharaoh: and the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house.

16 And he entreated Abram well for her sake: ‡ and [r] he had sheep, and oxen, and he-asses, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and she-asses, and camels.

17 And the LORD [s] plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues because of Sarai, Abram's wife.

18 And Pharaoh called Abram, and said, [t] What is this that thou hast done unto me? why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife?

19 Why saidst thou, She is my sister? so I might have taken her to me to wife: now therefore behold thy wife, take her, and go thy way.

20 And Pharaoh commanded his men concerning him: and they [u] sent him away, and his wife, and all that he had.

* This seems to be the second appearance of the Lord to Abram, as it removes him from Haran, where the family of Terah had settled. They had retained, at least, some part of their idolatry (see ch. 31. 30.) and therefore the total separation of Abram became absolutely necessary for himself and his family.—Ed. See next note.

† Note—It is often a sore trial to flesh and blood, to separate, in any degree, from irreligious relatives; but if their principles and example tend to injure ourselves or our children, the sacrifice must be made. allowed far more room in his inspired registers than all the world besides.—If Terah, who set out for Canaan, died by the way, let me tremble, lest, a promise being left me of entering into God's rest, I should seem to come short of it!—tremble lest I should be almost, but never altogether, a Christian, not far from the kingdom of God, but never a true member thereof here, or partaker of it hereafter!

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. While Abram was in Ur of the Chaldees, God appeared to him, probably in human shape: Acts vii. 2. as he did at least eight times afterwards: Gen. xii. 6, 7. xiii. 3, 4. xv. 1. xvii. 1. xviii. 1. xxi. 12. and xxii. 1, 15. and called him to leave his country and his father's house, which for some time past, had been infected with idolatry: Josh. xxiv. 2. 2 Cor. vi. 17. Rev. xviii. 4. Isa. xli. 2. Neh. ix. 7. He, readily surrendering all for the sake of Christ, Ps. xlv. 11. Luke xiv. 26. in obedience to the divine command, and relying on his direction and protection, went forth, not knowing whither the Lord intended to lead him: Heb. xi. 8. But as they had stopped too long in Haran, I suppose the call here mentioned was one which he received anew after the death of his father.——Ver. 2. Abram was made a great nation. His posterity by Ishmael, by the sons of Keturah, and by Esau, were exceedingly numerous: ch. xvi. 10. xvii. 20. xxi. 13. xxv. 1—18. and xxxvi. Num. xxxi. Judg. vi. and vii. His seed of promise, by Jacob, were as the stars of heaven and the dust of the earth in multitude: ch. xiii. 16. xv. 5. xxii. 17. xxviii. 3, 14. and xxxii. 12. Num. i. and xxiii. 10. Heb. xi. 12. 1 Chron. xxi. 1 Kings iv. 20. 2 Chron. xvii. Jer. xxxiii. 22. His spiritual seed, followers of his faith and obedience, are still more numerous, a multitude which no man can number, Ps. ii. 8, 9. xxii. 27—30. lxii. and xcviii. Isa. xlii. xlix. and lx. Rev. vii. 4—9. and xi. 15.—All the spiritual children of Jesus, his eminent seed, are included herein: Isa. liii. 10—12. God blessed Abram, (1) with the numerous seed mentioned: (2) with Canaan, as the future property of part of them; (3) with Christ as his eminent seed; Gal. iii. 16; (4) with all spiritual blessings in Christ; Gal. iii. 14. with Eph. i. 3. Abram was a blessing, (1) to his friends and servants who were instructed by him: Gen. xiv. 14. and xviii. 19. (2) to his posterity, who were blessed for his sake: Exod. iii. 6—8. Lev. xxvi. 42. Gen. xvii. 20: (3) to the world, as an eminent pattern of faith and holiness: Rom. iv. and as the progenitor of Christ the Saviour: Gal. iii. 13, 16.—God did and will remarkably befriend and prosper the friends of Abram and his natural seed, but especially of Jesus Christ and his spiritual seed; and did and will remarkably punish their enemies; Josh. ii. 9. Gen. xv. 13, 14. Ex. xvii. 8—16. Mat. x. 42. and xxv. 41—46. All the families of the earth are blessed in Abram. He was of great service to the Canaanites, in imparting revelation to some of them, or in setting before them all an engaging example of virtue. His seed of promise, and especially his spiritual seed, are useful on that account, and have been and are still the means of the prosperity or protection of nations: Isa. vi. 13. and xix. 24, 25. Mat. xxiv. 22. But it is properly in his seed (Christ) that men are blessed. Multitudes of nations receive much outward happiness, and the dispensation of gospel ordinances, in consequence of his undertaking for his people: Mat. xxiv. 24. Isa. xxxv. xlix. lx. and vi. 13. And believers, gathered out of all nations, are blessed in him with temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings: Gal. iii. 16. Acts iii. 25, 26. Eph. i. 3. Ps. lxxii. 17—19. Isa. xlv. 17—25. It is easy to see, that the subsequent promises and threatenings, nay, the doctrines and laws, mentioned in scripture, are but an enlarged exposition of these two verses; and the whole fate of the Jewish and gospel church, nay, of the saints in heaven and damned in hell, are but one continued fulfilment thereof.——Ver. 7. For about four hundred and seventy years after, the Canaanites remained fixed in the possession of Canaan; during which time God, for the confirmation of his people's faith, renewed this grant of their country, times almost innumerable, to Abram and his seed: Gen. xiii. 15. xv. 7, 18. xvii. 8. xxii. 17. xxvi. 3. xxviii. 4, 13, 14. xxxv. 12. xlvi. 4. xlviii. 21. and l. 24. Ex. iii. 8, 17. vi. 8. xii. 25. xiii. 5. and xx. 12. Lev. xxv. 2. Deut. ii. 24. iv. 1, 21. xi. 10, 17—31. xv. 4, 7. viii. 7, 9. and ix. 1, &c. Canaan was granted as a pledge of heaven to him and his spiritual seed: Rom. ix. 6—8. Gal. iv. 22, 31.——Ver. 8. Abram called on God, i. e. worshipped him by prayer, by preaching to his family, and by offering sacrifices for himself and them: ch. xviii. 19. and xxi. 13.——Ver. 13. Sarai was his sister in some sense, as Lot was his brother; ch. xlii. 8. and xiv. 12, 14. being his father's grand-daughter; ch. xx. 12. and xi. 29; but it was not in that sense, but in the common acceptation of the words sister and brother, they sinfully wished the Egyptians to understand them.

(3) Lot retires to Sodom; and Abram removes further westward into Canaan: 5—9. AND Abram went up out of Egypt, he, and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him, into the [a] south.

2 And Abram was [b] very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold.

3 And he went on his journeys from the south even to Beth-el, unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning, between Beth-el and Hai;

4 Unto the [c] place of the altar, which he had made there at the first: and [d] there Abram called on the name of the LORD.

5 [e] And Lot also, which went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and [e] tents.

6 And the [f] land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together: for their substance was great, so that they could not dwell together.

7 ¶ And there was a [g] strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle. And the [h] Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelt then in the land.

8 And Abram said unto Lot, [i] Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be [†] brethren.

9 Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left.

10 ¶ And Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld [k] all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where, before the LORD destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the LORD, like the land of Egypt, as thou comest unto [l] Zoar. [‡]

11 [§] Then Lot chose him all the plain of Jordan; and Lot journeyed east: and they separated themselves the one from the other.

‡ The obscurity of this verse has much perplexed commentators. Houbigant, by a new translation, attempts it thus: "Before the Lord had destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, it was all, as thou goest to Zoar, well watered, like the garden of the Lord, and like the land of Egypt." But may not the geographical difficulty be removed more easily, and without any violence to the text? Let it be remembered that Abram and Lot were now at Bethel; that Sodom, Gomorrah, and Zoar, lay in a southerly direction from Bethel: and that Moses wrote in the wilderness of Arabia, probably in the neighbourhood of Sinai; and that, consequently, a traveller leaving Bethel, where Abram was, on a journey to the Israelitish camp, would literally be coming to Zoar, and have an opportunity of inspecting on his way the well watered plain of Jordan, where the devoted cities stood in the days of their prosperity. This land is described as well watered as the garden of the Lord, which had four rivers (ch. 2. 10); and, as the land of Egypt, which being annually overflowed by the Nile, is rendered thereby one of the most fertile regions of the earth.—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XII.—How ready and cheerful ought our obedience to be, when God plainly calls and powerfully encourages to it! What secrets of his covenant and providence does the Lord manifest to such as fear him! And with what earnestness ought they to do good to all around them! Surely no discouragement, or apparent enemy, should ever make us to distrust the promise or protection of such a God! How gracious, frequent, and familiar are the visits of God to such as remember him in all their ways! May his kindness attach my heart to his service, as the first, the principal part, the all, of my business in life! Let no earthly enjoyment,—no not a land flowing with milk and honey,—be the portion of my cup, but JEHOVAH himself, and the Canaan above, where wants are never known! Never let me, for the sake of carnal relief or advantage, quit the place or the station in which God hath fixed me, without his plain warrant. If I presume to direct my own way, or choose out my own lot, let me dread snares to my conscience, and plagues upon my concerns! If in such cases the Lord hath ever granted me deliverance, let me bewail my folly, and praise him for the sovereignty of his grace!

CHAP. XIII. Ver 7. It was not proper these heathens should be scandalized by a strife between such as were brethren both by natural relation and by profession of the true religion.——Ver. 8. Ps. cxxxiii. 1, 2, 3. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Heb. xiii. 1. "Let brotherly love continue." Gen. xlv. 24. "He sent his brethren away, and said unto them, See that ye fall not out by the way." Acts vii. 26. "Ye are brethren, why do ye wrong one to another?" Rom. xii. 10. Eph. iv. 3. 1 Thes. iv. 9. Heb. vi. 10. 1 Pet. i. 22. ii. 17. iii. 8. and iv. 8. 2 Pet. i. 7. 1 John ii. 9, 11. iii. 14—19. and iv. 7, 20, 21.——Ver. 17. Abram's survey of Canaan was a mean of strengthening his faith, and of enabling him to discern the glories of heaven thereby represented.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIII.—Mark, my soul, what a load, what an occasion of strife, the riches of this world are! And how sinful and imprudent it is for the children of God to indulge contention before a carnal generation! Better to be losers in outward things than strivers about them! Never let me dare to mingle myself with monsters of wickedness for the sake of carnal advantage, lest, where I expect a paradise, I should find a hell! If, by yielding for the sake of peace, I submit myself to the worst, new visits from God, new promises, and new surveys of the Canaan above, will more than make up my loss. Meanwhile, wherever I go, let me set the Lord always before me, and attend to his worship and service, as my principal employ; then shall his blessing go with me, and render every change on earth a pleasing earnest of the promised inheritance.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 18. Who this Melchizedek was, this priest of God among the Canaanites, greater than Abram, the friend of God, who were his parents or his successors, is on purpose concealed by the Holy Ghost. And hence he is without father or mother, predecessor, or successor, in historical account, in order that he might typify the incomprehensible dignity, the amazing pedigree, and unchangeable duration of Jesus Christ, our great High Priest. Heb. vi. 20. "Jesus was made an high priest after the order of Melchizedek." And v. 6, 10. Ps. cx. 4. Heb. vii. 1—24. "For this Melchizedek, king of Salem, and priest of the most high God, met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all the spoil: first being Melchizedek, which is, by interpretation, king of righteousness; and after that also, king of Salem, which is king of peace; without father, without mother, mentioned in history, without genealogy, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life, recorded in scripture, but made like unto the Son of God, who abideth a priest continually.—Consider how great this man was, unto whom even Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils, and who blessed him that had the promises. And, without all contradiction, the less is blessed of the greater. Levi, who receiveth tithes, paid tithes in Abraham. After the similitude of Melchizedek there ariseth another priest, even Jesus, who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life; and, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood."—— Ver. 22. In matters of importance, it is sometimes necessary to interpose an oath for the confirmation of our assertions or engagements: Heb. vi. 13—17. ch. xxi. 31. xxvi. 31. and xxxi. 53. 1 Sam. xx. 17. Num. v. 21. Exod. xxii. 11. 1 Kings viii. 31. 2 Chron. vi. 22, &c. All oaths are to be sworn by God alone, and import a taking of him to witness the truth of what we declare or engage, and calling him to avenge himself upon us, if we utter falsehood, or neglect to perform our engagement: ch. xxxi. 53. Deut. vi. 13. and x. 20. Isa. xlv. 23. and lxv. 16. Jer. xii. 16. Ps. lxiii. 11. Heb. vi. 13—17. In some cases, the putting of the hand of the inferior under the thigh of his superior was the declaratory sign used in swearing; ch. xxiv. 9. and xlvii. 29. but lifting up of the hand was the common sign: Ex. xvii. 16. Deut. xxxii. 40. Dan. xii. 7. Rev. x. 5, 6.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIV.—How dreadful is the curse of God! After four hundred years' respite, it breaks forth upon the sinners of Sodom, and the places about. From what distant quarters does God bring the executioners of it! How shortlived is that pleasure or quiet which saints attempt to procure by unnecessary connexions with wicked men! How becoming and godlike to forget the injuries which we have received; and to risk, or even to lay down our lives for the brethren! What honour—what comfort—what blessings—attend such a conduct!——But in this Melchizedek, king of Salem, and priest of the most high God, let me behold Him who is a priest for ever,—Jesus, without father as man, without mother as God;—the Lord from heaven! He is King of Righteousness.—In his obedience and suffering he made reconciliation for iniquity, and brought in an everlasting righteousness; in righteousness he rules his subjects, and causeth them to work righteousness. He is King of Peace. By his blood he purchased our peace with God, with our conscience, and with one another; in his intercession he pleads for it; and by his word and Spirit he effects it. He is our incomparable high priest, who received not his office from any creature, nor leaves it to another. In and by him we are blessed of God with all spiritual and everlasting blessings; and with his bread and wine, presented in the gospel,—his flesh, which is meat indeed, and his blood, which is drink indeed,—he refresheth our souls while we are engaged in and after our warfare with sin, Satan, the world, and death. And to him is due, from every minister and saint, the voluntary tithes of everlasting praise.

* It has been incautiously admitted by some Christian writers, and maliciously asserted by infidels, that Moses makes no mention of immortality. That Moses never uses the word immortality, is admitted; but, the fact is taken for granted and asserted throughout all that he wrote. To Abram it was promised, thou shalt go to thy fathers; but his fathers were buried in Mesopotamia, and Abram was buried at Mamre (Ch. 25. 9, 10.) Moved by the Spirit of God, he asked this sign.—The beasts he presented to God were emblems of his seed: the heifer prefigured them in their patience, labour, and proneness to backsliding, Hos. iv. 16; the goat in their mischievousness and lust; Jer. v. 7, 8. the ram in their strength and fortitude; Num. xxiv. 8, 9; the doves in their simplicity and harmlessness in their purest state; Ps. lxxiv. 19. The division of the four-footed animals (1) represented the torn condition of his seed, by the division of their kingdom, &c. 1 Kings xi. 12, 13; (2) ratified the covenant made with him and his seed, in God's passing between the pieces, in the symbol of the burning lamp. The pieces being laid over against one another, imported that God would in due time join the separated and scattered Hebrews into one body, Ezek. xxxvii. 15—22. The fowls which attempted to light on the pieces, denoted the Egyptians, and other enemies of Israel, which should in vain attempt to devour them, Ezek. xvii. 3, 7, 12. It was also in a good old age; when he was full of years, weary of this world, and ready and longing for heaven, yet free from any of the infirmities of old age, and falling like ripe fruit in the time of gathering: ch. xxv. 8. 1 Chron. xxix. 28. Job v. 26.——Ver. 16. Iniquity is full, when it is arrived at such a number of acts, such a degree of aggravation, and time of continuance, that God, in consistence with his purpose or honour, can no longer forbear to punish it: Jer. li. 13. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XV.—Blessed indeed are they whose God is the Lord! There is no woe, no want to them that fear him! How happy the issue of familiar intimacy with God! Before they call, he answers; and whilst they are yet speaking, he saith, Here I am. Scarcely will he do any thing important without revealing his secrets to them. How he condescends to our weakness, in giving us signs in ordinances, signs in providence, for the confirmation of our faith in his promises! But even his chief favourites must often wait long for the beginning or the full accomplishment of these promises; and through manifold trials it must be obtained. Meanwhile, then, let me wait with patient expectation; and, with the patriarch, look beyond a numerous seed, and an earthly Canaan, to Jesus, and the travail of his soul, and to the better country above; the everlasting pleasures of which shall more than balance all the discouragements I can meet with by the way.

Judg. ii. 1. vi. 11. and xiii. 3. Isa. lxiii. 9. Zech. i. 12. and iii. 5. Mal. iii. 1.——Ver. 8, 9. He puts her in mind of her relation to Sarai, to render her sensible of her fault, and dispose her to a dutiful return and subjection to her: Tit. ii. 9. 1 Pet. ii. 18. Eph. vi. 5.——Ver. 10—12. Here it is foretold that Ishmael and his seed should be wild free men, like wild asses; mischievous to all around them, and extremely numerous. For almost four thousand years the fulfilment hath been amazingly remarkable. Ishmael had twelve sons, who gave rise to as many tribes or nations, called by their names, and who dwelt southward in Arabia, before the face, or in the presence of their near relations, the Ammonites, Moabites, descendants of Keturah, Edomites, and Jews: ch. xvii. 20. xxi. 13, 18. and xxv. 11—18. All along they have been a nuisance and plague to the nations around them; infamous for theft, robbery, revenge, pillage, and murder. It hath therefore been the continued and common interest of mankind to extirpate them from the earth. But though almost every noted conqueror who hath appeared in the world, whether Hebrew, Egyptian, Assyrian, Chaldean, Persian, Grecian, Roman, Tartar, or Turkish, hath pushed his conquests to their borders, or even beyond them into Egypt, or Arabia Felix, not one hath ever been able to subdue these Ishmaelites, or deprive them of their freedom. The mighty Shishak, king of Egypt, was obliged to draw a line along their frontiers, for the protection of his kingdom from their ravaging inroads. The Assyrians under Shalmaneser and Sennacherib, and the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar, greatly harassed them, and almost extirpated some of their tribes; Isa. xxi. 11—17. Num. xxiv. 22. Jer. xxv. 23, 24. and xlix. 28—33. Provoked with their contempt, Alexander the Great made vast preparations for their utter destruction; but death cut short his purpose. Antigonus, one of his valiant captains and successors, provoked with their depredations, more than once, but to his repeated dishonour, attempted to subdue them. Flushed with his eastern victories, Pompey, the famed Roman general, attempted to reduce them; but his army being recalled when they had hopes of gaining their purpose, these wild Arabs pursued them, almost at their heels, and dreadfully harassed the Roman subjects in Syria. Augustus, the renowned emperor, made one or more fruitless attempts to subdue them. About A. D. 110, Trajan, one of the most powerful emperors, and valiant generals that ever filled the Roman throne, with a mighty army, determined if possible to subdue them, and laid siege to their capital. But storms of hail, which are scarcely ever seen in that country, thunder, lightning, whirlwind, swarms of flies, and dreadful apparitions in the air, terrified or repulsed his troops as often as they repeated their attacks. About eighty years after, Severus, another warlike emperor, determined to punish their siding with Niger, his rival, by an utter reduction of them. But, after he had made a breach on the wall of their principal city, an unaccountable difference between him and his beloved and faithful European troops obliged him to raise the siege, and leave the country. In the seventh century of the Christian era, these Ishmaelites, under Mahomet, their famed impostor, and his successors, furiously extended their empire, and their new and false religion, through a great part of Asia and Africa, and even some countries of Europe, Rev. ix. 1—11. Since the fall of their empire, the Turks have made repeated attempts to subdue them; but, instead of succeeding, they have been obliged for near three hundred years past, to pay them a yearly tribute of forty thousand crowns, for procuring a safe passage for their pilgrims to Mecca, the holy city, where Mahomet was born. If, to fulfil his promise, God hath done so much for protecting the temporal liberty of miscreants, what will he not do for the salvation of his people!——Ver. 13. Have I, in this desert, as well as in my master's family, and notwithstanding my misbehaviour, received a gracious visit from God, as my powerful guardian, and kind benefactor? and have I duly considered, and thanked him for, and improved the same? Ps. ix. 13. Luke i. 48, 49.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVI.—The best of saints too often degrade themselves to obtain what they desire before God's time, and with some plausible pretexts endeavour to conceal their guilt. An uneasiness of temper, and too much affection to creatures, often induce us to comply with their sinful proposals. But the best intended transgressions will quickly issue in shame and trouble to the guilty, especially if saints; while our tempters prove our first and principal accusers. How transcendent the mercy of God, in visiting transgressors in the very troubles which they had drawn upon their own heads! Yet remember no happy deliverance is to be expected but in the way of returning to our duty. Let me never therefore hope for comfort in children, or in any thing besides, but in the Lord's way. Let me always leave it to him to give his promise a proper and honourable accomplishment in the season which he thinks fit. And if he grant me undeserved visits, while the yoke of my transgressions is wreathed about my neck, let me with wonder remark his kindness, and take to myself shame and confusion of face.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1. The name Shaddai, rendered Almighty, denotes all-sufficiency, as well as infinite power. And what strong encouragement to the study of perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord is it, that God is all-sufficient me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee.

8 [b] And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land [a] wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God.

9 ¶ And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee, in their generations.

10 This is my covenant, [†] which ye shall keep, between me and you, and thy seed after thee; [l] Every man-child among you shall be circumcised.

11 And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt me and you.

12 And he that is [‡] eight days old [k] shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations, he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed.

13 He that is [l] born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised; and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant.

14 And the uncircumcised man-child, whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant.

16 And [n] I will bless her, and give thee a son also of her: yea, I will bless her, and [a] she shall be a mother of nations; kings of people shall be of her.

17 Then Abraham [o] fell upon his face, and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?

18 And Abraham said unto God, Oh that Ishmael might live before thee!

19 And God said, [p] Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac: and I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him.

20 And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, [q] and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly: twelve princes shall he beget; and I will make him a great nation.[†]

21 But [r] my covenant will I establish with Isaac, which Sarah shall bear unto thee at this set time in the next year.

22 And he [s] left off talking with him, and God went up from Abraham.

23 ¶ And Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and all that were bought with his money, every male among the men of Abraham's house, and [t] circumcised the flesh of their foreskin in the self-same day, as God had said unto him.[‡]

† The idea of the Arabs as a nation is too generally formed from what is related by travellers of the wild Bedouins. They form, however, but one specimen of this most extraordinary people. They were really a great nation, in the sense in which national greatness is understood, at an early period: that is, they were numerous; they were educated in arts and sciences; and, if they did not carry their arms abroad, they were valiant and unconquered in defence of their homes. The Egyptian, the Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman armies were each in their turn, compelled to retire before them. From them also sprung Mahomet, who, to scourge an heretical and apostate church, was permitted to rise to unprecedented greatness, and to fulfil the threatened judgments of Christ, and with a mighty and irresistible hand, to "remove their candlestick out of its place."—Ed.

Isaac and his Hebrew descendants were properly the natural seed with whom this covenant was established, ver. 21. By it God in Christ became, to the Hebrews in general, the head of their nation and church, and assumed them for his peculiar people: he bestowed upon them the land of Canaan as his land, in the enjoyment of which they tasted his goodness, and had access to contemplate the glories of the new-covenant state, and of the heavenly blessedness: Ex. xix. 5, 6. and xx. 12. But, as it respects Christ, and believers in him, it implies God's interesting them, in all his persons and perfections, by every amiable relation, and his giving them all that he hath, and doing all his works, for their happiness and comfort: Ps. lxxxix. 27. Eph. i. 3. Heb. viii. 10. Ps. cxliv. 15. and xvi. 5, 6. This covenant, as it respected the Hebrew nation, together with the possession of Canaan, and the various ceremonial ordinances by which they were marked the peculiar people of God, and in the observance of which they were to enjoy their rest and prosperity in Canaan, is represented as everlasting or for ever: but in these passages no more than a long time is meant: ch. xlviii. 4. Ex. xii. 14. xxi. 6. xxxi. 17. xxxii. 13. and xl. 15. Lev. xvi. 34. and xxv. 23, 30, 46. Num. x. 8. xv. 15. xviii. 19. and xxv. 13. Deut. iv. 40. xv. 17. and xviii. 5. Josh. iv. 7. and xiv. 9. &c. But as this covenant respected Christ, and believers in him, it, and all the spiritual blessings contained in it, are everlasting in the strictest sense: Heb. xiii. 20. and ix. 12, 15. 1 Pet. i. 4. 2 Pet. i. 11. And it is perhaps chiefly because the covenant of peculiarity with Israel, and the ordinances and blessings thereof, prefigured these eternal relations and privileges that they are represented as everlasting.——Ver. 9—13. Circumcision is called God's covenant, because it was a token and confirming seal of it. On God's part, it imported that he would give them the promised Messiah out of the loins of Abraham; who being a true man, should be cut off for the salvation of his people; that, being reconciled in Christ, he gave himself to be their God, accepted them for his people, and promised them pardon of sin and sanctification of their nature and life: Rom. iv. 11. Ex. xix. 5, 6. Deut. x. 15. and xxx. 6. Col. ii. 11. On the part of the persons circumcised, it imported their acceptance of God in Christ as their God, and of redemption through the blood of his Son; and their engagement to have no longer intimate friendship with the world, which lieth in wickedness, but to mortify their lusts, and to apply themselves to the most internal and spiritual piety: Phil. iii. 3. Jer. iv. 4. Rom. ii. 29. Females were considered as represented in the males, with respect to this ordinance. But children were not to be circumcised till the eighth day; to teach us that neither circumcision nor baptism is absolutely necessary to salvation, and because till that time children and other animals were reckoned too weak or impure for dedication to God; Ex. xxii. 30.——Ver. 14. Not infants, who could not circumcise themselves, but such as wilfully neglected this ordinance when they were grown up, were exposed to be cut off from their people. Such as renounced the distinguishing badge of Abraham's seed, renounced their covenant-alliance with God, and fellowship with his people. Nothing could therefore be more reasonable, than that they should be excluded from the privileges of the Hebrew church and nation, and accounted as heathens. And this is perhaps the whole import of cutting off from his people, in most of the CHAPTER XVIII.

(1) The Son of God, attended by two created angels in the likeness of men, visits Abraham: 1—8. (2) The Angel of JEHOVAH promises a son to Sarah: 9—15. (3) He acquaints Abraham with his purpose to destroy Sodom and the cities about: 16—22. (4) While the created angels depart for Sodom, Abraham intercedes with the Son of God for the sparing of these cities; to which the Lord graciously attends.

A. M. 2107. B. C. 1897.

AND the LORD appeared unto him in the plains of Mamre: and he sat in the tent-door in the heat of the day;

2 [a] And he lift up his eyes and looked, and, lo, three men stood by him: and, when he saw them, he [b] ran to meet them from the tent-door, and bowed himself toward the ground,

3 And said, [*] My Lord, if now I have found favour in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant.

4 Let a little water, I pray you, be fetched, and [†] wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree;

5 And I will fetch a morsel of bread, and [‡] comfort ye your hearts; after that ye shall pass on: [c] for therefore [§] are ye come to your servant. And they said, So do as thou hast said.

6 And Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, [‖] Make ready quickly [d] three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth.

7 And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf [e] tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hasted to dress it.

8 And he took butter and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them; and he stood by them under the tree, and [f] they did eat.

9 ¶ And they said unto him, Where is Sarah thy wife? And he said, Behold, in the tent.

10 And he [g] said, I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life; and, lo, Sarah thy wife shall have a son. And Sarah heard it in the tent-door, which was behind him.

11 Now [h] Abraham and Sarah were old and well stricken in age; and it ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of women.

12 Therefore Sarah laughed within herself, saying, [i] After I am waxed old shall I have pleasure, my lord being old also?

13 And the LORD said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old?

14 [k] Is any thing too hard for the LORD? At the time appointed I will return unto thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah shall have a son.

15 Then Sarah [l] denied, saying, I laughed not: for she was afraid. And he said, Nay; but thou didst laugh.

16 And the men rose up from thence, and looked toward Sodom: and Abraham went with them to bring them on the way.

17 ¶ And the LORD said, [m] Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do;

18 Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and [n] all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?

19 For [o] I know him, that he [p] will [†] command his children, and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the LORD, to do [†] Judgment was now about to commence on the descendants of Canaan, (ch. 10. 6—19.) who had been educated by the unscrupulous Ham; the LORD, therefore, contrasts with it the opposite character of Abraham, as one who would "command his children and household to keep the way of the Lord." But the LORD "might bring" on him, in his person and posterity, "that which he had spoken of him." Note, Parental education, consisting in word, temper, patience, example, and prayer, is the all and in all of a family or a country. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVII.—How infinite the extent, how rich the mercy, of God's granting himself, as God Almighty, God All-sufficient, to be my God, and the God of my seed! Let me by faith heartily and hastily catch the word at his mouth, and cry,—'My Lord and my God, and the God of my seed! Thrice blessed heritage of the hosts of nations, secured to us as our portion for ever!' Though neither my house nor my heart be so with God as they ought, yet he hath made with me the everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure: and this is all my salvation, and all my desire. Upon this foundation let me and mine be sealed to the day of redemption, by receiving the circumcision which is of Christ. Through his blood shed for us, and his Spirit applied to us, must our natural corruptions be mortified, our hearts purified, and our souls saved. Without this we can in no wise enter the kingdom of God. Nor let me ever forget to entreat that the Ishmaels of my carnal relations may be made alive to God through Jesus Christ our Lord; be partakers of his covenant-blessings now, and live before him for ever hereafter.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVIII.—Whilst I highly esteem the kind simplicity and humble modesty of these ancient times, let me chiefly admire the kindness of my Redeemer, in so frequently visiting our world in human shape, before the fulness of time for his being made of a woman! But alas, that ever his messages of peace should be laughed to scorn!—laughed to scorn by a saint! justice and judgment; that the LORD may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him.

20 And the LORD said, Because [q] the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous, 21 I will [r] * go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, I will know.

22 And the [†] men turned their faces from thence, and went toward Sodom: but Abraham [s] stood yet before the LORD.

23 ¶ And Abraham drew near, and said, [t] Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked?

24 Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein?

25 [t] That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee: Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?

26 And the LORD said, [u] If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then I will spare all the place for their sakes.

27 And Abraham answered and said, [x] Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD, which am but dust and ashes:

28 Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous: wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? And he said, [u] If I find there forty and five, I will not destroy it.

29 And he spake unto him yet again, and said, Peradventure there shall be forty found there. And he said, [y] I will not do it for forty's sake.

30 And he said unto him, [y] Oh let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak: Peradventure there shall thirty be found there. And he said, [y] I will not do it if I find thirty there.

31 And he said, [z] Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD: Peradventure there shall be twenty found there. And he said, I will not destroy it for twenty's sake.

32 And he said, [y] Oh let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: [a] Peradventure ten shall be found there. And he said, I will not destroy it for ten's sake.

33 ‡ And the LORD went his way, as soon as he had left communing with Abraham: and Abraham returned unto his place. §

AND there came [a] two angels to Sodom at even; and Lot [b] sat in the gate of Sodom: and Lot, seeing them, rose up to meet them; and he [c] bowed himself with his face toward the ground;

2 And he said, Behold now, my lords, turn in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and [d] wash your feet, and ye shall rise up early, and go on your ways. And they said, [e] Nay; but we will abide in the street all night. *

3 And he [f] pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; [g] and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat.

4 ¶ But [h] before they lay down, the men [i] of the city, even the men of Sodom, compassed the house round, both old and young, all the people from every quarter.

5 And [k] they called unto Lot, and said unto him, Where are the men which came in to thee this night? bring them out unto us, that we may know them.

6 And Lot went out at the door unto them, and shut the door after him,

10 But the men put forth their hand, and pulled Lot into the house to them, and shut to the door.

11 And they smote the men that were at the door of the house with § blindness, both small and great: so that they [p] wearied themselves to find the door.

x Ps. 119. 59, 60. Zech. 2. 3. John 6. 44.

‡ Lot presents a remarkable instance of the conflict between faith and sight. (2 Cor. 5. 7.) He is directed to depart immediately, he does not refuse, yet he lingers still. He is brought forcibly out, and warned to escape to the mountains; yet he entreats a refuge in a city of the plains. But the weakness of man is overruled to magnify the mercy of the LORD, who hearkens to his humble intercession, and spares the city for his sake. The name of this city, formerly Bela, (Gen. 14. 2.) was changed to Zoar, which signifies little, in commemoration of the plea for mercy which Lot presented.—Note. Every work is easy to omnipotence; every grant is little to the richness of mercy. Yet would they reflect for a moment, they would remember how it is said, The rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven. (Is. 55. 10.) Yet that rain and that snow were previously exhaled from the waters In like manner, may not the brimstone have first been ejected from the bowels of the earth, where its terrible stores abound, and then again be literally rained from heaven?—ED.

* Burning sulphur produces a vapour which, if it once fill the lungs, is instantly destructive to life. Lot's wife, looking back, while the vapour followed, was accordingly suffocated. This vapour, and the bituminous fire, (See Deut. 29. 23.) would literally convert the body into a salt. And the body being deprived of motion, and becoming rigid in a standing posture, and (it may be, surrounded and sustained by various volcanic products), would literally become a pillar, or statue, of salt.—ED.

† The character of Lot is marked by timidity, (compare ver. 19. & 30.) yet was he a righteous man. (2 Pet. 2. 7.)—Note, Grace, in conversion, seldom takes away the original character of the natural man; but merely overrules its deficiencies to humble him and warn others; and refines, and elevates its excellencies; and thus, by the Spirit, mortifies the old, while it quickens and establishes the new man.—ED.

‡ We have said, on the evidence of Peter, that Lot was a righteous man; but how is the character consistent with this horrible narrative? Simply on the same ground that Peter's blasphemous denial of our Lord, (Mat. 26. 70, 74.) is consistent with his afterwards weeping bitterly, when Jesus turned and looked on him. The scriptures record the sins of men, because they must tell truth; and they denounce their punishment or display their evil consequences, or record the repentance of the sinner, to teach us to flee from the wrath to come.—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIX.—What an advantage it is for the world, that in very wicked places some persons truly pious may be found! How encouraging to entertain strangers, when "some have thereby entertained angels unawares!" To what shocking impudence, in the vilest abominations, men's corruptions can carry them, and that notwithstanding sharp corrections, or remarkable deliverances! ch. xiv. How readily those who reprove sin, by their godly conversation, are an eye-sore to the wicked! How quickly the protectors of God's messengers are rewarded with remarkable protection, or with rescue from danger! How prone are hardened sinners to sport with the most serious warnings of ruin, near and terrible!—and even saints, if strongly attached to worldly things, to defer or shift the means which have been prescribed by God for their safety! But let us remember, that it is infinitely hazardous to be under the reigning power, or even the prevalence, of a carnal and unbelieving heart; for, though God wonderfully restricts the range of his judgments for the sake of his people, and in answer to their prayers, yet he is,

AND Abraham journeyed from [a] thence toward the south country, and dwelled between [b] Kadesh and Shur, and sojourned in [c] Gerar.

2 And Abraham [d] said of Sarah his wife, She is my sister: [*] and Abimelech king of Gerar sent and took Sarah.

3 But [*] God came to Abimelech in a dream by night, and said to him, Behold, thou art but a dead man, for the woman which thou hast taken; for she is a man's wife.

4 But Abimelech had not come near her: and he said, LORD, wilt thou [f] slay also a righteous nation?

5 Said he not unto me, She is my sister? and she, even she herself said, He is my brother: in the [†] integrity of my heart, and innocency of my hands, have I done this.

6 And God said unto him in a dream, Yea, I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart; for I also [g] withheld thee from sinning against me: therefore suffered I thee not to touch her.

7 Now therefore restore the man his wife; for he is a [h] prophet, and he shall [i] pray for thee, and thou shalt live: and if thou restore her not, [k] know thou that thou shalt surely die, thou, and all that are thine.

8 Therefore Abimelech rose early in the morning, and called all his servants, and told all these things in their ears: and the men were sore afraid.

9 ¶ Then Abimelech called Abraham, and said unto him, [l] What hast thou done unto us? And what have I offended thee, that thou hast brought on me, and on my kingdom, [m] a great sin? thou hast done deeds unto me that ought not to be done.

5 And Abraham was an hundred years old when his son Isaac was born unto him.

6 ¶ And Sarah said, [f] God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me.

7 And she said, Who would have said unto Abraham, that Sarah should have given children suck? for I have born him a son in his old age.

8 And the child grew, and was weaned: [†] and Abraham made a [g] great feast the same day that Isaac was weaned.

9 ¶ And Sarah saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian, which she had born unto Abraham, [h] mocking.

10 Wherefore she said unto Abraham, [i] Cast out this bond-woman and her son: for the son of this bond-woman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac.

11 And the thing was very [k] grievous in Abraham's sight because of his son.

12 And God said unto Abraham, Let it not be grievous in thy sight because of the lad, and because of thy bond-woman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice: [l] for in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

13 And also of the son of the bond-woman [m] will I make a nation, because he is thy seed.

14 And Abraham [n] rose up early in the morning, and took bread, and a bottle [‡] of water, and gave it unto Hagar, (putting it on her shoulder,) and the child, and sent her away: and she departed, and [o] wandered in the wilderness of Beer-sheba.

15 ¶ And the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs.

16 And she went, and sat her down over against him a good way off, as it were a bowshot: for she said, [p] Let me not see the death of the child. And she sat over against him, and lift up her voice, and wept.

17 And [q] God heard the voice of the lad: and the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, What aileth thee, Hagar? [r] fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. [§]

18 Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand; for [s] I will make him a great nation.

19 And God [t] opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water; and she went and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink.

20 And [u] God was with the lad; and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderness, and became an archer.

21 And he dwelt in the wilderness of Paran: [x] and his mother took him a wife out of the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ And it came to pass at that time, that Abimelech, and Phichol the chief captain of his host, spake unto Abraham, saying, [y] God is with thee in all that thou doest:

23 Now therefore [z] swear unto me here by God, that thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son: but according to the kindness that I have done unto thee, thou shalt do unto me, and to the land wherein thou hast sojourned.

24 And Abraham said, [a] I will swear.

25 And Abraham reproved Abimelech [b] because of a well of water, which Abimelech's servants had violently taken away.

26 And Abimelech said, [c] I wot not who hath done this thing; neither didst thou tell me, neither yet heard I of it, but to-day.

27 And Abraham [d] took sheep and oxen, and gave them unto Abimelech; and both of them made a covenant.

28 And Abraham set seven ewe-lambs of the flock by themselves.

29 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What mean these seven ewe-lambs which thou hast set by themselves?

30 And he said, For these seven ewe-lambs shalt thou take of my hand, that they [*] may be a witness unto me that I have digged this well.

31 Wherefore he called that place [*] Beer-sheba; because there they sware both of them.

32 Thus they made [f] a covenant at Beer-sheba: then Abimelech rose up, and Phichol the chief captain of his host, and they returned into the land of the Philistines.

33 ¶ [†] And Abraham planted a [‡] grove in Beer-sheba, and [g] called there on the name of the LORD, [h] the everlasting God.

34 And Abraham [i] sojourned in the Philistines' land many days.

[§] In ver. 9. we find Ishmael mocking, which Paul (Gal. 4. 29.) interprets as a persecution of Isaac. Mocking, being to a delicate and sensitive mind, as was Sarah's, one of the most grievous forms of persecution against herself and her child. But now, happily, in this verse, we find Ishmael praying, and God hearing and promising.—Note. inflicts judgments upon, and gives extraordinary warnings even to Heathens. How pitiful are the best excuses which men, particularly saints, can make for their sinning! And it must be considered as an infinite mercy that God, though he sometimes puts his people to shame for their folly, takes more care of their honour, and especially of the honour of his promises, than they do. And the prayers of penitent saints are profitable to the greatest men upon earth.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXI.—What a pleasure God sometimes takes to delay the fulfilment of promises, till it becomes, humanly speaking, improbable, if not impossible, for the trial of our faith and patience; but he never defers it a moment beyond the due time; and the joys which attend the seasonable fulfilment thereof are great and certain: and yet even then our attempts to anticipate it often mingle our joys with wormwood and gall! How proper, in all our straits, to consult the Lord; and to request and hope for his watchful care over our relations, particularly such as are exposed to dangers! Let my care be to honour God in all my conduct, and he will take care to honour me before the world, as is good in his sight! And while Sarah and her family rejoice over her son, let me, let all the redeemed, rejoice that "to us a child is born, to us a Son is given, whose name is Wonderful;" and that God in him hath made us, like Isaac, children of the pro-

CHAPTER XXII.

We have here, (1) God's trial of Abraham's faith and obedience, by his command to sacrifice his son: 1, 2. (2) Abraham's faith, and ready obedience: 3—10. (3) The Lord prevents the intended slaughter of Isaac, providing a ram in his stead, and confirming his covenant with Abraham and his seed. (4) Abraham is informed of the remarkable increase of his brother Nahor's family: 19—24.

AND it came to pass after these things, that [a] God did [b] tempt Abraham, and said unto him, Abraham. And he said, [†] Behold, here I am.

2 And he said, Take now [b] thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of [c] Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt-offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of.

3 ¶ And Abraham [d] rose up early [‡] in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him, and Isaac his son, and clave the wood for the burnt-offering, and rose up, and [e] went unto the place of which God had told him.

4 Then on the [f] third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off.

5 And Abraham said unto his young men, [g] Abide ye here with the ass; and I and the lad will go yonder and worship, and [§] come again to you.

6 And Abraham took the wood of the burnt-offering, and [h] laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took the fire in his hand, and a knife: and they went both of them together.

7 And Isaac spake unto Abraham his father, and said, My father. And he said, Here am I, my son. And he said, Behold the fire and the wood; but where is the [‖] lamb for a burnt-offering?

8 And Abraham said, My son, [i] God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt-offering: so they went both of them together.

9 And they came to the [k] place which God had told him of; and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order, and bound Isaac his son, and [l] laid him on the altar upon the wood.

10 And Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son.

mise! Let us Gentiles rejoice that, while the Hebrews are, like Ishmael, cast out to be wandering, wild, and hated, we are called to the fellowship of the sons of God! Here, likewise, let us observe how sharply God corrects those who have been insolent despisers of others, and how near the most seasonable mercies may be, whilst we perceive them not!

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1. God tempts no man by enticing him to sin; Jam. i. 13; nor doth the word Nissah, here used, ever signify any such thing, but to try exquisitely: nor doth God try men in order to promote or confirm his own knowledge of them, but to manifest what they are to themselves and to the world, that his rewarding or punishing them may appear the more wise and equal, or his blessing them the more gracious; Deut. iii. 2. and xiii. 3. Judg. ii. 22. 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. Ps. cxxxix. 23, 24. 1 Cor. x. 13. Ex. xv. 25. and xvi. 4. Jam. i. 12. 1 Sam. iii. 4, 6. By this command, God tried the faith of Abraham with respect to his believing that in Isaac his seed should be called; and that, through the death of the Messiah, he, and other believers, should obtain everlasting salvation; and tried his obedience in the most tender point that could be conceived, his deliberate slaying of his darling; his only son by his wife, his only son now left in his own house; ch. xxi. 1, 12, 14.——Ver. 5. He firmly believed that God would restore his son to life from the ashes into which he expected he would be burnt, and cause him to come back with him, Heb. xi. 19.——Ver. 6. As Isaac bore the wood, so Christ bore our sins and his cross, the cause and means of his suffering; Is. liii. 6. 1 Pet. ii. 24. John xix. 17. and so we ought to bear our cross; Luke xiv. 27.——Ver. 9. Isaac, though able to resist, yielded up himself, as typical of Christ's voluntary oblation of himself for us; Phil. ii. 8. Eph. v. 2. Acts viii. 32.——Ver. 12. In the extremities of distress, God interposeth as an helper and deliverer; Deut. xxxii. 36. Mic. iv. 10. Mat. xv. 32. "When God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, &c.—an oath for confirmation is an end of all strife; wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath, that, by two immutable things, his word and oath, in which it is impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation." The promises here solemnly confirmed by oath almost wholly related to his Hebrew and his spiritual seed; ch. xxi. 12. To possess the gates of their enemies, is to obtain their country, or have dominion over them, and rule among them; ch. xxiv. 60. Deut. xxi. 19. xxii. 24. and xxv. 7. The Jews had temporal dominion over their enemies in the time of Joshua, David, &c. Josh. vi—xix. 2 Sam. viii. x. And Christ and his people have a spiritual dominion over theirs; Ps. ii. 8, 9. and xxii. 27—30. Dan. iv. 34, 35. Col. ii. 15. 1 Cor. xv. 25, 57. Rom. viii. 37.—— Ver. 24. Concubines were women of a middle condition, between wives and harlots; a kind of half-wives, sharing in bed and board, but not in the government of the family; ch. xxv. 1, 6. xxx. 4. and xxxv. 22. Judg. xix. 1. 1 Kin. xi. 3. 1 Chron. i. 32. They served under the lawful wives, if alive; ch. xvi. 6, 7. and xxxii. 22; and their children had no title to the inheritance; ch. xxv. 5, 6.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXII.—How necessary to count the cost when we enter upon a religious life! for who knows how many and how great our trials in it may be, since trials are increased in proportion to men's faith and spiritual comfort. Those trials are most afflicting to the believer, which not only fly in the face of natural affection, or of outward honour and pleasure, but even threaten to frustrate the promises of God; yet thrice happy are they, who, under the sorest trials, heartily acquiesce in the will of God, and firmly cleave to his promise, who, though he slay them, yet will still trust in him! For often, when the nights of trial are at 7 And Abraham stood up, and [f] bowed himself to the people of the land, even to the children of Heth.

8 And he communed with them, saying, If it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me, and entreat for me to Ephron the son of Zohar,

9 That he may give me the cave of [†] Machpelah, which he hath, which is in the end of his field; for [*] as much money as it is worth he shall give it me, for a possession of a burying-place among you.

10 And Ephron [†] dwelt among the children of Heth. And Ephron the Hittite answered Abraham in the audience of the children of Heth, even of all that went in at the [‡] gate of [g] his city, saying, 11 Nay, my lord, hear me: The field [h] give [§] I thee, and the cave that is therein, I give it thee; [i] in the presence of the sons of my people give I it thee: bury thy dead.

12 And Abraham [k] bowed down himself before the people of the land.

13 And he spake unto Ephron, in the audience of the people of the land, saying, But if thou wilt give it, I pray thee, hear me: [i] I will give thee money for the field; take it of me, and I will bury my dead there.

14 And Ephron answered Abraham, saying unto him,

15 My lord, hearken unto me: The land is worth [l] four hundred shekels of silver; what is that betwixt me and thee? bury therefore thy dead.

16 And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron; and Abraham [*] weighed to Ephron the silver, which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, [m] current money with the merchant.

17 And [n] the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field, and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were [o] made sure the very darkest, the Lord steps in, compasseth them about with songs of deliverance, and blesseth with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus. But, while I admire the faith and obedience of Abraham, and the cheerful submission of Isaac,—while I place these bright examples before me—my faith directs me to more glorious objects: let me with astonishment think of JEHOVAH bringing his only begotten Son into this world, stretching and binding him on the altar, and making his soul an offering for our sins! Let me behold Jesus caught, seasonably caught, in the thickets of his Father's commandment, of his own engagement, and of our transgressions imputed to him, and offered in our stead! Let me listen to the New Testament in his blood, in which JEHOVAH swears that men shall be blessed in him, and all nations shall call him blessed!

18 Unto Abraham for a possession, in the presence of the children of Heth, before [p] all that went in at the gate of his city.

19 ¶ And after this, Abraham [q] buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah, before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 3—20. Abraham wanted to purchase a burying-place in Canaan, and to have the claims thereto ascertained, that he, and his nearest relations, might have their dust laid there apart from the Heathen natives; and might have it as a pledge and earnest to confirm their faith in God's promise of their possession of the whole country in his due time: ch. xxv. 9. xlvii. 29, 30. xlix. 31. and l. 13, 24, 25.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIII.—Ponder, my soul, how the clouds of trouble return after the rain; how death parts the nearest and most affectionate relatives! The marriage state is but the forerunner of death and sorrow; it is but a porch of entrance into eternity! Tears and grief are the tribute which we owe to our departed friends. But if they and we be Christ's, let us not "mourn as those that have no hope." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord"—they are not lost, but gone before us.—How death changes the comely countenance, and makes the dearest body loathsome!—Let the death of others always remind me of my own; and let me live as a stranger and sojourner in this world.—Let me so behave as to make my friendship valued and sought for by all around me. Never let Hittites, or other Heathens, outstrip me in humanity or kindness; but let good manners, civility, modesty, and the strictest regard to equity, adorn my profession, and mingle themselves with all my behaviour. Let me carefully avoid being a burden to my neighbours, or being too much indebted for favours to carnal men; and though I be heir of the world through the righteousness of faith, let me be content with little of it now, and rejoice that the Canaan above, where neither death, nor famine, nor war ever enter, is my inheritance! If my flesh rest in hope, it is enough if I am allowed a grave on earth.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Here (1) Abraham appoints his principal servant to take a wife to Isaac from his friends in Mesopotamia: 1—9. (2) His servant accomplishes his journey thither; and begs that the Lord would point out the proper object by a token: 10—14. (3) The Lord directs him into acquaintance with Rebekah, the daughter of Isaac's cousin-german: 15—28. (4) He explains and urges his suit: 29—49. (5) The treaty of marriage is finished: 50—60. (6) Isaac and Rebekah happily meet: 61—67.

A. M. 2147. B. C. 1857.

AND Abraham was [a] old, and [*] well stricken in age: and the LORD had [b] blessed Abraham in all things.

2 And Abraham said unto his [c] eldest servant of his house, that ruled over all that he had, Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh;

3 And I will make thee [d] swear by the LORD, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, [e] that thou [†] shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, among whom I dwell:

4 But thou shalt go unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac.

5 And the servant said unto him, [f] Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest?

6 And Abraham said unto him, Beware thou that thou bring not my son thither again.

7 The LORD God of heaven, which [g] took me from my father's house, and from the land of my kindred, and which spake unto me, and that sware unto me, saying, Unto thy seed will I give this land; he [h] shall send his angel before thee, and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence.

8 And if the woman will not be willing to follow thee, then thou shalt be [i] clear from this my oath: only bring not my son thither again. [k]

9 And the servant put his hand under the thigh of Abraham his master, and sware to him concerning that matter.

10 ¶ And the servant took [‡] ten camels, of the camels of his master, and departed; (for all the goods of his master were in his hand;) and he arose, and went to Mesopotamia, unto [l] the city of Nahor.

11 And he made his camels to [m] kneel down without the city by a well of water, at the time of the evening, even the time that women go out to draw water.

12 ¶ And he said, O LORD [n] God of my master Abraham, I pray thee, [o] send me good speed this day, and show kindness unto my master Abraham.

† Abraham's care about the marriage of Isaac, suggests an important parental duty. The rich Canaanites that dwelt around him, and who might have strengthened his son by their connexion and influence, he utterly rejects; and directs his attention to a distant land, and a family comparatively poor. Education and principle, not riches and power, were the grounds upon which he sought to secure his son's domestic happiness and prosperity. The language of Laban, ver. 31, and of both Laban and Bethuel, ver. 50, 51, in which they ascribe the ruling of all events to the LORD; but above all their parting blessing in the name of the LORD, ver. 60, exhibit the quality of that religious system, under which Rebekah was nurtured, and the grounds of the choice that Abraham made. —Ed.

‖ There is often a remarkable similarity between the characters of master and servant; the servant insensibly, or by direct imitation, imbibing a portion of the master's spirit, sentiments, and manner. The conduct of Abraham's servant well illustrates and confirms this observation. His diligent application to business, verses 33, 54, 56, well answers to the conduct of Abraham, ch. 22. 5. while his piety in the 12, 27, 42, 48, & 52. verses of this chapter, beautifully corresponds to the invariable practice of Abraham in building an altar, and calling on the name of the LORD, wherever Providence orderedhislot.—Note, How common is it to hear complaints of unfaithful servants. Let those who complain remember this faithful servant of Abraham—the pious example and instruction by which, under grace, his character was formed.—Ed.

13 Behold, [p] I stand here by the well of water; and the daughters of the men of the city [q] come out to draw water:

14 And [r] let it come to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall say, Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink; and she shall say, Drink; and I will give thy camels drink also: let the same be she that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac; and thereby shall I know that thou hast showed kindness unto my master.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, [s] before he had done speaking, that, behold, Rebekah came out, who was born to Bethuel, son of Milcah, the wife of Nahor, Abraham's brother, with her [t] pitcher upon her shoulder.

16 And the damsel was [*] very fair to look upon, a virgin, neither had any man [u] known her: and she went down to the well, and filled her pitcher, and came up.

17 And the servant ran to meet her, and said, Let me, I pray thee, drink [†] a little water of thy pitcher.

18 And she said, Drink, my lord: and she hasted, and let down her pitcher upon her hand, and gave him drink.

19 And when she had done giving him drink, she said, I will draw water for thy camels also, until they have done drinking.

20 And she hasted, and emptied her pitcher into the trough, and ran again unto the well to draw water, and drew for all his camels.

21 And the man, [x] wondering at her, held his peace, to wit whether the LORD had made his journey prosperous or not.

22 ¶ And it came to pass, as the camels had done drinking, that the man took a golden [‡] ear-ring of half a shekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands of [§] ten shekels weight of gold, 23 And said, Whose daughter art thou? tell me, I pray thee. Is there room in thy father's house for us to lodge in?

24 And she said unto him, I am the [y] daughter of Bethuel the son of Milcah, which she bare unto Nahor.

25 She said moreover unto him, We have both straw and provender enough, and room to lodge in.

26 And the man [z] bowed down his head, and worshipped the LORD.

27 And he said, [a] Blessed be the LORD God of my [l] master Abraham, who hath not left

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 2. This form of swearing might import the subjection of Eliezer the servant, and that the Messiah should proceed from his master's loins, ch. xlvii. 29. ——Ver. 3, 4. It was extremely proper that the servant should know the full meaning of the oath before he took it; Jer. iv. 2. destitute my master of his mercy and his truth: I being in the way, the LORD led me to the house of my master's [b] brethren.

28 And the damsel ran, and told them of her mother's [c] house these things.

29 ¶ And Rebekah had a brother, and his name was Laban: and Laban ran out unto the man unto the well.

30 And it came to pass, when he saw the ear-ring, and bracelets upon his sister's hands, and when he heard the words of Rebekah his sister, saying, Thus spake the man unto me, that he came unto the man; and, behold, he stood by the camels at the well.

31 And he said, Come in, thou [d] blessed of the LORD; wherefore standest thou without? for I have prepared the house, and room for the camels.

32 And the man came into the house: and [*] he ungirded his camels, and gave straw and provender for the camels, and water [e] to wash his feet, and the men's feet that were with him.

33 And there was set meat before him to eat: but he said, [f] I will not eat until I have told mine errand. And he said, Speak on.

34 ¶ And he said, I am Abraham's servant.[†]

35 And the LORD hath [g] blessed my master greatly, and he is become great: and he hath given him flocks, and herds, and silver, and gold, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and camels, and asses.

36 And Sarah, my master's wife, [h] bare a son to my master when she was old: and unto him [i] hath he given all that he hath.

37 And my master made me swear, saying, [k] Thou shalt not take a wife to my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, in whose land I dwell:

38 But thou shalt go unto my father's house, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son.

39 And I said unto my master, Peradventure the woman will not follow me.

40 And he said unto me, The LORD, [l] before whom I walk, will [m] send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way; and thou shalt take a wife for my son of my kindred, and of my father's house:

41 Then shalt thou be [‡] clear from this my oath, when thou comest to my kindred; and if they give not thee one, thou shalt be clear from my oath.

42 And I came this day unto the well, and said, O LORD God of my master Abraham, if now thou do [n] prosper my way which I go;

43 [o] Behold, I stand by the well of water: and it shall come to pass, that when the virgin cometh forth to draw water, and I say to her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water of thy pitcher to drink;

44 And she say to me, [p] Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy camels: let the same be the woman whom the LORD hath [*] appointed out for my master's son.

45 And before I had done speaking [q] in mine heart, behold, Rebekah came forth with her pitcher on her shoulder; and she went down unto the well, and drew water: and I said unto her, Let me drink, I pray thee.

46 And she made haste, and let down her pitcher from her shoulder, and said, Drink; and I will give thy camels drink also: so I drank, and she made the camels drink also.

47 And I asked her, and said, Whose daughter art thou? And she said, The daughter of Bethuel, Nahor's son, whom Milcah bare unto him: and I put the [†] ear-ring upon her face, and the bracelets upon her hands.[r]

48 And [s] I bowed down my head, and worshipped the LORD, and blessed the LORD God of my master Abraham, which had [t] led me in the right way, to take my master's brother's daughter unto his son.

49 And now, if ye will deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me: and if not, tell me; that I may turn to the [u] right hand, or to the left.

50 ¶ Then [‡] Laban and Bethuel answered and said, The thing proceedeth from the LORD: we cannot speak unto thee [x] bad or good.

51 Behold, Rebekah is before thee, take her, and go, and let her be thy master's son's wife, as the LORD hath [y] spoken.

52 And it came to pass, that, when Abraham's servant heard their words, [z] he worshipped the LORD, bowing himself to the earth.

53 And the servant brought forth [§] jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, and gave them to Rebekah: he gave also to her brother and to her mother [a] precious things.

54 And they did eat and drink, he and the men that were with him, and tarried all night: and they rose up in the morning; and he said, [b] Send me away unto my master.

55 And her brother and her mother said, Let the damsel abide with us [c] a few days, at the least ten; after that she shall go.

success in our designs!—In weighty cases, it may be proper to interpose an oath, but that carefully explained, solemnly administered, and judiciously taken.—The marriages of true believers, on which the temporal and eternal happiness of multitudes may depend, should be formed with remarkable and religious attention; for an unconverted partner in life often proves a dreadful and a dangerous snare. Happy the families which have praying and pious members! In difficult cases, it is best to begin with prayer, if we wish to succeed. And it manifests no small prudence to look for, and follow the direction of God's providence; for the Lord kindly answers the prayers of faith when put up in behalf of his dear favourites. In order to obtain a truly happy marriage, how much more efficacious are a single regard to the glory of God, and a dependence on his direction, than all the wanton dalliances, or false and fulsome flattery, in the world! In religious courtship, plain dealing is the best wooing: and they who are most humble, kind, and industrious in the house of their father, are likely to prove most amiable and useful in the house of their husband. In children's marriages, parents ought to advise, but not to constrain. It is useful to commemorate past mercies, to encourage us in a present dependence on God's care and kindness for future ones: and the more mercies we receive, the more we ought to praise and worship God. New relations need new prayers; for new joys on earth are connected with new griefs. But doubly sweet are the blessings of Providence, when we receive them with a devout temper

60 And they [e] blessed Rebekah, and said unto her, Thou art our sister; [f] be thou the mother of thousands of millions, and let thy seed [‡] possess the gate of those which hate them.

61 And Rebekah arose, and her damsels, and they rode upon the camels, and followed the man: and the servant took Rebekah, and went his way.

62 ¶ And Isaac came from the way of the [g] well Lahai-roi: for he dwelt in the south country.

63 And Isaac went out [h] to meditate in the field at the eventide; and he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and, behold, the camels were coming.

64 And Rebekah lifted up her eyes; and when she saw Isaac, [i] she lighted off the camel.

65 For she had said unto the servant, What man is this that walketh in the field to meet us? And the servant had said, It is my master: therefore [k] she took a veil, and covered herself.

66 And the servant told Isaac all things that he had done.

CHAPTER XXV.

We have here an account of (1) Abraham's descendants by Keturah, his second wife; his disposal of his wealth; his age, death, and burial: 1—10. (2) Ishmael's twelve sons, and their residence; and his death and burial: 12—18. (3) Isaac's prosperity; the conception of his sons in answer to prayer; their early struggling, different tempers, and exchange of birthright: 11, 19—34.

THEN [a] again Abraham took a wife, and her name was Keturah.

2 And she bare him [b] Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and [c] Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah.

3 And Jokshan begat Sheba and Dedan. And the sons of Dedan were [d] Asshurim, and Letushim, and Leummim.

4 ¶ And the sons of Midian; [e] Ephah, and Epher, and Hanoch, and Abidah, and Eldaah. All these were the children of Keturah.

5 ¶ And Abraham [f] gave all that he had [*] unto Isaac.

6 But unto the sons of the [g] concubines, which Abraham had, Abraham gave [†] gifts, and sent them away from Isaac his son (while he yet lived) eastward unto the east country.

7 ¶ And these are the days of the years [‡] of Abraham's life which he lived, an hundred threescore and fifteen years.

8 Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and died [h] in a good old age, an old man, and full of years; and was gathered to his people.

9 And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him [i] in the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron the son of Zohar the Hittite, which is before Mamre;

10 The field which Abraham purchased of the sons of Heth: there was Abraham buried, and Sarah his wife.

11 ¶ And it came to pass after the death of Abraham, that God [k] blessed his son Isaac: and Isaac dwelt by [l] the well Lahai-roi.

12 ¶ Now these are [m] the generations of Ishmael, Abraham's son, whom Hagar the Egyptian, Sarah's handmaid, bare unto Abraham.

13 And these are the names of the sons of Ishmael, by their names, according to their generations: The first-born of Ishmael, [n] Nabajoth; and Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibsam,

[‖] The junction of Ishmael with Isaac in the burial of Abraham, shews that they must have lived not very far from each other, and in a considerable degree of intimacy. Hence we conclude, with every reasonable probability, that Abraham and Isaac must have exercised considerable influence over the religious opinions and character of Ishmael. This idea is farther strengthened by the fact, that when Esau perceived that Isaac was displeased with his Hittite wives, (chap. 28. 8.) he went to Ishmael and married one of his daughters, with the expectation of her being more acceptable; what, from his knowledge of her father he could not reasonably have expected, upon any ground but the religious character of Ishmael's family. Accordingly, we interpret the phrase—was gathered to his people—to intimate Ishmael's dying in faith and entering into rest.—ED.

of spirit. How useful for the soul is devout retirement! None will ever feel the want of company, who have learned, through the medium of sensible objects, to converse with God himself. Alas, that so few deep-sworn servants of JEHOVAH should so little resemble Abraham's, in their endeavours to woo a bride for his dear Son! How little fervent prayer, and accurate observation of his word and providence, they mingle with their work! How often their own temporal provisions lie nearer their heart than that sinners should be made willing in the day of his power! May God make them equally faithful, and equally successful!

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1—4, 6. The natural vigour wherewith God had endowed Abraham, for the procreation of Isaac, continued with him for the further enlargement of his family. These children of Keturah, and their posterity, peopled a considerable part of Arabia to the south and the east of the promised land, under the name of Midianites, Shuhites Sabeans, and Ashurites.——Ver. 5. They dwelt all along the south of the Moabites, eastern Midianites, Edomites, and Israelites, almost from the river Euphrates on the east to the border of Egypt on the west.——Ver. 21—23. For almost twenty years Isaac continued praying for children. Their struggling in their mother's womb presaged that they and their posterity would live at variance one with another, and exceedingly differ in their religion, laws, manners, &c. The Edomites, descended from Esau, were at first the strongest people, ch. xxxvi; but the Israelites, sprung from Jacob, under David, 2 Sam. viii. 14; under Amaziah, 2 Chr. xxv. 11, 12; and under Hyrcanus, subdued them. Nay, Jacob's obtaining the birthright and blessing, ver. 29—34. and xxvii. 29, 37, 40, rendered him and his posterity superior to Esau and his Edomite seed.——Ver. 25. 19 ¶ And these are the generations of Isaac, Abraham's son: Abraham begat Isaac.

20 And Isaac was forty years old when he took Rebekah to wife, the daughter of Bethuel the Syrian of Padan-aram, the sister to Laban the Syrian.

21 ¶ And Isaac [x] entreated the LORD for his wife, because she was barren: and the LORD was entreated of him, and Rebekah his wife conceived.

22 ‡ And the children struggled together within her: and she said, § If it be so, why am I thus? And she went to inquire of the LORD.

23 And the LORD said unto her, Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and [y] the elder shall serve the younger.

24 ¶ And when her days ‖ to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, there were twins in her womb.

25 And the first came out red, all over like an hairy garment; and they called his name *Esau.

26 And after that came his brother out, and *his hand took hold on Esau's heel; and his name was called †Jacob: and Isaac was threescore years old when she bare them.‡

27 ¶ And the boys grew: and Esau was a cunning hunter, a man of the field; and Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in tents.

28 And Isaac loved Esau, because [a] he did eat of his venison; but Rebekah loved Jacob.

29 ¶ And Jacob §sod pottage: and Esau came from the field, and he was faint.

30 And Esau said to Jacob, Feed me, I pray thee, ‖ with that same red pottage; for I am faint: therefore was his name called Edom.

31 And Jacob said, Sell me this day thy birthright.

32 And Esau said, Behold, I am *at the point to die; and what profit shall this birthright do to me?†

33 And Jacob said, [b] Swear to me this day; and he sware unto him: and [c] he sold his birthright unto Jacob.

34 Then Jacob gave Esau bread and pottage of lentiles;* and he did eat and drink, and rose up, and went his way. Thus Esau despised his birthright.†

§ It is truly wonderful to observe, upon what apparently unimportant and trifling circumstances, the greatest events depend. Jacob prepares a mess of pottage, Esau returns hungry, their characters are exhibited, and their own future lives, and the conditions of their descendants are decided. Jacob commercially buys, and Esau profanely sells, the patriarchal birthright. Esau, as a man of the field, is justly condemned because he does not more manfully endure a little hunger; while his contempt of the civil and religious privileges of his birth indicates a man who, lightly valuing his own rights, is not likely to respect the rights of others. God is a God of truth, (Ps. 31. 5), and requires it of his people, at all times, in all places, and upon all subjects. Isaac is, therefore, to be condemned, as Abram was, under similar circumstances. His prevarication is not to be defined as a small fault in so good a man, but as a great stain on so fair a character. Lord, what is man! thy grace is sufficient for us! REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXV.—Before I part with Abraham, this celebrated patriarch, let me, in him, contemplate Jesus the everlasting Father. How astonishing his meekness,—his kindness to men,—his intimacy with, fear of, obedience to, and trust in his God! He is the chosen favourite of JEHOVAH,—the father and covenant-head of innumerable millions of saved men. To him all the promises relative to the evangelical and eternal state of his church were originally made. All obedient at his Father's call he left his native abodes of bliss, and became "a stranger, and sojourner on earth," not having where to lay his head. At his Father's call, he offered himself an acceptable sacrifice to God; by his all-prevalent intercession, and supernatural influence, he delivers his (ah!) too ungrateful friends from the hand of their enemies; and, after long patience, he obtains a numerous seed in the Jewish and Gospel-church. In his visible family are many professors, children of the bond-woman, the covenant of works; who, in the issue, are like Ishmael, or the modern Jews, rejected and cast out into a state of misery and woe; others are children of the free-woman, the covenant of grace, and are, like Isaac, begotten to God by the powerful influence of the promise. Now let me observe, how invigorating is a strong faith in God's promise; for God delights to add abundant blessings to such as, by courageous believing, give him the glory of his power and faithfulness. Often the best of men have little remarkable fellowship with God in old age, but must live even to the end by faith, and not by sight; while wicked families are loaded with temporal mercies for the sake of their pious progenitors. Promised events are often ushered in by the most discouraging appearances; and mercies must be long prayed and waited for ere they be granted. It is good when husbands and wives unite their supplications; for to spread our griefs before a throne of grace is the greatest and surest relief. How often much trouble and vexation attend what is too eagerly desired! But how sovereign is God, in fixing the temporal, and even eternal, states of persons before they are born! And how early are children known by their doings! yet in their education great care is to be taken in consulting their tempers and dispositions. Parents frequently expose themselves to future troubles by their partial regard to children. But why should we set our hearts on them, or any other worldly comfort, when we must so quickly leave them by death? At that time it should be the concern of parents so to dispose of their effects, that there may be no disputes after they are gone; and such deserve to have most assigned them as are likely to make the best use of it. How often the wisest worldlings act the most foolish part, while "the Lord preserveth the simple!" How marvellously God overruleth even the sins of men, to the accomplishment of his purpose or promise, and the advancement of his glory! How dreadful, when men, even those who have had a religious education, gratify their sensual appetites at the expense of the temporal and eternal ruin of themselves and their seed; and when God permits them to be afterwards hardened in their sin, and standing monuments of that affecting truth, that numbers of the descendants of God's favourites are sometimes left out of his church, and unacquainted with their parents' blessings!

* It is too common with individuals, families, churches, and nations, to fall away in religion as they advance in riches and honours. It was not so with Isaac. In the midst of all his wealth and prosperity he does not forget God. Family religion is not expelled by family advancement; but, like Abraham, his father, he builds his altar, and calls on the name of the LORD; that is, acknowledges, and worships him in all his revealed attributes, consequently seeks not only the promised protection from the Almighty God which his defenceless, and as it were, insulated situation required; but the pardon of the merciful God, which his sense of his sin, especially in the case of Abimelech, must have dictated to a pious and awakened mind.—Ed.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 12. This fertility was emblematical of fruitfulness in grace: Ps. lxvii. 6. Mat. xiii. 23; and of the bountiful but gracious rewards which we shall enjoy in heaven: Gal. vi. 7, 8. Ps. xxxi. 19. and xix. 11.——Ver. 18. This was typical of Christ's reforming his church, and reviving the oracles, ordinances, and influences of grace: Ezek. xlvii. 1—10. John v. 10. Zech. xiii. 1. and xiv. 8.——Ver. 24. Not for the sake of Abraham's merit, but from respect to the covenant made with him: Gen. xii. 2, 3. xv. 8. and xvii. 6, 7.——Ver. 29. And since God hath so abundantly blessed thee, we hope that thou wilt not remember the small unkindness which we did thee.——Ver. 34. This was contrary to the will of God: Ex. xxxiv. 16. Deut. vii. 3. Josh. xxiii. 12. Ezra ix. 1—3. Neh. xiii. 23—25. 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15. 1 Cor. vii. 39. and of his grandfather and parents: ch. xxiv. 38. xxvii. 46. and xxviii. 1, 2, 6. See ch. vi. 2.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVI.—A mixture of providential smiles and frowns is ordinarily in the lot of God's principal favourites. But what a mercy is it to have the covenant of grace established between God and our progenitors, that it may be renewed with us! The fear of men, the fear of temporal death, often causeth a snare: and we readily rush into the same snares in which others before had almost ruined themselves. Yet the kindness of God is infinitely great in rescuing his people, when they are thus busied in entangling themselves. But what a scandal to a saint to be discovered a dissembler! and how painful to have the snares which we laid for the innocent entangling ourselves, or their sins charged to our account before God! To what trouble and expense will envious men put themselves in order to gratify their lust. And how often are the most flourishing outward enjoyments imbittered by the envy which attends them! What a mercy to have God smiling on us when the world frowns! For, when our ways please the Lord, he maketh even our enemies to be at peace with us, and to pursue the friendship which they once refused! The wickedness of children, who break their parents' hearts when they ought to be their comfort, is great, and observed by God; and his curse frequently attends those marriages which are made without the consent of parents.

(1) Still fond of Esau, Isaac, contrary to the oracle of God, (chap. xxv. 23.) attempts to confer on him his principal blessing: 1—5. (2) Jacob anticipates Esau with savoury meat to his father; and obtains the blessing: 5—29. (3) Esau and his father, with deep concern, find that Jacob had already got the principal blessing. Esau obtains a subordinate one: 30—40. (4) While Esau projects the murder of Jacob, Rebekah sends him to her brother: 41—46.

A. M. 2244. B. C. 1760.

AND it came to pass, that when Isaac was * old, and his eyes [a] were dim, so that he could not see, he called Esau his eldest son, and said unto him, My son. And he said unto him, Behold, here am I.

2 And he said, Behold now, I am old, I know not the day of my death. [b]

3 Now therefore take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and [c] take me some venison;

4 And make me [d] savoury meat, such as I love, and bring it to me, that I may eat; that my soul may bless thee before I die. †

5 And Rebekah heard when Isaac spake to Esau his son. And Esau went to the field to hunt for venison, and to bring it.

6 ¶ And Rebekah spake unto Jacob her son, saying, Behold, I heard thy father speak unto Esau thy brother, saying,

7 Bring me venison, and make me savoury meat, that I may eat, and bless thee [e] before the LORD before my death.

8 Now therefore, my son, [f] obey my voice, according to that which I command thee.

9 Go now to the flock, and fetch me from thence two good kids of the goats; and I will make them savoury meat for thy father, such as he loveth:

10 And thou shalt bring it to thy father, that he may eat, and that he may bless thee before his death.

11 And Jacob said to Rebekah his mother, Behold, Esau my brother is [g] a hairy man, and I am a smooth man:

12 My father peradventure will feel me, and I shall seem to him as a [h] deceiver; and I shall bring a [i] curse upon me, and not a blessing.

13 And his mother said unto him, [k] Upon me be thy curse, my son: only obey my voice, and go fetch me them.

14 And he went, and fetched, and brought them to his mother: and his mother made savoury meat, such as his father loved.

15 And Rebekah took goodly ‡ raiment of her eldest son Esau, which were with her in the house, [l] and put them upon Jacob her younger son.

16 And she put the skins of the kids of the goats upon his hands, and upon the smooth of his neck.

17 And she gave the savoury * meat and the bread, which she had prepared, into the hand of her son Jacob.

18 ¶ And he came unto his father, and said, My father. And he said, Here am I; who art thou, my son?

19 And Jacob said unto his father, I am Esau thy [m] first-born; I have done according as thou badest me: arise, I pray thee, sit and eat of my venison, that thy soul may bless me.

20 And Isaac said unto his son, How is it that thou hast found it so quickly, my son? And he said, Because the LORD thy God brought it † to me.

21 And Isaac said unto Jacob, Come near, I pray thee, that I may feel thee, my son, whether thou be my very son Esau or not.

22 And Jacob went near unto Isaac his father; and he felt him, and said, the voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau.

23 And he discerned him not, because his hands were hairy, as his brother Esau's hands; so he [n] blessed him.

24 And he said, Art thou my very son Esau? And he said, [o] I am.

25 And he said, Bring it near to me, and I will eat of my son's venison, that my soul may bless thee. And he brought it near to him, and he did eat; and he brought him wine, and he drank.

26 And his father Isaac said unto him, Come near now, and kiss me, my son.

27 And he came near, and kissed him: and he smelled the smell of his raiment, and blessed him, and said, See, the smell of my son is as the [p] smell of a field which the LORD hath blessed:

28 Therefore [q] God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine: ‡

29 Let [r] people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee: be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: [s] cursed

‡ The nature and extent of the patriarchal birthright, which Esau despised (ch. 25. 34.) is here fully exhibited. It consists, 1. In a propitious climate, a fertile soil, with that abundant return that implies an industrious, peaceable, and prosperous people. 2. The service and submission of foreign nations by conquest. 3. The service and submission of his own relatives, by voluntary choice. 4. A curse upon all his enemies, and a blessing upon all his friends.—What a glorious emblem of the birthright of Jesus! Hasten the time, O Lord! when the heathen shall be his inheritance, and the utmost ends of the earth his possession!—But while Rebekah or Jacob must be praised for valuing this patriarchal birthright so highly, is either to be imitated in seeking it so subtilely? No. Like Paul with Peter, (Gal. 2. 11.) we must, as it were, withstand them to the face, because they are to be blamed. The goodness of the end sought can never justify the wrong means employed. God, who cannot lie, had already told Rebekah (Ch. 25. 23.) that the elder (Esau) should serve the younger (Jacob), and relying upon his truth and power, as well as valuing his promised gift, Rebekah should have waited on God's means for accomplishing his own purposes. Her human wisdom, however, brought its own punishment. It made Esau an intending murderer, (ver. 41.) and Jacob a banished exile.—ED.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 4.—That, invigorated with the savoury meat, I may bestow upon thee my blessing, constituting thee heir of all the benefits promised to me and my father Abraham: Ver. 27—29. ch. xxviii. 3, 4. xlviii. 15. & xlix. Deut. xxxi. xxxiii. Heb. xi. 20.——Ver. 13. The manner in which she imprecates the curse cannot be justified; but, from the promise of God, and from Jacob's having obtained the birthright, ch. xxv. 23, 33. she was confident of a happy issue.——Ver. 27. He regarded the smell of Jacob's garments as a token that God had intended to bless him abundantly, and to render him a particular blessing to others.——Ver. 28, 29. In this blessing Isaac at once requested and predicted the benefits mentioned. These temporal favours were more remarkable under the Old Testament than under the New; and represented the spiritual and temporal influences and fulness of the new covenant, and of the church of God: Heb. xiv. 6, 7. Deut. xxxii. 2. Isa. xlv. 8. 1 Cor. i. 30. & iii. 22. Rev. i. 6. and v. 10. Eph. i. 3.——Ver. 39, 40. This blessing imported that Esau and his seed should inhabit mount Seir, a soil then moderately fertile, Heb. xi. 20. ch. xxxvi. 6—8; that they should live much by war, violence, and rapine, Mat. x. 34; should, by David, Amaziah, Hyrcanus, &c. be subjected to the Hebrew yoke; Deut. xxxiii. 29. Ps. lx. 8. 2 Sam. viii. 14. 2 Chr. xxv. 11, 12. Obad. 18. 19; but should under Jehoram cast it off, 2 Kings viii. 16, 20.——Ver. 41. In this manner Esau hoped to recover both birthright and blessing; but Isaac, nevertheless lived about 43 years after.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVII.—When dimness of sight, or other harbingers of death, fasten upon us, it is high time for spiritual diligence, particularly in committing ourselves and our families to God. But even then it is hard to rectify the partial affection which we have conceived for our children.—How unseemly in be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as Isaac had made an end of blessing Jacob, and Jacob was yet scarce gone out from the presence of Isaac his father, that Esau his brother came in from his hunting.

31 And he also had made savoury meat, and brought it unto his father, and said unto his father, Let my father arise, and eat of his son's venison, that thy soul may bless me.

32 And Isaac his father said unto him, Who art thou? And he said, I am thy son, thy first-born, Esau.

33 And Isaac [a] trembled very exceedingly, [†] and said, Who? where is he that hath [‡] taken venison, and brought it me, and I have eaten of all before thou camest, and have blessed him? yea, [t] and he shall be blessed.

34 ¶ And when Esau heard the words of his father, he cried with a great and exceeding [u] bitter cry, and said unto his father, Bless me, even me also, O my father!

35 And he said, Thy brother came with [x] subtilty, and hath taken away thy blessing.

36 And he said, Is not he rightly named [§] Jacob? for he hath supplanted me these two times: [‖] he took away my birthright; and, behold, now he hath taken away my blessing. And he said, Hast thou not reserved a blessing for me?

37 And Isaac answered and said unto Esau, Behold, I have made him thy lord, and all his brethren have I given to him for servants; and with corn and wine have I [•] sustained him: and what shall I do now unto thee, my son?

38 And Esau said unto his father, Hast thou but one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father! And Esau [y] lifted up his voice and wept.

39 And Isaac his father answered and said unto him, [z] Behold, thy dwelling shall be [†] the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above;

40 And by thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother: and it shall come to pass, when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck. [‡]

41 ¶ And [a] Esau hated Jacob, because of the blessing wherewith his father blessed him: and Esau said in his heart, The days of mourning for my father are at hand, [b] then will I slay my brother Jacob.

42 ¶ And these words of Esau her elder son were [•] told to Rebekah: and she sent and called Jacob her younger son, and said unto him, Behold, thy brother Esau, as touching thee, doth [c] comfort himself, purposing to kill thee.

43 Now therefore, my son, obey my voice; and arise, flee thou to Laban my brother, to Haran;

44 And tarry with him [d] a few days, until thy brother's fury turn away;

45 Until thy brother's anger turn away from thee, and he forget that which thou hast done to him: then I will send and fetch thee from thence. Why should I be [e] deprived also of you both in one day?

46 And Rebekah said to Isaac, I am weary of my life because of the daughters of Heth; if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, such as these which are of the daughters of the land, what good shall my life do me?

† If Isaac knew the prophecy delivered to Rebekah (ch. 25. 23.) (and we cannot imagine him ignorant of it) then his purpose of blessing Esau, and endowing him with the birthright, was contrary to God's prediction. We may conjecture, but we cannot absolutely discover by what process Isaac was led to forget this word, any more than we can discover how Peter did not remember the words of Jesus till he turned and looked on him, (Luke 22. 61); but to the recollection of God's promise, and of his own neglect of it, we may mainly attribute the trembling that now seized upon Isaac.—Note. With Rebekah and Isaac we must not take improper means to effect God's known purposes—but with Isaac, we must not neglect any legitimate or authorized means in our power to give effect to all his commands and promises.—Ed.

parents, especially if godly, to become tempters of their children to offend God, and to despise the awful curse which he hath annexed to sin! Their evil counsels are a most entangling snare; and it is unnatural for the dearest relations to become deceivers of one another; especially as one sin so naturally leads to another still worse; and nothing but disorder, grief or other murderous consequences, can justly be expected. The sovereignty of God is often remarkably evident in accomplishing his great designs through means of the wicked practices of men; but the heirs of promise, notwithstanding, entail upon themselves the most fearful perplexity and trouble, in taking sinful methods to obtain their promised benefits. With what earnestness will the most carnal men pursue after spiritual things, for the sake of the carnal advantages which they hope will attend them! But, if disappointed, readily they pervert their way, and their heart fretteth against the Lord, while with malice and murder they think to defeat the purposes of God. How readily this malice reduces to great perplexity and fear such as have been the sinful instruments of their disappointment! Stand in awe, my soul; seek the Lord's blessing only in his own time and method! Let lying lips be an abomination to me! Never let me despise the heavenly birthright, lest I be denied the blessing when afterward I seek it carefully with tears. Is any provoked by, or even unjustly enraged at me, let me, by yielding, pacify great offences; or, by flight, escape for my safety. Perhaps what now seems base or bitter to my corrupt heart, may yield me consolation in the latter end. Let intimacy, therefore, and especially marriage-connexion, with the wicked, be always the detestation of my soul!

7 And that Jacob [k] obeyed his father and his mother, and was gone to Padan-aram;

8 And Esau seeing that the daughters of Canaan [*] pleased not Isaac his father,

9 Then went Esau unto [l] Ishmael, and took unto the wives which he had, [†] Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael, Abraham's son, the sister of Nebajoth, to be his wife.

10 ¶ And Jacob went out from Beer-sheba, and went toward [‡] Haran.

11 And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, because the sun was set: and he took of the stones of that place, and put them for his [m] pillows, and lay down in that place to sleep.

12 And he [n] dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it.

13 [o] And, behold, the LORD stood above it, and said, I am the LORD [p] God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, [q] to thee will I give it, and to thy seed;

14 [r] And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; and thou shalt [§] spread abroad [s] to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee, and [t] in thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed.

15 And, behold, [u] I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land: for I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of.

16 ¶ And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the LORD is in this place, and [x] I knew it not.

17 And he was [y] afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! this is [z] none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.

18 And Jacob [a] rose up early in the morning, and took the stone that he had put for his pillows, and [b] set it up for a pillar, and [*] poured oil upon the top of it.

19 And he called the name of that place [c] Bethel: but the name of that city was called Luz at the first.

20 ¶ And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, [†] If God will be with me, [‡] and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on,

21 So that I come again to my father's house in peace; then shall the LORD be my God:

22 And this stone, which I have set for a pillar, shall be God's [d] house: and of all that thou shalt give me [§] I will surely give [e] the tenth unto thee.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVIII.—How crosses and crowns are mingled together in the lot of the saints! But it is comfortable when the blessing of parents and of God prepares men for their trials; and to have a godly friend's house to lodge in, amidst our distress, alleviates the grief.—What care both parents and children ought to take to prevent unequal marriages with the ungodly!—How shrewd the contrivances of carnal men to promote their temporal advantage! But they who aim only at pleasing men often meet with the most bitter disappointments. They who rest on partial reformations lie down but the more securely under the wrath of God. It is too late to be wise when the opportunity is lost. How amazing the mercy of God, in graciously visiting such as, by their sin, have made their own homes dangerous for them to tarry at! Easily he renders even trouble sweet with his kindness: and happy they who have him, and his angels to be their protectors! No danger can come near them. And, if he love, he will never leave us.—He is often nearer us than we are aware: and his comfortable presence in ordinances is the very gate to celestial joys. How effectually nearness to God humbles us under a sense of our own vileness and corruption! And happy is it when our fellowship with God leaves a lasting impression on our spirits,—powerfully constrains us, by solemn engagement, to surrender ourselves, and all that we have, to his service,—and renders us content with a moderate share of the good things of this life! But while I thus regard the kindness of his providence, let me here contemplate the person and the work of my glorious Redeemer, that Mediator between God and man. On earth, in the condescension of his humanity; in heaven, in the glory of his divinity; through him I come near to God, and enjoy his presence and his favour; through him I behold the promises of guidance and protection; and after all my wanderings in this world, defended by his care, shall return to my Father's house in peace, laden with the blessings of eternal glory.

neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered together: water ye the sheep, and go and feed them.

8 And they said, [h] We cannot, until all the flocks be gathered together, and till they roll the stone from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep.

9 ¶ And [i] while he yet spake with them, Rachel came with her father's sheep; for she kept them.

10 And it came to pass, when Jacob saw Rachel the daughter of Laban his mother's brother, and the sheep of Laban his mother's brother, that Jacob went near, and rolled the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the flock of Laban his mother's brother.

11 And Jacob [k] kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice, [l] and wept.

12 And Jacob told Rachel that he was her father's [m] brother, and that he was Rebekah's son: and she ran and told her father.

13 And it came to pass, when Laban heard the [n] tidings of Jacob his sister's son, that he ran to meet him, and embraced him, and [o] kissed him, and brought him to his house. [†] And he told Laban all these things.

14 And Laban said to him, Surely thou art [p] my bone and my flesh. And he abode with him [‡] the space of a month.

15 ¶ And Laban said unto Jacob, Because thou art my brother, shouldest thou therefore serve me for nought? tell me, what shall thy wages be?

16 And Laban had two daughters: the name of the elder was Leah, and the name of the younger was Rachel.

17 Leah was tender-eyed, but Rachel was beautiful and well-favoured.

18 And Jacob loved Rachel; and said, [p] I will [§] serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter.

19 And Laban said, [q] It is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: abide with me.

20 And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, [r] for the love he had to her.

21 ¶ And Jacob said unto Laban, Give me my wife, for my [‖] days [s] are fulfilled, that I may go in unto her.

§ In modern times, and in European society, the father gives a dowery with his daughter; in the times and country of Laban, the father received it for his daughter; a custom still prevalent in Arabia and some other eastern countries. How shall we account for this difference of customs? 1. From the system of polygamy so prevalent in the east, which rendered the proportion of unmarried females inadequate to the number of males, and enabled covetous fathers, like Laban, to make a profitable traffic of their daughters. 2. From the nature of the servile employments to which, even females of rank (such as Rachel, ver. 6.) were appointed. It is evident that, in former times, the wife, in eastern countries, was but a superior servant, or real slave, as she still, down to these days, continues to be, and therefore we can be little surprised that she was purchased as by a master, for whom she was to toil as an inferior, and not endowed as for a husband with whom she was to live as an equal.—Note. It was reserved for Christianity, in every country where it has prevailed, to raise the condition of woman to her proper rank in society.—Ed.

† The duplicity of Laban in imposing upon Jacob, and now pleading a custom, hitherto unmentioned, or that perhaps never had a being, in justification of it, is utterly to be condemned. The world is full of duplicity, saying one thing and meaning another, promising an act of kindness, while intending an act of injury. Like all other evils it leads to more. First, it divides the concentrated affections of Jacob; then it introduces him to polygamy, this leads to envy between the sisters, to a farther extension of the first evil; and terminates in the slavery of Joseph, and nearly brings the grey head of Jacob with sorrow to the grave.—Ed.

To punish Leah for consenting to her father's deceit, she was hated, that is, less loved than Rachel, ver. 30.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIX.—Behold how cheerful and prosperous the gracious visits of a reconciled God render men! Behold the plainness, humility, and kindness, which once prevailed in the world! How kind is it to assist others unasked; and how unnatural to refuse our relations assistance in the time of their distress! The diligent labourer is worthy of his hire.—Virtuous love brings its own reward along with it. Nothing is irksome when done in fervent affection. With what deliberation ought men to proceed in marriage, even when they are assured of God's blessing on it! How powerful is the abominable influence of a covetous heart. It will make parents to sell their children or prostitute them as harlots, and men to impose upon their nearest friends! How justly God marks the sins of his own favourites in their chastisements; and yet mercifully tries them with disappointments, that the love of creatures may not engross their whole heart! —How little comfort men have ever found in transgressing God's original institution, by taking a plurality of wives! Real marriage-love cannot be divided. Nothing can be heavier to an affectionate wife, than to have her husband's love estranged from her. But readily the Lord takes part with them who have least help in man; and makes up in one thing what he denies to them in another. Let us therefore, like Leah, diligently observe the providence of God, not only in the birth of children, but in every other thing which may befall us; that we may acknowledge it with gratitude, trust him more cheerfully, and praise him to his glory.

18 And Leah said, [‖] God hath given me my hire, because I have given my maiden to my husband: and she called his name [p] Issachar.

19 And Leah conceived again, and bare Jacob the sixth son.

20 And Leah said, God hath endowed me with a good dowery; now will my husband dwell with me, because I have born him six sons: and she called his name [q] Zebulun.

21 And afterwards she bare a daughter, and called her name [r] Dinah.

22 ¶ And God [s] remembered Rachel, and God hearkened to her, and opened her womb.

23 [*] And she conceived, and bare a son; and said, God hath taken away my [t] reproach:

24 And she called his name [u] Joseph; and said, The LORD shall [x] add to me another son.

25 ¶ And it came to pass, when Rachel had born Joseph, that Jacob said unto Laban, Send me away, that I may go unto mine own place, and to [y] my country.

26 Give me my wives and my children, for whom I have served thee, and let me go: for thou knowest my service which I have done thee.

27 And Laban said unto him, I pray thee, if I have [z] found favour in thine eyes, tarry: for I have learned by experience that [a] the LORD hath blessed me for thy sake.

28 And he said, [b] Appoint me thy wages, and I will give it.

29 And he said unto him, Thou knowest [c] how I have served [†] thee, and how thy cattle was with me.

30 For it was little which thou hadst before I came, and it is now [d] increased unto a multitude; and the LORD hath blessed thee [e] since my coming: and now, when shall I provide for mine own house also?

31 And he said, What shall I give thee? And Jacob said, Thou shalt not give me [f] any thing. If thou wilt do this thing for me, I will again feed and keep thy flock.

32 I will pass through all thy flock to-day, removing from thence all the speckled and spotted cattle, and all the brown cattle among the sheep, and the spotted and speckled among the goats; and of [g] such shall be my hire.

33 So shall my [h] righteousness answer for me [i] in time to come, when it shall come for my hire before thy face: every one that is not speckled and spotted among the goats, and brown among the sheep, that shall be counted stolen with me.

† The mandrakes, (in Heb. Dudaim) has been very variously described. Some translate the Hebrew Dudaim, violet, others lilies, jasmines, mushroom, others, flowers in general. Abbe Marite thus describes the plant commonly called mandrakes. "It grows low, like a lettuce, to which its leaves have a great resemblance, except that they have a dark green colour. The flowers are purple. The fruit, when ripe, in the beginning of May, (the wheat harvest in Palestine) is of the size and colour of a small apple, exceedingly ruddy, and of an agreeable odour. Pythagoras denominated it anthropomorphon. Theophrastus refers to it, as productive of love. There can be no doubt that in ancient times the plant, commonly called mandrakes, was in high repute as an ingredient in philtres or love potions; and, it is not unlikely that some such idea might have occupied the mind of Rachel; who, though a believer in the true God and his promises, was not yet thoroughly clear of the superstition of her country, as especially appears from ch. 31. 34. —ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXX.—Sinful marriages have sad consequences. Wives chosen for their beauty often bring a troublesome temper along with them. Envious discontentment, and disappointed pride, make multitudes miserable! Immoderate desire of children, or other created enjoyments, hurry many into fearful disorders! But it is vain ever to expect that happiness from creatures, which can be had only in and from God himself. No love to persons should hinder our detestation and reproof of their sins. Even the godly are apt to fall into snares, laid for them by their near relations. And bad examples are more readily imitated than good ones. If we are once overcome by sin, we are apt to yield to it more easily afterward. Many are more governed by the estimation of the world than by reason or religion. It is very wicked for parents to transmit their quarrels to their children. It is no lessening of our guilt that God brings good out of our evil. People often promise themselves happiness in that which will be their death or ruin. Saints have need to trust their God, as all others may deceive them; and reason to desire their heavenly home, as this world is not their rest. What an advantage to families are servants remarkably pious! How criminal for covetous masters to defraud them.

34 And [*] Laban said, Behold, I would it might be according to thy word.

35 And he removed that day the he-goats that were ring-straked and spotted, and all the she-goats that were speckled and spotted, and every one that had some white in it, and all the brown among the sheep, and gave them into the hand of his sons.

36 And he set three days' journey betwixt himself and Jacob: and Jacob fed the rest of Laban's flocks. [†]

37 ¶ And Jacob took him [k] rods of green poplar, [‡] and of the [l] hazel and [m] chesnut tree; and pilled white strakes in them, and made the white appear which was in the rods.

38 And he set the rods which he had pilled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering-troughs when the flocks came to drink, that they should [§] conceive when they came to drink.

39 And the flocks [n] conceived before the rods, and brought forth cattle ring-straked, speckled, and spotted.

40 And Jacob did separate the lambs, and set the faces of the flocks toward the ring-straked and all the brown in the flock of Laban; and he put his own flocks by themselves, and [‖] put them not unto Laban's cattle.

41 And it came to pass, whensoever the stronger cattle did conceive, that Jacob laid the rods before the eyes of the cattle in the gutters, that they might conceive among the rods.

42 But when the cattle were feeble, he put them not in: so the feebler were Laban's, and the stronger Jacob's.

43 And the man [o] increased exceedingly, and had much cattle, and maid-servants, and men-servants, and camels, and asses.

[*] Laban agreed to this, as he expected that all of these colours agreed upon being removed from the flock, scarce any more such would be produced in it.

of their wages! What good words worldly men can give to serve their own ends; and how wise they are for their own carnal interests! But their caution is vain, when God designs to frustrate their purposes; and they often outwit themselves who intend to impose upon others. All agreements ought to be made with great clearness and accuracy, that no stain be thereby occasioned to our character; and, in the use of lawful means to promote our wealth, our trust should be fixed on the promised providence of God. His blessing can quickly increase a little, and make it a great store.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXI.—What stings do riches carry with them, that for them a man is envied of his neighbour! But base-minded indeed are those wretches who are ungrateful, and who reckon temporal wealth the principal glory. What an evil world is this, where the best behaviour cannot secure one's reputation! Too often sour looks deprive families of their best supports. It is a mercy that, in the very crisis of difficulty, God visits and comforts his people: that he never changes, but wills that we should live near to him. When we get worldly blessings in a new covenant channel, they are doubly sweet; and yet when outward mercies increase, we have great need to be stirred up to think of our celestial home. When we have gone safely out under God's direction, we need not fear to return under his care. But how apt are the best to forget the distinguished service of God, unless they be both driven and drawn to it!—How pleasant when married persons dwell together in unity, and do nothing important without mutual consent!—How strong is our affection to idols, when we will rather steal them than want them! and how despicable those deities that can be stolen and hidden among the stuff! God hath in his hand the hearts of all men; and he will continue to rescue his people when upon the brink of ruin, and will restrain their most outrageous enemies.—Bad hearts are pregnant with evil surmises; and, if God hinder their mischievous designs, they readily pretend that they never formed them. his getting, which he had gotten in Padan-aram, for to go to Isaac his father in the land of Canaan.

19 And Laban went to shear his sheep: and Rachel had [s]stolen the [v]images that were her father's.

20 And Jacob stole away [t]unawares to Laban the Syrian, in that he told him not that he fled.

21 So he fled with all that he had; and he rose up, and passed over the [‡]river, and [w]set his face toward the mount Gilead.

22 ¶ And it was told Laban [x]on the third day that Jacob was fled.

23 And he took [y] his brethren with him, and pursued after him seven days' journey; and they overtook him in the mount Gilead.[§]

24 And [z]God came to Laban the Syrian in a dream by night, and said unto him, [a]Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob [‖]either good or bad.

25 ¶ Then Laban overtook Jacob. Now Jacob had pitched his tent in the mount: and Laban with his brethren pitched in the mount of Gilead.

26 And Laban said to Jacob, [b]What hast thou done, that thou hast stolen away unawares to me, and carried away my daughters, [c]as captives taken with the sword?

27 Wherefore didst thou flee away secretly, and [*]steal away from me, and didst not tell me, that I might have sent thee away [d]with mirth, and with songs, with tabret, and with harp?

28 And hast not suffered me [e]to kiss my sons and my daughters? Thou hast now [f]done foolishly in so doing.

29 It [g]is in the power of my hand to do you hurt: but the [h]God of your father spake unto me yesternight, saying, Take thou heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad.

30 And now, though thou wouldest needs be gone, because thou sore longedst after thy father's house, yet wherefore hast thou stolen [i]my gods?

31 And Jacob answered and said to Laban, Because [k]I was afraid: for I said, Peradventure thou wouldest take by force thy daughters from me.

32 With whomsoever thou findest thy gods, let him not live: before [l]our brethren discern thou what is thine with me, and take it to thee. For Jacob knew not that Rachel had stolen them.

33 And Laban went into Jacob's tent, and into [m]Leah's tent, and into the two maid-servants' tents; but he found them not. Then went he out of Leah's tent, and entered into Rachel's tent.

* The mention of the sheep-shearing, and the stealing of the images in the same sentence, renders it extremely probable that these images were superstitiously connected with the safety and prosperity of the flock. And whilst we condemn all superstition as ever the handmaiden or forerunner of idolatry, let us recollect (to humble us) that it has not been confined to ancient times of darkness, but may still be found existing under the full light of christianity. Even in our own days, a horse-shoe may still be seen nailed upon the threshold, as a protection against disease in cattle sheds, and even human dwellings; and not unfrequently on the mast of a ship, as a preservative from storm and shipwreck. — Note. The comparison of ancient and modern opinions, customs, manners, and events, is often the most efficient key to difficulties of Scripture.—Ed.

* The objections of unbelievers against the Bible, are generally founded on two false principles. 1. They enumerate all the weaknesses, errors, and sins of the most prominent Scripture characters, as things approved of God, because recorded in his word. 2. Presuming that christians must consequently approve and defend every part of their conduct, they accuse christianity and christians of approving and defending what is evil. Both these assumptions are erroneous in all cases, consequently erroneous in the present example. Rachel was weak, superstitious, and, alas! it may have been, covetous; and, as sin is ever progressive, she succeeded in concealing one fault only by committing another. And, if the Spirit of God, in this, and in similar cases, have not uttered any special sentence of condemnation, it is simply because the law of God is presumed to be so well known, as to require no particular exposition or application.—Ed.

‡ Fear is a state of mind modified by its object. A slave may fear a severe taskmaster, a child a tender parent. This modification of the feeling of fear arises from the feelings with which it is associated. In the slave it is associated with anticipated severity, in the child with unquestioned love. In the one it is the fear of terror, in the other the fear of reverence. There is a fear, sometimes supposed to be the fear of God, which is altogether inconsistent with true religion. It is not, however, the fear of God, but the fear of punishment. This slavish fear, love casteth utterly out of the heart (1 John 4. 18.) while love cherisheth that godly fear which the Scripture declares to be the very beginning of wisdom, (Prov. 1. 7.)—Ed.

‡ Ver. 23, 32, 37, 54.

g That is, The heap of wit-witnesses, Heb. 12. 1.

§ i. e. The heap of witnesses.

34 Now [n]Rachel had taken the images, and put them in the camel's furniture, and [t]sat upon them. And Laban [t]searched all the tent, but found them not.

35 And she said to her father, Let it not displease [o]my lord that I cannot [p]rise up before thee; for [q]the custom of women is upon me. And he searched, but found not the images.

36 ¶ And Jacob [r]was wroth, and chode with Laban: and Jacob answered and said to Laban, What is my trespass? what is my sin, that thou hast so hotly pursued after me?

37 Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household-stuff? [s]set it here before my brethren and thy brethren, that they may judge betwixt us both.

38 This twenty years have I been with thee; thy ewes and thy she-goats [t]have not cast their young, and the rams of thy flock have [u]I not eaten.

39 That which was torn of beasts I brought not unto thee; I bare the loss of it: of [x]my hand didst thou require it, whether stolen by day, or stolen by night.

40 Thus I was; [y]in the day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night; and my sleep departed from mine eyes.

41 Thus [z]have I been twenty years in thy house: I served thee fourteen years for thy two daughters, and six years for thy cattle; and thou hast changed my wages [a]ten times.

42 Except the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and [b]the [‡]Fear of Isaac, had been with me, surely thou hadst sent me away now empty: God [c]hath seen mine affliction, and the labour of my hands, and rebuked thee yesternight.

43 ¶ And Laban answered and said unto Jacob, These daughters are my daughters, and these children are my children, and these cattle are my cattle, and all that thou seest is mine: and what can I do this day unto these my daughters, or unto their children which they have born?

44 Now therefore come thou, [d]let us make a covenant, I and thou; and let it be for a witness between me and thee.

45 And Jacob took a [e]stone, and set it up for a pillar.

46 And Jacob said unto his [f]brethren, Gather stones: and they took stones, and made an heap; and they did eat there upon the heap.

47 And Laban called it [§]Jegar-sahadutha; but Jacob called it [§]Galeed.

48 And Laban said, This heap is a witness of foolish mirth and riotous feasting at the parting of friends, it is ordinarily a token of much coldness or corruption in religion.—Rough and undeserved reproaches provoke even good men and of calm spirits, to vindicate themselves with heat, and to recriminate on their reproachers; and even to utter hasty wishes, which would render them miserable if they took effect. But God can marvellously overrule the rage of men to a most friendly issue. And with meekness and prudence we ought to cherish even the smallest approach towards peace and reconciliation. To forgive and forget injuries, and render good for evil, is truly Christian; and near relations are doubly bound to mutual forgiveness and living in peace. But solemn covenants, amongst all, should be undertaken with the greatest deliberation, and observed with the most heedful attention.

49 And [i] Mizpah: for he said, The LORD watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another.

50 If thou shalt afflict my daughters, [k] or if thou shalt take other wives besides my daughters, no man is with us; see, God is witness betwixt me and thee.

51 And Laban said to Jacob, Behold this heap, and behold this pillar, which I have cast betwixt me and thee;

52 This heap be witness, and this pillar be witness, that I will not pass over this heap to thee, and that thou shalt not pass over this heap, and this pillar, unto me, for harm.

54 Then Jacob [†] offered sacrifice upon the mount, and called his brethren [o] to eat bread: and they did eat bread, and tarried all night in the mount.

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 24—28. The Son of God in human form appeared to Jacob, as if he intended to cast him down; but Jacob enabled of God, with bodily, and chiefly spiritual strength, in fervent prayer prevailed over what opposition Christ gave him. To render him sensible of his weakness, Christ disjointed his thigh, 2 Cor. xii. 7; but after encouraging his supplications, he changed his name as a token of bettering his condition. Hence, when the church is represented as infirm, she is called Jacob: Amos vii. 2, 5, 8. Isa. xli. 14. but when her valour and excellency are signified, she is called Israel; Gal. vi. 16. Thus God gave Jacob strength to overcome, and also the reward and praise of the victory.——Ver. 29. He granted his request, and confirmed the blessings which he had formerly obtained; chap. xxvii. 28, 29. and xxviii. 3, 4, 13—15; and comforted him under the hart of his thigh, Hos. vi. 1.——Ver. 30. He saw not the divine essence itself, Ex. xxxiii. 20, 23.; but God in human shape in a most familiar and friendly manner. Num. xii. 8.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXII.—What sore trials saints often meet with in the very way which God directs them to take! But seasonable are the visits which God and his angels make to his people in such times of need. May Jesus and his angels so meet me in my way to the Canaan above! Deep-rooted, indeed, is that resentment, which neither length of days can wear out, nor the most submissive yielding assuage; and when what would make a friend rejoice, makes a brother envy and rage! Malicious spirits never forget injuries. Jealousy is cruel as the grave; and in this disordered world power and policy are often with the oppressors. In distress, it is necessary to betake ourselves to prayer, and to join the protection of God with our prudent endeavours; and amidst fear of danger, we ought to trust to, and plead God's promises; and while commemorating our mercies, and conscious of our unworthiness, we must insist on his fulfilment of his word. In danger, it is prudent to present a part, if that can preserve the whole; for peace cannot be bought too dear; and a large present is a good recommendation to a worldly mind; since apparent courage and confidence in a man's goodness lay him under a kind of obligation to show it.—They who would prevail in temptations, must first wrestle with God in prayer. If he exercise us with sore trials, we may depend on him, that as our days are, so shall our strength be. A deep sense of our insufficiency gives our faith occasion to take more firm hold of Christ—God loves importunate prayers; and perseverance therein will be crowned with victory. How pleasant to have our hearts, and names, and all things made new! Such memorials of remarkable fellowship with God are honourable and pleasing; and even children may look back upon their parents' mercies, as upon their own, with regard and thankfulness.—Let me here ask myself, What experience have I had of the ministration of God's angels? In what instances have I broken the bones with a soft answer, and pacified strong wrath with a gift in the bosom? What promises, spoken to my heart, have I pleaded at the throne of grace? What nights or days have I spent in wrestling with God, in behalf of myself, my family, my country, or the church of God? What blessings and answers of peace have I obtained? Where are those Bethels, and Peniels, in which God Almighty hath appeared unto me, and I have seen him in the person of Jesus Christ, 'as it were face to face,' and been preserved?

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIII.—It is prudent to keep out of view whatever might revive old quarrels; and humble submission powerfully mollifies offended pride. Cheerfully may we wait the issue of that which hath been committed to God. He often makes the issue of our trials much better than our fears suggested; and easily he mollifies the most fierce and froward heart. How sweet in itself, and what a token of a pious soul is it to view all that we have as the gifts of our gracious God! What a distinguished mercy it is to obtain the answer of our prayers, and to recover the favour of offended friends! CHAPTER XXXIV.

Jacob's troubles from his children begin. (1) Dinah is defiled by Shechem: 1—5. (2) Shechem and Hamor earnestly solicit her in marriage; and Jacob's sons deceitfully propose that they and all their subjects should be circumcised: 6—18. (3) Hamor and Shechem persuade their subjects to be circumcised, and themselves set the example: 19—24. (4) While these Canaanites are sore of their circumcision-wound, Jacob's sons, particularly Simeon and Levi, Dinah's full brethren, murder them, and seize on their substance, to the great grief of their father: 25—31.

AND [a] Dinah the daughter of Leah, which she bare unto Jacob, [b] went out to see the daughters of the land.

2 And when [c] Shechem the son of Hamor the Hivite, prince of the country, [d] saw her, he took her, and lay with her, and * defiled her.

3 And his soul clave unto Dinah the daughter of Jacob; and he loved the damsel, and spake * kindly unto the damsel.

4 ¶ And Shechem spake unto his father Hamor, saying, [f] Get me this damsel to wife.

5 And Jacob heard that he had defiled Dinah his daughter: now his sons were with his cattle in the field; and Jacob † held his peace until they were come.

6 And Hamor the father of Shechem went out unto Jacob, to commune with him.

7 And the sons of Jacob came out of the field when they heard it: and the men were

† The habitual wisdom of Jacob appears in making no decision till he had consulted his sons.—Note. Parental government is undoubtedly a monarchy; yet in monarchy the most absolute, "in the multitude of counsellors there is safety." The sooner parents prudently begin to treat their children as their companions and their counsellors, the sooner will they be prepared to act their part wisely in private and public life.—Ed.

* A sensitive regard to family honour, when conjoined with personal purity of principle and conduct in all its members, is one of the most important public feelings, and one of the surest indices of public morals. That this noble sentiment may, when disseverred from religion, produce deceit and violence, as in the case of Jacob's sons, (ver. 13 & 25,) is no charge against the sentiment itself; but rather an admonition to cherish it in conjunction with that fear of God without which every human principle of morals is either too weak to ensure its observance, or speedily degenerates into some specious vice.—Ed.

† Among barbarous people and in the early history of every nation which afterwards became civilized, the father of a girl, in relinquishing her to a husband, conceives he has a right to receive a compensation for losing the benefit of her services, as well as for the trouble and expense of bringing her up and providing for her wants. The antiquity of this usage will appear from many passages in the book of Genesis; although the only instance in which a provision for the female is overlooked, is that of Jacob's engagement with Laban.

grieved, and they were * very wroth, because he had wrought [g] folly in [h] Israel in lying with Jacob's daughter; which thing [i] ought not to be done.

8 And Hamor communed with them, saying, The soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter: I pray you give her him to wife.

9 And [k] make ye marriages with us, and give your daughters unto us, and take our daughters unto you:

10 And ye shall dwell with us: and the land shall be [l] before you; dwell and trade ye therein, and get you possessions therein.

11 And Shechem said unto her father, and unto her brethren, [m] Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye shall say unto me I will give.

12 [n] Ask me never so much † dowery and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife.

13 ¶ And the sons of Jacob answered Shechem and Hamor his father [o] deceitfully, and said, (because he had defiled Dinah their sister,)

14 And they said unto them, We cannot do this thing, to give our sister to one that is [p] uncircumcised; for that were a reproach unto us:

15 But in this will we consent unto you: If ye will be as we be, that every male of you be circumcised;

16 Then will we give our daughters unto you, and we will take your daughters to us, and we will dwell with you, and we will become one people.

17 But if ye will not hearken unto us, to be circumcised, then will we take our daughter, and we will be gone.

18 And their words pleased Hamor, and Shechem Hamor's son.

19 And the young man deferred not to do the thing, because he had delight in Jacob's daughter: and he was [q] more honourable than all the house of his father.

20 ¶ And Hamor and Shechem his son came unto [r] the gate of their city, and communed with the men of their city, saying, 21 These men are peaceable with us; therefore let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for the land, behold, it is large enough for them: let us take their daughters to us for wives, and let us give them our daughters.

22 Only herein will the men consent unto us for to dwell with us, to be one people, if ian! A heart truly Christian is open and generous: but, if we have enough of our own, we ought civilly to refuse needless obligations, though we should never be behind in acts of civility. Parents ought to manifest a most affectionate regard for their families, and especially to take care of their young ones. Perils of dangers escaped deserve a thankful remembrance; and, wherever saints have houses, there God must be worshipped as their God and their glory. O, my soul, never fear that any thing is too hard for the Lord! but always think, and speak, and act, as one whose God is JEHOVAH, and who follows peace with all men, and holiness! Never, therefore, let houses and booths for cattle have the preference of an altar for the Lord. We must not expect earthly enjoyments at free cost, because we have the heavenly so; but let the faith of God, as my own God, and the God of my seed, be rendered familiar to my heart and life; and then contentment, and patient expectation, will lead me cheerfully through all.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIV.—Into what scenes of guilt and misery do the pride, the vanity, and lust of young persons often plunge themselves and their relations! One sin naturally makes way for another: and young women, who are given to gadding abroad, rarely maintain their chastity. Yet it is but just that such as have defiled young women should espouse them in marriage, and repair their outward injury, though they cannot lessen their guilt before God. How readily the affairs of a family run wrong, when parents' authority is so low that they must stand in awe of their children! How often heathens show more respect to parents, in point of their marriage, than many professed Christians! Men's rage at one sin frequently issues in their doing what is still worse—in making religious pretences the mean of accomplishing the most devilish villanies; or in pretending public welfare in order to obtain private ends. The hopes of gain will carry some men a great way in religion; and yet, after all, they lose their aim:

every male among us be circumcised, as they are circumcised.

23 [s] Shall not their cattle, and their substance, and every beast of theirs, be ours? only let us consent unto them, and they will dwell with us.

24 And unto Hamor, and unto Shechem his son, hearkened all that went out of the gate of his city: and every male [t] was circumcised, all that went out of the gate of his city.

25 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day, when they were [u] sore, that two of the sons of Jacob, [x] Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brethren, took each man his sword, and came upon the city boldly, and [y] slew all the males.

26 And they slew Hamor and Shechem his son with the [*] edge of the sword, and took Dinah [†] out of Shechem's house, and went out.

for the profane reception of the seals of God's covenant issues most surely in just and inevitable ruin. Nothing is so treacherous or cruel that indulged malice will not attempt. But it is still worse when children, after plunging their parents into disgrace and danger, add to their grief by an insolent justification of their conduct. Let parents restrain their children from idle visits and foolish amusements; let them retain their proper authority; let them transact marriages with candour and self-denial,—if they wish to be happy.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXV.—Alas! how apt are the best of saints to forget their Bethel-enjoyments, and their Bethel-vows, till the Lord by his providence shuts them up, and by his word reminds them of them! And yet how precious are such visits, and how fixed and lasting ought to be our care in maintaining intimate fellowship with God, when once we have attained it! What corruptions and idols have need to be purged from the best hearts and families on earth, especially before solemn approaches to God! for let us always remember, there is no acceptable drawing near to God without having on Jesus' righteousness and grace, nor with allowed sin in the heart; and sins must be put away with a resolution never to return to them. How much better to pay our vows too late than never! What deaths, what disorders, may we expect to meet with on earth! But surely it is a mercy much to be esteemed, that our forgetfulness of God doth not make him forget his kindness or promises to us. He often sweetens our past troubles, and prepares us for future ones, with the manifestations of his favour; and his sweetness never changes, even when the family, the wives, the children, or other created enjoyments, which we have so impatiently desired, prove deathful or distressing to us. Ah! how plainly men's sins are written on their judgments: and how infatuated they must be who think so little of death, amidst so many births, deaths, and graves, which all warn us of it! May our hearts be set upon our Christ, our family, our house eternal in the heavens! An old age on earth is so filled up with sins and troubles, that it is scarcely worth coveting.——But in the now deceased Isaac let me behold my Redeemer! how often promised! how earnestly desired! how long expected! how supernatural! and how gladdening to angels and men was his birth! How maliciously was He, the Father's only begotten Son, hated, mocked, and persecuted by his Jewish brethren, at the expense of their ejection from the church of God! With what cheerfulness he assumed our nature, bore our sins and punishments, bore his cross, and laid down his life a ransom for men, that he might render the everlasting covenant a new testament in his blood, and purchase all spiritual blessings for us! Being raised from death, he is espoused to a chosen church, chiefly consisting of Gentile sinners; and his blood, his prayers, and his power produce a most numerous offspring of spiritual and professed seed. But how great is his glory at his Father's right hand! and he will be glorious in the church below, where he digs the wells of salvation, to give drink to his people, notwithstanding the envy of a carnal world. For a time, what a struggle between his Jewish and Gentile church, till at last the former, rejecting their birthright, and forfeiting their blessing, were cast out, and the latter became the highly favoured, but much afflicted people of God!

‡ The mountains of Seir lay on the east and south of the Dead Sea, and the country extended itself from thence to the Arabian Gulf. In Abraham's days the Horites, who were the descendants of Seir, had the possession of this region; and therefore we may suppose, that after the departure of Jacob, Esau, who, according to the prediction concerning him, was to "live by his sword," expelled the old inhabitants, and made himself prince thereof, before his brother returned from Mesopotamia.

they may expect their name to be tainted with infamy, for the purpose of God must stand firm amidst all the changes upon earth. How Esau, of his own accord, removes from Canaan, leaving that land of promise to the proper heirs; and that where Christ is not concerned, God contemns the persons and families of men, however dignified, and cuts short the account. Earthly honours are not much to be coveted, since wicked men have ordinarily the first and largest share of them; and they who join themselves with heathens may expect to be held by God as such. We must wait with patience for the fulfilment of God's promises, for promised privileges come often slowly, however certainly; and while the heirs of promise live in distress and want in this world, the heirs of the curse often attain great power and wealth.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXVII.—How dangerous it is for parents to mark their partial regard to children in finery of apparel, or in any other manner; for the Lord chiefly tries his people in the most tender points; and our trials are frequently rendered doubly heavy in respect of the instruments which Providence uses to accomplish them. How devilish must be the nature of envy, that can make excellency, nay, the favour of God, a reason of the most bitter hatred and bloody cruelty, and can repay the most affectionate love with deliberate murder! But evil-doers commonly hate such as labour to reform them. How often young men's dreams of prosperity make them overlook the trouble that is in the way to it! And dominion over us? And they hated him yet the more for his dreams, and for his words.

9 ¶ And he [m] dreamed yet another dream, and told it his brethren, and said, Behold, I have dreamed a dream more; [n] and, behold, the sun, and the moon, and the eleven stars, made obeisance to me.

10 And he told it to his father, and to his brethren: and his father rebuked [*] him, and said unto him, What is this dream that thou hast dreamed? Shall I, and thy [†] mother, and thy brethren, indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?

11 And his brethren [o] envied him; [‡] but his father [p] observed the saying.

12 ¶ And his brethren went to feed their father's flock in [q] Shechem.

13 And Israel said unto Joseph, Do not thy brethren feed the flock in Shechem? come, and I will send thee unto them. And [r] he said to him, Here am I.

14 And he said to him, Go, I pray thee, [s] see whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks; and bring me word again. So he sent him out of the vale of Hebron, and he came to [§] Shechem.

15 And a certain man found him, and, behold, he was wandering in the field: and the man asked him, saying, What seekest thou?

16 And he said, I seek my brethren: tell me, I pray thee, where they feed their flocks.

17 And the man said, They are departed hence: for I heard them say, Let us go to [t] Dothan. And Joseph went after his brethren, and found them in Dothan.

18 ¶ And when they saw him afar off, even before he came near unto them, [u] they conspired against him to slay him.

19 And they said one to another, Behold, this [‖] dreamer cometh!

20 [x] Come now therefore, and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit, and we will say, [y] Some evil beast hath devoured him: and we shall see what will become of his dreams.

21 ¶ And [z] Reuben heard it, and he delivered him out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him.

22 And Reuben said unto them, Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit that is in the wilderness, and lay no hand upon him; that he might rid him out of their hands [*], to deliver him to his father again.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, when Joseph was come unto his brethren, that they [a] stripped Joseph out of his coat, his coat of many colours that was on him;

24 And they took him, and cast him into [b] a pit: and the pit was empty, there was no water in it.

25 And they [c] sat down to eat bread: [†] and they lifted up their eyes and looked, and, behold, a company of [d] Ishmeelites came from Gilead, with their camels bearing spicery, and balm, and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt.

26 And Judah said unto his brethren, [e] What profit is it if we slay our brother, and conceal his blood?

27 Come, and let us [f] sell him to the Ishmeelites, and let not our hand be upon him; for he is our brother, and our flesh. And his brethren [‡] were content.

28 Then there passed by [g] Midianites, merchant-men; and they drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit, [h] and sold Joseph to the Ishmeelites for [§] twenty pieces of silver: and they brought Joseph into Egypt.

29 ¶ And Reuben returned unto the pit; and, behold, Joseph was not in the pit: and he rent his clothes:

30 And he returned unto his brethren, and said, The child [‖] is not; and I, whither shall I go?

31 ¶ And [k] they took Joseph's coat, and killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood:

32 And they sent the coat of many colours, and they brought it to their father, and said, This have we found: know now whether it be [‖] thy son's coat or no.

33 And he knew it, and said, It is my son's coat; an [‖] evil beast hath devoured him; Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces.

34 And Jacob rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days.

35 And all his sons, and all his [m] daughters, rose up to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted: and he said, For I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning. Thus his father wept for him.

36 ¶ And the [n] Midianites sold him into Egypt, unto Potiphar, an [*] officer of Pharaoh's, and [†‡] captain of the guard.

no less frequently is the fond indulgence of parents repaid with grief, or with the most unnatural cruelty. But notwithstanding every seeming hinderance, the Lord's gracious designs, and promises to his people, shall be exactly accomplished: while they, who mock at his intimations of his purpose, will but expose themselves to shame. God's providences indeed often appear darkest when the deliverance is at hand. He makes the common events of providence to become critical for the purposes of his glory; and so overrules wicked men as to make one sin a restraint from a greater, and bitter disappointments to issue in mercy. To what an amazing pitch of insensibility do crying sins stupify the conscience! Seldom is a crime committed but a lie is framed to conceal it—so natural to men is a lying spirit! Immoderate love is often followed with obstinate and immoderate sorrow; and yet many of our bitterest griefs are founded upon mistaken imaginations. But shall I not here also turn aside, and behold Jesus the Lamb of God! Was he not the darling of his Father? Did not his Father invest him with the robes of manhood and of mediatory office? Did not his brethren of Judah hate him for his faithful reproofs, for his prediction of his own future greatness, and on account of the distinguished regard shown to him by his Father? How astonishing his kindness, in coming into the world to seek and to save that which was lost? And yet, when he came, how ungratefully was he driven into Egypt! how basely betrayed! sold for the price of a slave! and delivered into the hands of sinners to be crucified!

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

The history of Judah. (1) His rash marriage with an accursed Canaanitess, and the unhappy death of his two eldest sons after their marriage with Tamar, another Canaanitish maid: 1—11. (2) Tamar decoys Judah into incest; which issued first in his rage against Tamar as an adulteress, and next in confusion to himself, on account of his being the occasion of, and partner in, her guilt: 12—26. (3) From this incestuous mixture proceeded twins, Pharez and Zarah, by whom the numerous tribe of Judah was chiefly built up: 27—30.

A. M. 2289. B. C. 1735.

AND it came to pass at that time, that Judah [a] went down from his brethren, and turned in to a certain Adullamite, whose name was Hirah.

2 And Judah [b] saw there a daughter of a certain Canaanite, whose name was [c] Shuah; and he took her, and went in unto her.

3 And she [*] conceived, and bare a son; and he called his name Er.

4 [d] And she [†] conceived again, and bare a son; and she called his name Onan.

5 And she yet again [‡] conceived, and bare a son; and called his name Shelah: and he was at [*] Chezib when she bare him.

6 And [f] Judah took a [§] wife for Er his firstborn, whose name was Tamar.

7 And Er, Judah's first-born, was [g] wicked [‖] in the sight of the LORD; and the LORD slew him.

8 And Judah said unto Onan, Go [h] in unto thy brother's wife, and marry her, and raise up seed to thy brother.

9 And Onan knew that the seed should [i] not be his: and it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilled it on the ground, [k] lest that he should give seed to his brother.

10 And the thing which he did [l] displeased the LORD: wherefore he slew him also.

11 Then said Judah to Tamar his daughter-in-law, [m] Remain a widow at thy father's house till Shelah my son be grown: (for he said, Lest peradventure he die also, as his brethren did.) And Tamar went and dwelt in her father's house.

12 ¶ And in process of time the daughter of Shuah, Judah's wife, died: [*] and Judah was [n] comforted, and went up [o] unto his sheep-shearers to [p] Timnath, he and his friend Hirah the Adullamite.

13 And it was told Tamar, saying, Behold, thy father-in-law goeth up to Timnath to shear his sheep. [†]

14 And she put her widow's garments off from her, and covered her with a veil, and wrapped herself, and sat in [q] an open place, which is by the way to [r] Timnath: for she saw that Shelah was grown, and she was not given unto him to wife.

15 When Judah saw her, he thought her to be an harlot; because she had covered her face.

16 And he turned unto her by the way, and said, [s] Go to, I pray thee, let me come in unto thee; (for he knew not that she was his daughter-in-law.) And she said, [t] What wilt thou give me, that thou mayest come in unto me?

17 And he said, I will send thee a kid from the flock. [u] And she said, Wilt thou give me a pledge till thou send it?

18 And he said, What pledge shall I give thee? And she said, [x] Thy signet, and thy bracelets, and thy staff that is in thine hand. And he gave it her, and came in unto her; and she conceived by him.

19 And she arose, and went away, and laid by her veil from her, and put on the garments of her widowhood.

20 And Judah sent the kid by the hand of his friend the Adullamite, to receive his pledge from the woman's hand; but he found her not.

21 Then he asked the men of that place, saying, Where is the harlot that was [y] openly by the way-side? And they said, There was no harlot in this place.

22 And he returned to Judah, and said, I cannot find her; and also the men of the place said, that there was no harlot in this place.

23 And Judah said, Let her take it to her, lest we [z] be shamed: behold, I sent this kid, and thou hast not found her.

24 ¶ [*] And it came to pass about three months after, that it was told Judah, saying, Tamar thy daughter-in-law hath played the harlot; and also, behold, she is with child by whoredom. [a] And Judah said, Bring her forth, and let her be [b] burnt. [†]

25 When she was brought forth, she sent to her father-in-law, saying, By the man whose these are am I with child: and she said, Discern, I pray thee, whose are these, the signet, and bracelets, and staff.

26 And Judah acknowledged them, and said, She hath been more [c] righteous than I; because that I gave her not to Shelah my son. And he [d] knew her again no more. [‡]

‖ The special wickedness of Er is not recorded; but his father being still an impenitent fratricide, so far as intention — the friend of an unprincipled man (chap. 38. 20.) and the husband of an idolatress, we need not be surprised at the character of the son. In some exemplary manner the Lord slew him, therein commencing that series of afflictions which softened Judah's heart, and brought him back to God. Contrast his unfeeling cruelty to his daughter (verse 32.) with his generous devotedness (chap. 44. 33, 34.) and can we entertain a doubt that old things had passed away from his heart, and all things had become new.—ED.

† Judah, as an independent pastoral prince, exercises the power of life and death. The death of burning pronounced against Tamar would, at first sight seem to indicate a high moral sense of propriety, and deep abhorrence of sin, while on closer examination we discover, that, it may merely indicate an intense feeling of injury and desire of revenge (compare ch. 34. 7, 25.) In the present instance the culprit is guilty of one sin, the judge of two —the violation of his promise (ver. 14.) and the very sin which he so rigorously condemns.—ED.

CHAP. XXXVIII. Ver. 1. Whether this marriage of Judah took place immediately after, or rather before, the selling of Joseph, is not absolutely certain. —— Ver. 8. According to this patriarchal custom, afterwards enacted into an express law of God (Deut. xxv. 5, 6.), the first-born was accounted legal son and heir to the deceased brother, and the rest of the children reckoned his who begot them. Ver. 9. His sin was extremely heinous, not only as it proceeded from envy of his brother's honour, and contempt of the promised seed, but as it was horrid and unnatural in itself. Nor, till the last judgment, will it appear what guilt of this nature hath been committed among mankind, nor how fearfully God hath punished the same.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXVIII.—Unhallowed and over-hasty marriages often issue in fearful and numerous mischiefs; and such sins in parents are punished by the like in their children. The lusts of the flesh issue in terrible plagues and untimely deaths. And extremely foolish is their choice, who dare to purchase a momentary enjoyment of their lust by exposing themselves to everlasting torments in hell. How tremendous the sovereignty of God in marking out men for objects of his distinguished vengeance against sin! And empty professors of the true religion are generally fixed upon for this purpose. At what an easy rate do most men part with their true honour and salvation, while they are mightily concerned about their temporal interests or worldly securities! Temporal loss and worldly shame weigh more with them than sin, with all the damnation which attends it. So deceitful indeed is sin, that hardened sinners are sometimes the most severe against

The history of Joseph. (1) A slave in Potiphar's family; but prospered of God: 1—6. (2) His mistress repeatedly solicits him to adultery; he detests and avoids it, as a horrid ingratitude to his master, and a heinous offence to his God: 7—12. (3) She falsely charges him, and he is cast into prison: 13—20. (4) The keeper of the prison makes Joseph overseer of the other prisoners: 21—23.

A. M. 2276. B. C. 1728.

AND Joseph was brought down to Egypt; ª and Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, bought him of the hands of the Ishmeelites, which had brought him down thither.

2 And ᵇ the * LORD was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man; and he was ᶜ in the house of his master the Egyptian.

3 And his † master ᵈ saw that the LORD was with him, and that the LORD ᵉ made all that he did to prosper in his hand.

4 And Joseph ᶠ found grace in his sight, and he served him; and he made him ᵍ overseer over his house, and all that he had he put into his hand.

5 And it came to pass, from the time that he had made him overseer in his house, and over all that he had, that the LORD blessed the Egyptian's house for ʰ Joseph's sake; and the blessing of the LORD was upon all that he had in the house, and in the field.

6 ⁱ And ᵏ he left all that he had in Joseph's hand; and he knew not ought he had, save the bread which he did eat: and Joseph was a ˡ goodly person, and well-favoured.

7 ¶ And it came to * pass after these things, that his master's wife ᵐ cast her eyes upon Joseph; and she said, Lie ⁿ with me.

8 But he ° refused; and said unto his master's wife, Behold, my master wotteth not what is with me in the house, and he hath committed all that he hath to my hand:

9 There ᵖ is none greater in this house than I; neither hath he kept back any thing from me but thee, because thou art his wife: ᵠ how then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?

10 And it came to pass, as ʳ she spake to Joseph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, ˢ to lie by her, or to be with her.

11 And it came to pass about this time, that Joseph went into the house to do his business; and there was ᵗ none of the men of the house there within.

12 And she ᵘ caught him by his garment, saying, Lie with me: and ˣ he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out.

13 And it came to pass, when she saw that he had left his garment in her hand, and was fled forth,

14 That she called unto the men of her house, and spake unto them, saying, See, he hath brought in an Hebrew unto us to ʸ mock us; he came in unto me to lie with me, and I cried with a * loud voice:

15 And it came to pass, when he heard that I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled, and got him out.

16 And she ᶻ laid up his garment by her until his lord came home.

17 And she spake unto him according to these words, saying, ª The Hebrew servant, which thou hast brought unto us, came in unto me to mock me:

18 And it came to pass, as I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled out.

19 And it came to pass, when his master ᵇ heard the words of his wife, which she spake unto him, saying, After this manner did thy servant to me; that ᶜ his wrath was kindled.

20 And Joseph's master took him, and ᵈ put him into the prison, a place where the † king's prisoners were bound: and he was there in the prison.

† This continued imprisonment, followed by the deliverance of the butler first, and finally of Joseph, indicates a high degree of legal civilization amongst the Egyptians at this period. In a despotic government they would all have perished at the first ebullition of anger."—Ed.

‡ This is the second instance of Joseph's extraordinary success, or, as the world would call it, good fortune. The scripture traces his progress to a higher source. "The Lord was with him, showed him mercy, gave him favour." The character of Joseph from his youth, was one of extreme transparency, if we may so speak; because one of unmingled honesty to man, and unfeigned piety towards God. Temporal success God may deny to his dearest child (Heb. 12. 6.) Yet still, piety towards God is the surest way to permanent favour and prosperity."—Ed.

their fellow, but less guilty, offenders! and malice against their persons puts on the cloak of zeal against their sins. O what a mercy, if such be brought to a timely sense of, and return from, their sinfulness at last! Especially ought we to exercise much tenderness and compassion towards such as we have tempted into sin. But is any thing so astonishing, as that this enormous wickedness, this unnatural incest, should be made by JEHOVAH the distant means of the incarnation of his only begotten Son! Behold how—where sin had abounded and reigned unto disorder, shame, and death—grace reigns, through righteousness, unto inconceivable honour, and everlasting life, by Jesus Christ our Lord!

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIX.—What need we have of humble hearts—for who knows how low and debased God may make our lot on earth!—But the advantage of God's presence and favour is in every condition chiefly to be desired. If he be with us, we shall be well wherever we are. His blessing makes rich and honoured; and without it all our labours are in vain. Godly and faithful servants are an inestimable treasure; and such as are wise will not fail to esteem and prefer them. Providential smiles are often but inlets to fearful and strong temptations, or to grievous and lasting distresses. But to what horrid lengths, in the most shameful wickedness, will such go as have once broken through the natural restraints of common modesty!—abandoned themselves, they can use the most shameless endeavours to draw others into sin. A fiery furnace is less to be feared than a beautiful abandoned woman. Flight is the only preservative from violent temptations to uncleanness: and surely it is better to hazard our life than to wound our conscience. But, in such most ensnaring temptations, a deep sense of the evil of sin, as offensive to God, and injurious to man, is the only thing that will effectually prevent compliance.—But how hard to obtain protection from a lying tongue! The best of men have been accused of the most atrocious crimes. And there is a great readiness in men to believe an evil report, especially against the professors of religion.—Here the most improbable story gains easy credit. How often guilt is honoured, and innocence oppressed and punished! Yet let me not be weary in well-doing, or in resisting unto blood, striving against sin; for the bitterest sufferings, with a good conscience, are to be preferred to all the pleasures of sin. Though persecutors should be deaf to my plea, there is one, JEHOVAH, who seeth and judgeth. In his time he will vindicate my character, and plead my cause. No prison can exclude his presence. He will certainly give me my reward in heaven, and perhaps part of it in a prison, where I shall be more out of the reach of temptation, and on the nearest way to my eternal, if not also my temporal, preferment. If God be with me, who can be against me?—— Meanwhile, let me, in Joseph, behold how Jesus was debased and exalted!—How he was in all points tempted by devils and men like as we are, yet without sin!—How he was persecuted without a cause! And how upheld of God, as the man in whom his soul delighted, till, for the sufferings of death, exalted at his own right hand in glory!

§ That "we take no note of time, but from its loss," is a just and striking observation. A birthday attained is really the loss of a unit from the sum of our years. Then how comes such a loss to be an occasion of congratulation and of feasting? Chiefly because worldly-minded men seldom retrace the "time past of their lives," (1 Pet. 4. 3.) or anticipate that portion of the future when they must give "account to him who (1 Pet. 4. 5.) is ready to judge the quick and the dead," but rather think it "strange" (1 Pet. 4. 4.) if Christian converts "run not with them to the same excess of riot." But how may a Christian observe a birthday? Pharaoh furnishes a useful lesson. 1. He employed his birthday in reviewing the affairs of his household; one servant, found innocent, he restored; another, found guilty, he condemned. So, a duty neglected, should by the Christian, be zealously resumed, a sin discovered, be unreservedly mortified. 2. A year lost from the amount of a Christian's natural days, should be so much gained to his experience of the grace of God. 3. The loss of the past, should lead him to "walk circumspectly, redeeming," improving, putting to the highest price, "the time, because the days are evil." Eph. 5. 16. 4. Let the anniversary of our natural birth, remind us that "unless we be born again," we can neither see, nor enter into the "kingdom of God." John 3. 3, 5.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XL.—Mark, my soul, in what slippery places great men stand; and how sudden may be their fall into destruction; their removal from a palace to a prison; nay, to a gibbet! It is much safer, as well as sweeter, to be the servants of Christ than of the loftiest monarchs on earth.—Strangely, but in wisdom, are the links of Providence connected. God can easily wound the stoutest spirits, and make their imagination subservient to the ends of his glory, and the advancement of his people. But distresses are often in the hearts of sinners, which themselves only know: and in his sovereignty God sometimes renders his people more clear, with respect to the future lot of others on earth, than with respect to their own. It is a mercy, even in a prison, to have one to compassionate our case: and communication of our griefs to godly men is a ready way to obtain solution of our doubts, and recover comfort in our afflictions. It is prudent to conceal the infirmity of our friends, even while we plead our own innocence: and in exculpating ourselves, we cannot be too careful to avoid reflecting upon those who have injured us. What great events are often connected with the transaction of a moment: and often the enlargement of the wicked is at hand, when that of the choicest saints lies at a great distance. Worldly advancements render men strangely thoughtless. No favour, or even gratitude of men, especially of great ones, can be safely depended on. Let me therefore always trust in the Lord, and be in his fear all the day long. But turn aside my soul.—Behold the man, who is God's Fellow, in prison and in judgment, on account of his persevering integrity and holiness!—Behold how the imaginations of Caiaphas the high priest, the stiffness of Pilate the Roman governor with respect to the inscription on the cross, and even the dream of his wife, concur to promote his honour!—Behold him on the cross moved with deep compassion towards even his enemies, and crowning one of his fellow-sufferers with eternal life,

CHAPTER XLI.

(1) Pharaoh's dreams of seven fat kine, and of seven large ears of corn: 1—7. (2) The chief butler remembers and recommends Joseph to Pharaoh; who interprets them: 8—36. (3) Joseph is appointed ruler over all the kingdom of Egypt: 37—45. (4) God gives him two sons, and Joseph purchases and lays up prodigious quantities of corn: 45—57.

A. M. 2289. B. C. 1715.

AND it came to pass at the end of two full years, that Pharaoh [a] dreamed; and, behold, he stood by [b] the river.

2 And, behold, there came up out of the river seven well-favoured [c] kine and fat-fleshed; and they fed in a meadow.

3 And, behold, seven other kine came up after them out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed; and stood by the other kine upon the brink of the river.

4 And the ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine. So Pharaoh awoke.

5 And he slept and dreamed the second time: and, behold, seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk, [†] rank and good.

6 And, behold, seven thin ears, and blasted with the [e] east wind, sprung up after them.

7 And the seven thin ears devoured the seven rank and full ears. And Pharaoh awoke, and, behold, it was a dream.

8 And it came to pass in the morning that [‡] his spirit was troubled; and he sent and called for all the [g] magicians of Egypt, and all the wise men thereof: and Pharaoh told them his dreams; but there was [h] none that could interpret them unto Pharaoh.

9 ¶ Then spake the chief butler unto Pharaoh, saying, I do remember my [i] faults this day:

10 Pharaoh was wroth with his servants, and put me in ward [k] in the captain of the guard's house, both me and the chief baker:

11 And we [l] dreamed a dream in one night, I and he; we dreamed each man according to the interpretation of his dream.

12 And there was there with us a young man, an Hebrew, servant to the captain of the guard; and we told him, and [m] he interpreted to us our dreams: to each man according to his dream he did interpret.

13 And it came to pass, as he interpreted to us, so it was; [n] me he restored unto mine office, and him he hanged.

14 ¶ [o] Then Pharaoh sent and called Joseph, and they brought him [p] hastily out of the dungeon: [‡] and he shaved [§] himself, and [q] changed his raiment, and came in unto Pharaoh.

15 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it: and I have heard say of thee, that [*] thou canst understand a dream to interpret it.

16 And Joseph answered Pharaoh, saying, [p] It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh an [†] answer of [q] peace. [‡]

17 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, In my dream, behold, I stood upon the bank of the river:

18 And, behold, there came up out of the river seven kine, fat-fleshed and well-favoured; and they fed in a meadow:

19 And, behold, seven other kine came up after them, poor, and very ill-favoured, and lean-fleshed, such as I never saw in all the land of Egypt for badness.

20 And the lean and the ill-favoured kine did eat up the first seven fat kine.

21 And when they had [‖] eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them; but they were still ill-favoured, as at the beginning. So I awoke.

22 And I saw in my dream, and, behold, seven ears came up in one stalk, full and good:

23 And, behold, seven ears, [¶] withered, thin, and blasted with the east wind, [*] sprung up after them.

24 And the thin ears devoured the seven good ears. And I told this unto the magicians; but there was none that could declare it to me.

25 ¶ And Joseph said unto Pharaoh, The dream of Pharaoh is [†] one: God hath showed Pharaoh [r] what he is about to do. [‡]

26 The seven good kine [s] are seven years; and the seven good ears are seven years: the dream is one.

27 [t] And the seven thin and ill-favoured kine that came up after them are seven years; and the seven empty ears blasted with the east wind shall be seven years of famine.

28 This is the thing which I have spoken unto Pharaoh: what God is about to do he showeth unto Pharaoh.

29 Behold, [u] there come seven years of great plenty throughout all the land of Egypt:

30 And there shall arise after them [x] seven years of famine; and all the plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt; and the famine shall consume the land: [§]

31 And the plenty shall not be known in the land by reason of that famine following; for it shall be very [‖] grievous.

32 And for that the dream was [y] doubled

§ This is one of many passages in which the truth of the scripture narrative is attested by an incidental and slight allusion to remarkable customs, which no mere inventor would think of noticing, or notice without explaining. Shaving was a remarkable custom of the Egyptians, in which they were distinguished from other oriental nations, who carefully cherished the beard, and regarded the loss of it as a deep disgrace. Here Joseph shaves himself in conformity with an Egyptian usage, of which this passage conveys the earliest intimation.

‡ We may observe here, that Joseph directs Pharaoh to look up to God, as the author of all these events; and that not in an ordinary, but extraordinary manner; since such fertility, and such famine did not proceed from mere natural causes, but from an overruling providence, which made the river Nile overflow its banks so largely for seven years together, and so occasion a great plenty; and then for the next seven years overflow very little, if at all, and so produce a very sore and long famine. Nor can it be objected to Joseph, that he was guilty of presumption or boldness, in giving his advice to Pharaoh concerning the provision that was to be made against the ensuing scarceness, since he was conscious to himself that he was best able to give such advice; and would have been guilty of the sin of omission had he neglected to do it, in so great and so general a concern.—Patrick.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLI.—Certain, though slow, is the execution of God's purposes of favour to his people; and by the most insignificant, or even extravagant, means he often accomplishes them. But when patience hath had her perfect work, God can easily furnish the means of his favourites' deliverance: and, when his time of delivering his people comes, he causes men to remember and to do their duty towards them; and effectually to accomplish his purpose. How amiable and excellent, when great gifts and great graces are adorned with the deepest humility, referring all the glory to God, and behaving modestly towards men! But changeable and perishing are all earthly enjoyments, especially desirable ones. Let me then use them with caution, and lay up in heaven a better and enduring substance; for it is infinitely necessary to provide without delay against future, against everlasting wants. In the meanwhile, we must esteem it an undeserved mercy, that

This faith if not derived from some earlier and unrecorded source, may be traced to the visit and sojourning of Abram, and the miraculous testimony (Gen. 12. 19.) which Jehovah then exhibited in the protection of Sarah, and which Pharaoh implicitly acknowledged in his remonstrance with Abram. NOW when Jacob [a] saw that there was corn in Egypt, Jacob said unto his sons, Why do ye look one upon another?

2 And he said, Behold, I have heard that there is corn in Egypt; get you [b] down thither, and buy for us from thence, that we may [c] live, and not die.

3 And Joseph's ten brethren went down to buy corn in Egypt.

God hath set prosperity and adversity, plenty and famine, debasement and glory, the one against the other. How glorious the character, in which extensive knowledge, firm friendship, active diligence, unshaken fidelity, forgetfulness of injuries received, and hearty acknowledgment of God in all things, are remarkably connected! Happy the nation, the management of which is intrusted to such persons! ——But chiefly rejoice, my soul, that Jesus was taken from prison and from judgment, and hath all power given to him, in heaven and on earth, in order to bestow blessings on perishing sinners! Rejoice that God hath made him to forget his labour, and made him fruitful in the land of his affliction! He seeth his seed, the travail of his soul, and is satisfied. And what a mercy is it that all nations have access to him, not to buy with money, but to receive all the blessings of time and eternity from him without money and without price!

CHAP. XLII. Ver. 7. Joseph dealt thus harshly with them, (1) That he might hereby procure a full account of the present state of his father's family: (2) That they might be the more thoroughly convinced of, and humbled for, their former sins, sent not with his brethren: for he said, [e] Lest peradventure mischief befall him.

5 And the sons of Israel came to buy corn among those that came: for the famine was [f] in the land of Canaan.

6 ¶ And Joseph was the [g] governor over the land, and [*] he it was that sold to all the people of the land: and Joseph's brethren came, and [h] bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth.

7 And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake [†] roughly unto them; and he said unto them, Whence come ye? And they said, From the land of Canaan to buy food.

8 And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him.

9 And Joseph [i] remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them, and said unto them, [k] Ye are spies: [‡] to see the [l] nakedness of the land ye are come.

10 And they said unto him, Nay, my lord; but to buy food are thy servants come.

11 We are all [§] one man's sons; we are true men, thy servants are no spies.

12 And he said unto them, Nay, but to see the [l] nakedness of the land ye are come.

13 And they said, Thy servants are [m] twelve brethren, the sons of one man in the land of Canaan; and, behold, the youngest is this day with our father, and one [n] is not.

14 And Joseph said unto them, [o] That is it that I spake unto you, saying, Ye are spies:

15 Hereby ye shall be proved: [p] By the life of Pharaoh ye shall not go forth hence, except your youngest brother come hither.

16 Send one of you, and let him fetch your brother, and ye shall be [*] kept in prison, that your words may be proved, whether there be any truth in you: or else, by the life of Pharaoh, surely ye are spies.

17 And he [†] put them all together [q] into ward three days.

18 And Joseph said unto them the third day, This do, and live; for [r] I fear God.

19 If ye be true men, let one of your brethren be bound in the house of your prison: go ye, carry corn for the famine of your houses:

* Next to his piety, Joseph's application to business forms the most remarkable trait in his character. "He it was that sold to all the people." He does nothing by proxy. The peculiar form of Egypt, two narrow plains lying on the two sides of a river, a river forming, as it were, the only highway of the kingdom,—will sufficiently account for the possibility of his personal superintendence by rotation, at the various places of sale, closing, for a time, at one, and then proceeding to another.—Ed.

‡ That Joseph, from his knowledge of his brethren's character, may have believed them capable of becoming spies, is within the limits of possibility. If he did so, and intended to deter them from any dangerous combinations and projects, his course was open and his intentions kind. But as it is said in ver. 7, that he spoke roughly to them, we rather conclude he was feigning; and, though his design was good, we may not excuse one word of dissimulation by which it was to be accomplished. Joseph is one of the most lovely and amiable of scripture characters, but one alone was perfect, who, "knew no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."—Ed.

These were sad tidings, indeed; and what made their poor afflicted father break out into this melancholy complaint: "That one way or other, him they had deprived of his children; that Joseph was dead, Simeon was left in Egypt, and now they were going to take Benjamin from him likewise, which were things too heavy for him to bear."—Slackhouse.

particularly their hatred, intended murder, and actual selling of himself: (3) To enhance their joy when he should discover himself: (4) To render the fulfilment of his own dreams the more conspicuous.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLII.—What a mercy it is to be assured, that in the Canaan above there is no scarcity, no want! And here on earth, one country can ordinarily supply the wants of another. But is it not strange that the accursed descendants of Ham should have plenty, when God's peculiar favourites, the seed of Abraham, are in want! Yet even this is evidently to bring about his purposes for his people, and to show us that all the mysteries of his providence shall display his power and wisdom, and in the issue bring greater benefits to his redeemed; and, in God's time, the most malignant opposers of his designs are made willingly to submit thereto, and accomplish the same. But, while trusting in the Lord, parents and masters ought to provide, with great care, for the external subsistence, and how much more for the religious edification, of their families! What harsh measures are sometimes necessary to awaken, and thoroughly convince, such consciences as have been long asleep and hardened in sin! but the fear of God, prevalent in the heart, effectually determines men to equity and benevolence, and restrains from tyrannical cruelty and injustice. Trying providences often recall sin to men's remembrance, and render that bitter which was formerly sweet. And it is indeed a needful stroke that awakens the conscience to a serious remembrance of former sins. When we share with others in their calamity, it is no small comfort to know ourselves clear of their guilt. How often God writes men's sins on their troubles! These Hebrews had sold their brother for money, and now his money fills them with dread; guilty consciences being subject to perpetual alarms. There is need of constant preparation for trials, as we often meet with them when and where they were least expected. But mournful is the case of families when mutual trust in one another is weakened. Surely there is great need of an holy disengagement from all creatures; for in proportion to our love to them, will be our fears of losing them, and our distress in parting from them. Very often the best of saints distress themselves with needless fears, that all things are against them, when they are really, † Balm, or Balsam, a general name for many of those resinous substances that flow from certain trees spontaneously or by incision. Josephus says the Balsam tree was brought to Judea by the queen of Sheba; and, although we find balm an article of commerce between Gilead and Egypt (ch. 37. 25.) yet this no more proves the balm to have been the produce of Gilead, than the other articles, confessedly of Indian origin. Pliny thus characterises it: "To all other odours the balsam is preferred, produced in no other part than the land of Judea, and even there, in two gardens only; both of them belonging to the king, one no more than twenty acres, and the other still smaller." Justin describes it as confined to the district of Jericho; and Maerite in 1766, confirms his statement. Honey. Either that collected by the bee from flowers, or the inspissated syrup of dates or grapes. Spices. The Septuagint translates it by a word signifying incense. Bochart thinks it storax, an odoriferous drug. Myrrh. A precious gum issuing spontaneously or by incision from a tree, was used in precious ointments and perfumes. It constituted part of the present to our Lord, Mat. 2. 11. and in John 19. 39. it is mentioned as one of the articles brought to embalm his body. The Myrrh in the text, Celsus concludes to be a different article, the product of the cistus ladaniferus, and a beautiful and fragrant shrub. Nuts. Probably the pistachia, which is nearly of the size and shape of the common hazel nut, with a little more angularity. nay, remarkably working for their good. And no wonder, when the very children, from whom distinguished comforts are justly expected, so often, by their wickedness, bring their aged parents with sorrow to the grave.——But now, my soul, when Jesus deals roughly with me, to convince and humble my proud spirit, or to try my love to himself and his Father, and to my fellow saints, let me always acknowledge my offences with brokenness of heart; and let me bless him who hath so planned, and so executes his schemes of redemption, that I am always obliged to return to himself, as my great supplier, in time of need.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLIII.—The trials, the sore trials of God's principal favourites, may often last long, and sink deep, before their deliverance come: but in difficult circumstances, where something dear to us is at stake, it is good to take the advice of others who are less interested. What a mercy is bread, that nothing earthly can supply the want of it! What then can supply the want of Jesus, the bread of life? In the use of every prudent endeavour to avoid danger, it is proper to commit our affairs to the Lord, and submit ourselves entirely to his disposal; but men, when their consciences are overcharged with guilt, are apt to

§ It is not likely the objection to eating with the Hebrews, arose from their being Hebrews, but because they were foreigners. The Hebrews were, as yet, too obscure a people to have excited any peculiar national antipathies. Such distinctions still remain both amongst civilised and barbarous nations. The Hindoo will not eat with the Christian, even one Indian caste will refuse to eat with another; and in the South Sea Islands, before Christianity appeared amongst them, men would, upon no account, have consented to eat in company with women. Even in Christian countries, refinement effects nearly as great a separation of ranks, as we find in Egypt, India, or the South Seas, effected by superstition and national antipathies. What a humanising ordinance is the Lord's table! where believers of all countries, ranks, and sexes, "tarry one for another," whilst at one table, they "being many, are one bread and one body;" and "are all partakers of that one bread." 1 Cor. 10. 17.—Ed.

(1) Joseph, to try his brethren's affection for Benjamin, causes every man's money to be returned in his sack, also his silver cup to be put in the mouth of Benjamin's, and accuses them as thieves: 1—5. (2) Benjamin apparently guilty: 6—13. (3) They all appear before Joseph: 14—17. (4) Judah's noble appeal, and generous devotedness: 18—34.

AND he commanded [a] the steward of his house, saying, Fill the men's sacks with [b] food, as much as they can carry, and put every man's money in his sack's mouth:

2 And put my [c] cup, the silver cup, in the sack's mouth of the youngest, and his corn-money. And he did according to the word that Joseph had spoken.

3 As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away, they and their asses.

4 And when they were gone out of the city, and not yet far off, Joseph said unto his steward, Up, follow after the men; and when thou dost overtake them, say unto them, Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good?

5 [*] Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he [†] divineth? Ye have done evil in so doing. [‡]

6 ¶ And he overtook them, and he spake unto them these same words.

7 And they said unto him, [d] Wherefore saith my lord these words? God forbid that thy servants should do according to this thing.

8 Behold, the money which we found in our sacks' mouths we brought again unto thee out of the land of Canaan: how then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold?

9 [§] With [e] whomsoever of thy servants it be found, both let him die, and we also will be my lord's bondmen. [‖]

10 And he said, Now also let it be according unto your words: he with whom it is found [*] shall be my servant; and ye shall be blameless.

11 Then they speedily took down every man his sack to the ground, and opened every man his sack.

12 And he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest; and the cup was found in Benjamin's sack.

13 Then they [f] rent their clothes, and laded every man his ass, and returned to the city.

14 ¶ And Judah and his brethren came to Joseph's house; (for he was yet there;) and they [g] fell before him on the ground.

‡ However good the intention, and kind the feeling of Joseph, we may not approve or justify an artifice accompanied by a false accusation, and, (ver. 15,) much unnecessary harrowing of his brethren's feelings. The result, no doubt, established them fully in his confidence, but, as it appears (chap. 50. 15,) did not establish their confidence in him.—Ed.

‖ The implicit confidence of so many brethren in each others' honesty, is a noble tribute to Jacob's education of his family.—Ed.

* Conscious of their own innocence, and disdainful of so vile a charge, they put the matter upon this short issue:—That whoever, upon search, should be found to have the cup, should be given up to suffer death, and themselves become all the lord's bound slaves. So said, so done; the beasts were unloaded, the sacks were searched, and to their great astonishment and surprise, the cup was found in Benjamin's. To no purpose it was for the poor youth to say any thing in his own defence, upon such a demonstration none would believe him; and yet, being all concerned in the disgrace, they loaded their asses again, and in a mournful manner returned to the city.—Stackhouse.

fear without ground, even where kindness is intended. In every circumstance, honesty is the best policy; and every success in business should be regarded as a treasure given by God to us. What tender passions possess the noblest of souls! Their earnest prayers to God for our welfare are a distinguished kindness. And, if persons with whom we deal have whimsical scruples, it is becoming to bear with them in love.——But, O my soul, forget not Jesus thy brother! Let all my troubles and wants oblige me to return to him, as my alone Saviour. And though he lift me up, and cast me down again, fear not, only believe, and thou shalt see the glory of God.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLIV.—The joys of this world are quickly changed into lamentation, mourning, and woe! But, amidst all its variety of changes, we cannot but observe that God exactly fulfils his purposes in his own time, and makes the proudest to bow before the righteous at his pleasure. How pleasant it is when brethren's hearts are so united, that one is willing to bear another's burdens, however heavy and grievous! And it is highly becoming when children cannot bear to see the grief and distress of their aged parents, but are using every method to promote their peace. Learn, O my soul, to walk circumspectly! Snares may be laid for me where I least expect them.—If I am wronged by false accusations, let me always observe and acknowledge the righteous hand of God therein. If I am overtaken in a fault, let my submission be humble and candid. Let me always give honour to whom honour is due; and be cautious in that which I utter before them. Let me 21 And thou saidst unto thy servants, Bring him down unto me, that I may [s] set mine eyes upon him.

22 And we said unto my lord, The lad cannot leave his father: for if he should leave his father, his father would die.

23 And thou saidst unto thy servants, [t] Except your youngest brother come down with you, ye shall see my face no more.

24 And it came to pass, when we came up unto thy servant my father, we told him the words of my lord.

25 And our father said, [u] Go again, and buy us a little food.

§ Judah describes very passionately their father's melancholy condition for the loss of his son Joseph; the extreme fondness he had for his son Benjamin; the difficulty they were under to prevail with him to trust him with them, so that he himself was forced to become security for his safe return; and that, if he should go home without him, his father's life was so wrapt up in the child, that he would certainly die with grief. Hath therefore than see the grief of his aged father, and his gray hairs with sorrow descending to the grave, he offered himself an equivalent for his brother: "Now, therefore, I beseech thee, my lord, let me, thy servant, abide here a slave, instead of the lad, and let him go up with his brethren; for how shall I see my father without him?" This moving speech, and generous offer, were what Joseph's soul could not withstand; and therefore, being able to contain himself no longer, he ordered all the company to leave the room, that he might have a more affectionate freedom in discovering himself to his brethren.—Stackhouse.

* Joseph's brethren sold him out of envy and hatred, how then does Joseph say that God did send me? simply because it was true. God can compel the wickedness and wrath of man to accomplish his purposes; (Psal. 76. 10.) and, while man acts from a wicked motive, God employs his service to accomplish his own gracious purposes. (See Acts 2. 23.) But, if man's wickedness finally accomplish God's purposes, are they neither to be grieved for, nor angry with their sins? this is not Joseph's meaning, he merely advises, "be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves:" such sorrow of the world worketh death, wherefore he immediately turns their attention from themselves to the sovereign providence of God, which might through grace, produce that "godly sorrow that worketh repentance to salvation." 2 Cor. 7. 10.—Ed.

injuries received, no length of time, extinguish or abate it. Let me be tender-hearted, kindly affectioned, forgiving my injurious, my abusive, brethren, as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven me. Let me carefully conceal their faults from the world; and, to the utmost of my power, render them good for evil. In so doing I shall heap coals of fire on their head; I shall sting, yea, I shall melt their hearts. And let me carefully provide for the support and comfort of my aged parents. Following peace with all men, and keeping death always in my view, let me be such a comfort to them, as may contribute to their leaving this world in a cheerful and a christian-like manner.—But let me here behold, as in a glass, with what affection Jesus reveals himself, secretly reveals himself, unto his brethren of mankind, who have been his betrayers and murderers!—and how they are confounded, how they are love-melted at his presence! how encouraged by the gracious words, the exceeding great and precious promises which proceed from his mouth! Let me behold what desire he and his Father have to place them with himself, in due time, in the best of the celestial abodes!—How reviving the hopes of being for ever with the Lord, and seeing him as he is; are to the dying saints; and how agreeable the tokens of approaching death are to them on that account!

24 And the [c] sons of Naphtali; Jahzeel, and Guni, and Jezer, and Shillem.

25 [d] These are the sons of Bilhah, which Laban gave unto Rachel his daughter, and she bare these unto Jacob: all the souls were seven.

26 All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, which came out of his [e] loins, besides Jacob's sons' wives, all the souls were threescore and six;

27 And the sons of Joseph, which were born him in Egypt, were two souls: [f] all the souls of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threescore and ten.†

28 ¶ And he sent [g] Judah before him unto Joseph, to direct his face unto Goshen; and they came into the land of Goshen.

29 And Joseph made ready his chariot, and went up to meet Israel his father, to Goshen, and presented himself unto him: and he [h] fell on his neck, and wept on his neck a good while.

30 And Israel said unto Joseph, Now [i] let me die, since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive.

31 ¶ And Joseph said unto his brethren, and unto his father's house, I will go up and show Pharaoh, and say unto him, [k] My brethren, and my father's house, * which were in the land of Canaan, are come unto me:

32 And the men are shepherds, for [l] their trade hath been to feed cattle; and they have brought their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have.

33 [m] And it shall come to pass, when Pharaoh shall call you, and shall say, What is your occupation?

34 That ye shall say, Thy servants' trade hath been about cattle from our youth even until now, both we and also our fathers; that ye may dwell † in the land of Goshen: for [n] every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians.

CHAPTER XLVII.

(1) Authorized by Pharaoh, Joseph settles his father and brethren in the land of Goshen, and provides for them there: 1—12. (2) By a prudent and equitable sale of the corn which he had treasured up, he renders the money, cattle, land, and persons of the Egyptians, the property of the king: 13—26. THEN [a] Joseph came and told Pharaoh, and said, My father, and my brethren, and their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have, are come out of the land of Canaan; and, behold, they are in [b] the land of Goshen.

2 And he took some of his brethren, even five men, and presented them unto Pharaoh.

3 And Pharaoh said unto his brethren, [c] What is your occupation? And they said unto Pharaoh, Thy servants are shepherds, both we and also our fathers.

4 They said moreover unto Pharaoh, For to sojourn in the land are we come; * for thy servants have no pasture for their flocks; for the famine is sore in the land of Canaan: now therefore, we pray thee, let thy servants dwell in the land of Goshen.

5 And Pharaoh spake unto Joseph, saying, Thy father and thy brethren are come unto thee:

my own, but also the God of my fathers. In all the changes of thy lot, consult the Lord's direction, and supplicate his presence. It is safe to go any where on earth, if his everlasting arms be about me, his covenant established with me, and his comforts delighting my soul.—God's promises, though they lie long under ground, will spring up, bud, and ripen at last. Let me therefore always take care of my whole family, and live in the firm assurance that on Jesus is the care of all the churches. Let me hope that, though my beginnings be small, they will, in God's time, greatly, and even quickly, increase. Wherever I am, in station or in place, let me attend to its relative duties, giving honour to whom honour is due; and let me never be ashamed of an honest calling, but endeavour therein to abide with God. Be it my care and happiness to live always near the heavenly state, and as little connected with carnal and worldly men as possible; that when it pleases God to call me hence, I may be willing and ready at his bidding.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLVII.—Let me never be ashamed of my relations, however low they be in station, if they be honest: nor let me ever be an idler, an inactive person, either in church or state. Activity and ingenuity in my profession are the way to preferment. What though man's days be shortened, and filled up with troubles, yet my life on earth, whether perplexed or prosperous, is but a pilgrimage to the better country above. In the meanwhile, let me highly esteem, 17 And they brought their [q] cattle unto Joseph: and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses; and he fed them with bread for all their cattle for that year.

18 When that year was ended, they came unto him the [§] second year, and said unto him, [r] We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord also hath our herds of cattle: there is not ought left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies, and our lands.

But go where I will, and enjoy what I may, let me keep sight of the promises, and of the everlasting abodes: and though, for a while, I content myself with this world as a lodging, let my care, my hope, be to go to the heavenly Canaan at my death, and be with Christ, which is far better. Even here also let me behold him presenting an elect world of his brethren before the great King, the Lord of hosts, and preparing mansions for them:—behold him as giving out of his unbounded stores all the necessary blessings of time and eternity, not for our money, our cattle, our land, our persons, but freely, according to the exceeding riches of his grace; and by his oath concerning the promises of our present peace and everlasting happiness!

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Here (1) Hearing of his father's sickness, Joseph and his two sons visit him: 1, 2. (2) After a rehearsal of God's blessing him at Luz, Jacob adopts, and blesses Joseph's sons, Manasseh and Ephraim; and, notwithstanding their father's interposition, prefers Ephraim the younger: 3—20. (3) In the assured faith of God's bringing his seed to Canaan, he bequeaths a particular spot of it to Joseph: 21, 22.

AND it came to pass after these things, that one told [a]Joseph, Behold, thy father is sick: and he took with him his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim.

2 And one told Jacob, and said, Behold, thy son Joseph cometh unto thee: and Israel [b]strengthened himself, and sat upon the bed.

3 ¶ And Jacob said unto Joseph, [b]God Almighty appeared unto me at Luz in the land of Canaan, and blessed me,

4 And said unto me, Behold, [c]I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people; and will give this land to thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession.

5 And now thy [d]two sons Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine; as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be [e]mine.

6 And thy issue, which thou begettest after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance.

7 And as for me, when I came from Padan, [f]Rachel died by me in the land of Canaan in the way, when yet there was but a little way to come unto Ephrath: and I buried her there in the way of Ephrath; the same is Beth-lehem.

8 ¶ And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, Who are these?

9 And Joseph said unto his father, They are my sons, whom [g]God hath given me in this place. And he said, Bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and I will [h]bless them.

10 (Now the eyes of Israel were [i]dim for age, so that he could not see.) And he brought them near unto him; and he kissed them, and embraced them.

11 And Israel said unto Joseph, I [k]had not thought to see thy face; and, lo, God hath showed me also thy seed.

12 And Joseph brought them out from between his knees, and he bowed [l]himself with his face to the earth.

14 And [m]Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head, guiding his hands wittingly; for Manasseh was the [n]first-born.

15 And [o]he blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did [p]walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day,

16 The [q]Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let my [r]name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac; and let them [s]grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth.

17 And when Joseph saw that his father laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it displeased him: and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head.

18 And Joseph said unto his father, Not so, my father; for this is the first-born: put thy right hand upon his head.

19 And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it: he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great; but truly his [t]younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations.

20 And he blessed them that day, saying, In thee shall Israel bless, saying, [u]God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh. And he set Ephraim before Manasseh.

21 ¶ And Israel said unto Joseph, [v]Behold, I die; but God shall be with you, and bring you again unto the land of your fathers.

22 Moreover, I have given [x]to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow.

[a] Joseph, who could not be long absent from court, took leave of his father, but not without giving strict charge to some of the family, that upon the very first appearance of danger, they should immediately send for him. Accordingly, as soon as word was brought him, that his father was dying, he took his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim with him, and went to visit him; who, when he heard that his favourite son was come, summoned all his spirits together, and was so far revived as to be able to sit up in his bed. —Stackhouse.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLVIII.—It is becoming, and highly profitable, for children to visit their godly parents in their dying moments: and while it is necessary for parents to make their last wills with the greatest exactness, that there may be no disputes relative to them after they are dead, it is peculiarly useful and pleasant for them to commemorate at such a time God's former kindnesses to their soul. How encouraging is it to found our prayers for, and our expectations of, the prosperity of our friends upon the promises of God, intimated to ourselves! and how pleasant to think of such deceased friends as we hope to meet in glory! The favours of God often exceed the hopes of his people, and sweetly compel them to the most abundant praise! and what a mercy is redemption through Jesus' blood! It is peculiarly precious in a dying hour and is sweeter than honey and the honeycomb. Surely it becomes those who have shared it, to mention the same, and bear testimony for God, for the encouragement of others whom they leave behind. How the sovereignty of God shines, in preferring one person or family to another! But rejoice, my soul, that the Lord hath made us Gentiles fruitful in the land of our affliction. He hath blessed our church with numbers and privileges far superior to those of Israel, his first-born. In infinite mercy, when our godly relations forsake us by death, our God remains with us! Nay, since Jesus has left us, by going to the Father, the Lord the Spirit supplies his place, to guard and guide us to the promised inheritance.

AND Jacob called unto his sons, and said, [a] Gather yourselves together, that I [b] may tell you that which shall befall you in the [c] last days.

2 Gather yourselves together and [d] hear, ye sons of Jacob; and hearken unto Israel your father.

3 ¶ Reuben, thou art my [e] first-born, my [f] might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power:

4 Unstable as water, [g] thou shalt not excel; because thou [h] wentest up to thy father's bed; then defiledst thou it: he went up to my couch.

5 ¶ Simeon and Levi are [i] brethren; [k] instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.

6 O my soul, come not thou into their [k] secret; unto their assembly, mine [l] honour, be not thou united! for in their anger they [m] slew a man, and in their self-will they [t] digged down a wall.

7 Cursed be their [n] anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel: I will [o] divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel.

8 ¶ Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall [p] praise: thy hand shall be [q] in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee.

9 Judah is [r] a lion's whelp: from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he [s] stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?

10 The [t] sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from [u] between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the [x] gathering of the people be:

11 [y] Binding his foal unto the vine, and his ass's colt unto the choice vine; he washed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes:

12 His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk.

13 ¶ Zebulun shall [z] dwell at the haven of the sea; and he shall be for an haven of ships; and his border shall be unto Zidon.

14 ¶ [a] Issachar is a strong ass couching down between two burdens:

15 And he saw that [b] rest was good, and the land that it was pleasant; and bowed his shoulder to bear, and became a servant unto tribute.

16 ¶ Dan shall [c] judge his people, as one of the tribes of Israel.

17 Dan shall be a [d] serpent by the way, an adder in the path, that biteth the horse-heels, so that his rider shall fall backward.

18 [e] I have waited for thy salvation, O LORD.

19 ¶ Gad, [f] a troop shall overcome him: but he shall overcome at the last.

20 ¶ Out of Asher [g] his bread shall be fat, and he shall yield royal dainties.

21 ¶ Naphtali is [h] a hind let loose: he giveth goodly words.

22 ¶ Joseph is a [i] fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall.

23 The [k] archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him:

CHAP. XLIX. Ver. 4. Whatever power or dignity the Reubenites had at first, they quickly lost it; Num. x. 18—21. Josh. iv. 12, 13. and xxii. with Judg. v. 15, 16. 1 Chron. xv. 18—26. They never rendered themselves famous by any noted exploit; nor did any judge, king, or prophet, that we know of, proceed from among them.——Ver. 6. They digged down the walls of the house where Hamor and Shechem secured themselves; or they seized upon oxen, and carried them off for a spoil. ——Ver. 7. The Simeonites had their inheritance in Canaan out of the lot of Judah; Josh. xix. 1—9: this being too small for them, they had to seize for themselves part of Arabia; 1 Chron. iv. 39—43; and it is said that many of them dispersed themselves among the other tribes, in the character of teachers. The Levites lived scattered among all the other tribes; and were the spiritual instructors of their brethren, and the collectors of the sacred revenues; Josh. xxi. 1 Chron. vi. xxiii—xxvi.——Ver. 8—12. The tribe of Judah was the most numerous and powerful of all; Num. i. 27. and xxvi. 22. 2 Sam. xxiv. 9. 2 Chron. xiv. 8. and xvii. 14—16. To them their fellow-tribes often submitted themselves; Judg. i. 2, and iii. 9, 10. and xx. 18; chiefly under David and Solomon; 1 Chron. xii. 1 Kings iv. many individuals of these adhered to them in the days of Rehoboam; 1 Kings xii. 17. 2 Chron. xi. 16, 17; Asa, 2 Chron. xv. 9. and xvi. 6. and xvii. 2; Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxx. 11; and after their return from Babylon; Ezek. xxxvii. 15—22. The tribe of Benjamin almost always adhered to them. In the march of the tribes, and in their going forth to war, God appointed them the precedence; Num. x. 14. Judg. i. 2. and xx. 18. The first of the judges was one of them; Judg. iii. 9, 10. The only kings, that ever God in mercy granted to the Hebrew nation, were of them; 1 Sam. xvi. 2 Sam. vii. Ps. lxxxix.—Their conquests and spoils were peculiarly remarkable; Judg. i. 2 Sam. iii. 1. and viii. x. xxi. 2 Chron. xiii. xiv. xx. xxvi. Is. xxxiii. 4. and xxxvii. 36. In Canaan they had the first lot of the country assigned them; it was very extensive and fertile; it abounded with vines and pastures, which rendered wine and milk almost as common as water.—But the predictions respecting this tribe have their principal accomplishment in Jesus Christ, who is the Lion of the tribe of Judah, to whom God hath given all power in heaven and in earth; Mat. xxviii. 18; Ps. lxxii. and whom he hath commanded all men to adore; John v. 22, 23. Phil. ii. 9—11. He conquers all his and his people's enemies; Col. ii. 14, 15. Ps. cx. He bestows a fulness of grace and glory upon his people; Ps. lxviii. 12, 18. He is the true vine, who prepares for his people the wine and milk of gospel-truths, ordinances, influences, and blessings; Is. lv. 1. Joel iii. 18. He is called Shiloh, that is, the Author of our peace, prosperity, and salvation; Is. ix. 6, 7. Micah v. 5. Eph. ii. 14. Jer. xxiii. 6. Mat. i. 21. Till he came in the flesh (Mat. i. Luke xi.), the tribe of Judah not only retained its distinct form as a tribe, (which none of the rest, no not that of Benjamin, properly did,) but retained a governing power in its princes, judges, kings, deputies of the Chaldean, Persian, and Grecian monarchs, Maccabean governors or kings, or in the Sanhedrim, or great council of their elders. Scarcely had Jesus appeared in the flesh, when Judea was altogether reduced into a Roman province, having no sovereign but the Roman emperor; John xix. 12, 15. No sooner had the gathering of the Gentiles to Shiloh taken place, by the spread of the gospel, than the city and temple of Jerusalem were destroyed, the constitution of their church and state dissolved, and themselves scattered, as vagabonds, among all nations, to be standing witnesses, for many generations, that he is come.——Ver. 16, 17. Though the Danites were the offspring of a concubine, they had as much power as the other tribes sprung of free women. They harassed the Philistines in Samson and others; Judg. xiii—xvi. But they proved a stumbling-block to the other tribes by their idolatry; Judg. xviii. 29—31.——Ver. 18. I pray for, and expect, the promised deliverances to myself and posterity, but especially that spiritual and eternal salvation, to be accomplished by the Son of God in human nature.——Ver. 19. The Gadites were exceedingly exposed to the invasions and ravages of the Ammonites, Arabians, Syrians, Assyrians, &c. Judg. x. 8 1 Sam. xi. 1, 2. 2 Kings x. 33. and xv. 29. 1 Chron. v. 26.——Ver. 22. Joseph's posterity spread themselves far and wide, dwelling on both sides of Jordan; Josh. xii. 6. xiii. 7. and xvi. 17.——Ver. 24. Joseph's graces continued firm; enabling him to withstand temptations, endure injuries, and perform duties: and his honours were secured to him. He was a shepherd, to direct and provide for the Hebrews in Egypt, and the stone, under God, upon whom their happiness and safety were founded in that country. Joshua, who brought them into Canaan, sprung of him.——Ver. 25. God blessed his posterity with plenteous rains and dews, with fountains of water, and with multitudes of children, richly supplied with every enjoyment.——Ver. 26. Jacob's blessings excelled those of Abraham and Isaac; (1) In their extent; none of his children being excluded, as Ishmael and Esau had been. (2) In their distinct clearness: the land of Canaan, which had been formerly bequeathed in general, was now distributed to Joseph and his brethren. (3) In the apparent nearness of fulfilment; his posterity now increasing fast.—Joseph was separated from his brethren, when he was sold into Egypt, and afterwards by his distinguished honours there.

24 But his [1] bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the [m] Shepherd, the stone of Israel;)

25 Even by the [n] God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall [o] bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb:

26 The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the [p] everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was [q] separate from his brethren.

27 ¶ Benjamin shall [r] ravin as a wolf: in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil.

28 ¶ [s] All these are the twelve tribes of Israel: and this is it that their father spake unto them, and blessed them; every one according to his blessing he blessed them.

29 ¶ And he charged them, and said unto them, I am to be [t] gathered unto my people: bury me with my fathers in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite;

30 In the cave that is in the field of Machpelah, which is before Mamre, in the land of Canaan, [u] which Abraham bought with the field of Ephron the Hittite, for a possession of a burying-place.

31 [u] (There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife; there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife; and there I buried Leah.)

32 The purchase of the field, and of the cave that is therein, was from the children of Heth.

33 And when Jacob [†] had made an end of commanding his sons, [y] he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his people.

AND Joseph [a] fell upon his father's face, and wept upon him, and kissed him.

2 And Joseph commanded his servants the physicians to [b] embalm his father: and the physicians embalmed Israel.

3 And forty days were fulfilled for him; (for so are fulfilled the days of those which are embalmed;) and the Egyptians [c] mourned for him threescore and ten days.

4 ¶ And when the days of his mourning were past, Joseph [d] spake unto the house of Pharaoh, [*] saying, If now I have [e] found grace in your eyes, speak, I pray you, in the ears of Pharaoh, saying,

5 [f] My father made me swear, saying, Lo, I die: in my grave which I have [g] digged for me in the land of Canaan, there shalt thou [h] bury me. Now therefore let me go up, I pray thee, and bury my father, and I will come again.

6 And Pharaoh said, Go up, and bury thy father, according as he made thee swear.

7 ¶ And Joseph went up to bury his father: and with him went up all the [†] servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt,

8 And all the house of Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's house: only their little ones, and their flocks, and their herds, they left in the land of Goshen.

9 And there went up with him both chariots and horsemen: and it was a very great company.

10 And they came to the threshing-floor of Atad, which is [‡] beyond Jordan; and there they mourned with a great and very sore lamentation: and [k] he made a mourning for his father seven days.

* It was against rule for any person, how great soever, in mourning apparel, to appear in public, and especially in the royal presence, because in that state they were looked upon as defiled; and therefore Joseph does not go himself, but desires some of the courtiers to carry his request to the king; and this request he was the rather bound to make, because the retinue and guard which the pomp of the funeral, and the danger of molestation from enemies, made necessary, could not be obtained without the king's leave.—Musculus.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLIX.—How important is the proper work of a death-bed! for dying parents solemnly to pray for, to warn and to direct, their surviving children, is useful and becoming. The sins of parents often entail disgrace and misery upon their posterity; and the blessing of God fixes most remarkably where, for a time, there is the least appearance of it. But the lots of mankind, even in the same family, are greatly diversified. Let me therefore, first of all, and above all, make choice of Jesus, the once promised SHILOH, and now glorified Lord and Christ, and of his salvation, and then be content with such things as I have. Amidst all my work on earth, let me seek and wait for the salvation of God, that when I have finished my course, I may be gathered to Jesus and his people above!—But is not the now-departed patriarch a glass to show me my Redeemer? Is not he justly named Jacob and Israel? How long expected, earnestly desired, and supernatural, was his birth! Divinely was he chosen to be the Father of the saved nations of elect men, the peculiar people of God. He took the first Adam by the heel, fulfilling the covenant which he had broken: he supplanted and overthrew Satan and his works in the world; and, by his bloody service and suffering, he purchased his mediatorial heirship of all things. What inestimable blessings he obtained for men, by offering himself to God in the likeness of sinful flesh! In this his work of love, how exposed to trouble from Jewish brethren, rom Satan, the father of his bride, and from JEHOVAH, his offended Father above! How distressful his earthly exile! Hard was his service, numerous his sorrows, unsettled his lot, and remarkable his plainness and integrity. What love he bears to his mother and spouse the church! Faithful was he in his work, prevalent is he in his intercession, and glorious and extensive in his reward; for in the multitude of his redeemed he shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied. Having finished his work, and blessed his disciples, he retired to his rest in the heavenly Canaan—the midst of the throne of God. And innumerable multitudes of spiritual seed spring from his twelve apostles, those dignified patriarchs in the gospel church.

CHAP. L. Ver. 2. It has been customary with many nations to embalm the dead bodies of persons of rank, taking out the bowels, and so seasoning the body with salt and spices, &c. as to preserve it long from putrefaction. In Egypt they carried this art to such a degree, that bodies embalmed remained uncorrupted for thousands of years; which are now sometimes sold in Europe under the name of mummies. ——Ver. 3. It was the custom of the Egyptians to mourn seventy days for their dead, and of the Hebrews to mourn seven; 1 Sam. xxxi. 13; and just so long the joy of the latter lasted at their solemn weddings; ch. xxix. 27. Judg. xiv. 17. ——Ver. 10. Beyond Jordan, in the books of Moses, denotes the west side of Jordan, as he delivered his writings on the east of it. In other parts of scripture the phrase denotes the east of Jordan, as the writers lived on the west of it. Some, however, think that the Hebrew word signifies either beyond or on this side.——Ver. 17. Joseph wept, pitying their perplexity, and grieved at their jealousy of his good will.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. L.—With tender affection ought children and others to take their last farewell of dying friends; and with due care should they be decently interred. Yea, in every case it is kind and dutiful, by partaking, to alleviate the sorrows of the afflicted. It is proper that servants have their master's permission to attend work of their own, be it ever so necessary; nor should that permission be withheld upon a reasonable request. What a loss to a country, what an alarming call to preparation for eternity, is the death of one of God's chief favourites! But it is comely to have an amicable correspondence settled between 11 And when [l] the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, saw the mourning in the floor of Atad, they said, This is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians: wherefore the name of it was called [o] Abel-mizraim, which is beyond Jordan.

12 And his sons did unto him [m] according as he commanded them:

† As soon as their father was buried, Joseph's brethren began to reflect on the wrongs they had formerly done him, and were not a little apprehensive that as he had the power, he might have it in his intention, to avenge himself of them: and therefore they consulted together, and framed this message: —That it was their father's earnest request, that he should forget all past injuries, and continue them under his protection as formerly. This, when Joseph heard, such was his compassionate temper, that he could not refrain from weeping, and therefore to remove their fears, he sent immediately for them, and receiving them with the same kind affection as when their father was alive, excused the actions committed against him, in such an obliging manner, and gave them such assurances of his future love and adherence to them upon all occasions, as made them return to their families full of joy and satisfaction.—Stackhouse.

friends on the occasion of the death of their common relations. And it is altogether unlike a Christian to make the death of friends, especially parents, a mean of commencing strife and debate, on account of some carnal bequeathments. Difficult is the work of quieting a guilty conscience, if thoroughly awakened: but it were hard-hearted, indeed, to refuse forgiveness of injuries, especially when requested by such as are at once our brethren, and the servants of the God of our fathers. And when penitential confessions of injury done meet with a ready forgiveness from the receiver, it is highly ornamental and becoming; at the same time it is necessary for offenders principally to deal with God himself, through the blood of his Son. But to finish a religious life in the vigorous exercises of faith on God's promises, and in high friendship with his people, must be the summit of the true Christian's desire. Meanwhile, amidst the deaths of useful relations, that our God cannot die, cannot leave us, and can and will deliver us out of all our distresses, is a source of unfailing comfort and abiding consolation.

THE SECOND BOOK OF MOSES

CALLED

EXODUS,

CONTAINS a history of one hundred and forty-five years, and therein exhibits the fulfilment of God's promises to the patriarchs, in the multiplication of their seed, and their deliverance from bondage in Egypt; and represents the establishment of those laws and ordinances which God required them to observe as memorials of his favours.—We have here particularly represented the tyranny of Pharaoh king of Egypt; the cruel bondage and marvellous increase of the Israelites; the birth, education, and exile of Moses; his and his brother Aaron's divine mission to deliver their brethren; the ten plagues inflicted on the Egyptians for refusing to let the Israelites leave their country; and their destruction in the Red Sea; the Hebrews' celebration of the passover, departure from Egypt, and safe passage through the Red Sea; God's sustenance of them by sweetened water, or water from a flinty rock, and by quails and bread from heaven; his laws relative to the passover, feast of unleavened bread, firstlings, manna, &c.; his solemn publication of his moral law from mount Sinai; his directions relative to their civil and religious conduct; his entrance into covenant with them; chap. i—xxiv: his directions concerning the tabernacle and its furniture, and concerning the apparel and consecration of his priests; the Hebrews' idolatrous making and worshipping the golden calf; Moses' intercession for them, and God's gracious reconcilement by means of it; their voluntary contribution for, and actual making and erecting, the tabernacle and its whole furniture; chap. xxv—xl. There are, perhaps, more types of Christ in this than in any other book in the Bible.

CHAPTER I.

Contains an account (1) Of God's kindness to the Israelites, in multiplying them exceedingly; 1—7. (2) Of the Egyptians' cruelty to them on that account, in oppressing them with hard labour, and in appointing the midwives and others to murder their male children: 8—16, 18, 22. (3) Of God's more abundant multiplication of them, and rewarding the midwives' refusal to murder their babes: 12, 17—21.

5 And all the souls that came out of the [a] loins of Jacob were [b] seventy souls: for Joseph was in Egypt already.

6 And [c] Joseph died, [†] and all his brethren, and all that generation.

7 [d] And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them.

8 ¶ Now there arose up a [e] new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph.

9 And he said unto his people, [f] Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we:

10 [g] Come on, let us deal wisely with them; lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that, when there falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so [h] get them up out of the land.

11 Therefore they did set over them task-masters to [i] afflict them with their burdens. And they built for Pharaoh treasure-cities, Pithom and Raamses.

12 But the more they afflicted them, [k] the more they multiplied and grew. And they were [l] grieved because of the children of Israel.

13 And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with [m] rigour:

14 And they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field: all their service, wherein they made them serve, was with rigour.

15 ¶ And the king of Egypt [‡] spake to the Hebrew midwives; (of which the name of the one was Shiphrah, and the name of the other Puah;)

16 And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools; if it be a son, then ye shall [n] kill him; but if it be a daughter, then she shall live.

17 But the midwives [o] feared God, and did not as the king of Egypt commanded them, but saved the men-children alive.

3 And when she [c] could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein; and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink.

4 And his [d] sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

5 ¶ And [e] the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river side: and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it.

6 And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. [f] And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children.

7 Then said his [g] sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?

8 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, Go.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I. VER. 8. Perhaps this king pertained to a new family, which obtained the throne about an hundred years after the Hebrews went down to Egypt.——Ver. 10. The Israelites about this time began their compliance with the Egyptian idolatry, for which God justly punished them by the hand of the Egyptians; Josh. xxiv. 14. Ezek. xx. 7, 8. and xxiii. 8. Ps. cv. 25.——Ver. 11. Perhaps these cities were not only intended for depositing the stores of the country, but also for protecting it from the Arabs, Philistines, and others on the north-east, or for retaining the Hebrews in their bondage.——Ver. 19. Probably, by virtue of the special assistance of God, it was really so with many of the Hebrew women.——Ver. 21. While God exceedingly multiplied the Hebrews, he increased the families and happiness of the midwives.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—One generation quickly passes away, and another comes. Those who wax great or numerous should therefore remember their original meanness. Remarkable is the birth of God's promise when its full time comes. In two hundred and fifteen years, Abraham's promised seed had increased to seventy persons: in as many more they are increased to about three millions. Services done to men are soon forgotten, but those done to God are had in everlasting remembrance. At the same time, God's kindness often sharpens men's cruelty. And to what horrid and savage barbarity their selfish designs often push them! But it is vain for devils or men to contend with the Lord. Their best laid attempts against his designs will but promote their accomplishment: and God's church often thrives best in the fiery furnace of troubles, continued one after another. Let me therefore always depend on God; always obey God rather than man. Never let such as are barbarous themselves make me an instrument of their cruelty; for, if I hide or help God's outcasts in the day of their distress, he is not unfaithful to forget my labour of love, and may perhaps repay me in kind.

CHAP. II. Ver. 2. She had born Miriam about ten, and Aaron about four, years before.——Ver. 6. Pharaoh's daughter knew this from her father's cruel edict, or from the beauty and circumcision of the babe.——Ver. 11. And the maid went and called the child's [h] mother.

9 And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. And the woman took the child, and nursed it.

10 And the child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, and he became her [i] son. And she called his name [*] Moses: and she said, Because I drew him out of the water.

11 ¶ And it came to pass in those [†] days, when Moses was [k] grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens: and he [l] spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren.

12 And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand.

13 [m] And when he went out the second day, behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together: and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow?

14 And he said, Who made thee a [n] prince and a judge over us? [‡] Intendedst thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? And Moses [o] feared, and said, Surely this thing is known.

15 Now, when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses [p] fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of [q] Midian: [§] and he sat down [r] by a well.

16 ¶ Now the [s] priest of Midian had seven [t] daughters: and they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock.

18 [*] And when they came to Reuel their [x] father, he said, How is it that ye are come so soon to-day?

19 And they said, An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds, and also drew water enough for us, and watered the flock.

20 And he said unto his daughters, And where is he? why is it that ye have left the man? [y] call him, that he may eat bread.

‖ Though learned and bred at a court, Moses could turn his hand to such an office as this when there was occasion, and loved to be doing justice, assisting the helpless, and appearing in the defence of such as he saw injured. The conduct of Moses affords a lesson to those who have received a liberal education, not to be above working with their hands, as they know not to what circumstances they may be reduced in the course of providence.

NOW Moses [a] kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the priest of Midian: and he led the flock to the back-side of the desert, and came to the [b] mountain of God, even to Horeb. [*]

2 And the [c] Angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush: and he looked, and, behold, the [d] bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed.

3 And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this [e] great sight, why the bush is not burned.

4 And when the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, [f] Moses, Moses! And he said, Here am I.

5 And he said, [g] Draw not nigh hither: [h] put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.

6 Moreover he said, [i] I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses [k] hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God.

7 ¶ And the LORD said, I have surely [l] seen heading them in a rebellion.——Ver. 16. Reuel was a prince or priest of the true God among the Midianites, who dwelt along the coast of the east branch of the Red Sea; as Melchizedek was among the Canaanites; Gen. xiv. 18: but whether he was the same with Jethro, and Hobab was his son, or whether Reuel was Jethro's father, and Jethro the same as Hobab, is not very evident; compare ch. iii. 1. with xviii. 1, 27. Num. x. 29.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—While wicked men exert themselves for the ruin of God's church, he is often preparing matters for her deliverance, though frequently his great works and his greatest instruments are apparently almost stifled in their birth. When God calls to it, it is becoming, with cheerfulness and confidence, to venture every thing which concerns us on his providence. But strong faith in God ought always to be attended with the use of the most proper means which are in our power. It is easy for God to raise up friends to his distressed children among his principal enemies; or to find out methods for qualifying beforehand such as he intends for great work. And it is honourable for the greatest to observe and sympathize with the meanest in their adversities, and to be made the instrument of their relief: and where faith in and love to God duly prevail in the heart, no carnal consideration will deter such an one from joining himself to God's church and people. The sincerest kindness and friendship is frequently requited with abuse and contempt, and the strongest carnal affection quickly turned into murderous rage. But God regards even the affectionate design, and graciously provides a place of refuge for his persecuted friends and servants, where they may be safe and useful. No change of lot, no change of country, can make us lose the enjoyment of our God; nor deprive us of him as our reconciled God in Christ, to sympathize with us in, and bring us safely through, our most grievous afflictions.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. Horeb or Sinai was called the mount of God, as he at this time appeared on it, and soon after proclaimed his laws from it; ch. xix. xx.—— Ver. 2. This flame represented the awful majesty, perfect purity, and infinite power of God. The bush burning and not consumed, denotes the church of God, and particularly the Israelites, in their state debased, exposed, persecuted, and afflicted; but preserved by the presence and power of God; John xvi. 33. Acts xiv. 22. Ps. xlvi. 1—5. But perhaps it chiefly prefigured the Godhead as dwelling in the manhood of Christ; and the terrible execution of divine vengeance upon him, while he was preserved by his Godhead, and his Father's residence in him; John i. 14. Col. ii. 9. 1 Tim. iii. 16. Is. l. liii. 2 Cor. v. 19, 21.——Ver. 5. The pulling off his shoes marked with what holiness, humility, and reverence we ought to approach unto God. —The ground was holy, was occasionally consecrated by the special manifestation of God thereon.——Ver. 6. God was the God of Abraham, &c. He was engaged to them by manifold promises, which he was now come to perform.——Ver. 7. I have seen, &c. the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry by reason of their taskmasters; for I know their sorrows;

8 And I am [m] come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land unto [n] a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey; unto the place of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

9 Now therefore, behold, the [o] cry of the children of Israel is come unto me; and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them.

10 Come now therefore, and I will [p] send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt.

11 ¶ And Moses said unto God, [q] Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt? *

12 And he said, Certainly [r] I will be with thee: and this shall be a [s] token unto thee that I have sent thee; When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, [t] ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

13 And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?

14 And God said unto Moses, [u] I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you.

15 ¶ And God said moreover unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, [x] The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you: this is my name for ever, and this is my [y] memorial unto all generations.

16 Go and gather the [z] elders of Israel together, and say unto them, The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, appeared unto me, saying, I have surely [a] visited you, and seen that which is done to you in Egypt:

17 And I have said, [b] I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt unto the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, unto a land flowing with milk and honey.

18 And they shall [c] hearken to thy voice: and thou shalt come, thou and the elders of Israel, unto the king of Egypt, and ye shall say unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath [d] met with us; and now let us go, we beseech thee, [e] three days' journey into the wilderness, that we may sacrifice to the LORD our God.

19 ¶ And I am sure that the king of Egypt will not let you go, [f] no, not by a mighty hand.

20 And I will stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with all my wonders which I will do in the midst thereof: and [g] after that he will let you go.

21 And I will give this people [h] favour in the sight of the Egyptians: and it shall come to pass, that, when ye go, ye shall not go empty:

22 [i] But every woman shall * borrow of her neighbour, and of her that sojourneth in her house, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: and ye shall put them upon your sons, and upon your daughters; and ye shall [k] spoil the Egyptians.

* The impartiality of the sacred historian in recording his own infirmities, errors, and transgressions in this and the several succeeding verses, peculiarly deserves our attention. Moses narrates the various objections which his unbelief made to the divine call, and his presumption and obstinacy in adhering to them, notwithstanding all that God condescended to say in reply. This openness and impartiality seems to be peculiar to the inspired writers, of which we have many examples, such as Samuel recording his own mistakes to the chosen of God in the family of Jesse, and the reproofs he received from God on that account; and, likewise, John the Divine states the great danger he was in of falling into idolatry, by worshipping an angel, and the check he received from the heavenly messenger, and many others which will occur to the mind of the attentive reader.

The word here rendered borrow signifies merely to ask: it was no sin thus to ask the Egyptians' property. God, the original and supreme proprietor of all things commanded it. The Egyptians had forfeited their right by their wickedness, with respect to him. Hereby, too, he, as a righteous Judge, ordered payment of their wages to the Hebrews, who had been defrauded.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—However long God seem to neglect, he will visit me at last. Let me therefore attend to my lawful calling, however mean, expecting his countenance in the way of my duty. If I desire solemn fellowship with him, let me retire from the world, and inquire into what he hath revealed. Let me always approach his presence with strong faith, holy awe, clean hands, and a pure heart. Let me, with joy and wonder, behold him as in Christ crucified, and as present in his church, to preserve her in her hottest troubles. Let me trust in him as my own and my father's God; and rejoice in the firmness and perpetuity of his new covenant relations to us. Let me admire his mercy and wisdom in appearing for the salvation of his people, when they have given over looking for him; and let me firmly hope, that, whatever be the unworthiness of the object, the weakness of the instrument, or the wickedness or power of the opposer, the Lord will exactly fulfil the promises of his grace. O may I have this great I AM to do all for me, give all to me, and be ALL IN ALL unto me! May I in every thing study to have his call cleared up and certified to me! May I receive my directions from him, what I shall say or do! May I labour after faithfulness in my work; and then, leaving it to the Lord, he will succeed my endeavours, and graciously reward me on their account; and the wrongs done to me in this world will be all rectified at last!

CHAP. IV. Ver. 3, 4. This change of his rod signified that his ministry and miracles would be destructive as serpents to the Egyptians, but helpful and directive to the Hebrews. In like manner, his laws are to unbelievers a killing letter, a ministration of death; 2 Cor. ii. 15, 16. and iii. 6; but to believers a means of life; Gal. iii. 24.——Ver. 6, 7. This signified, that God, with the utmost ease and despatch, can change the form of our lot; and that it was by the power of God, not his own, that he wrought his miracles.——Ver. 9. 4 And the Lord said unto Moses, [d]Put forth thine hand, and take it [e]by the tail. And he put forth his hand and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand:

5 That [f] they may believe that the LORD God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee.

6 ¶ And the LORD said furthermore unto him, Put now thine hand into thy bosom. And he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold, his hand was [g]leprous as snow.

7 And he said, Put thine hand into thy bosom again. And he put his hand into his bosom again; and plucked it out of his bosom, and, behold, it was [g]turned again as his other flesh.

9 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe also these [†]two signs, neither hearken unto thy voice, that thou shalt take of the water of the river, and pour it upon the dry land: and the water which thou takest out of the river shall become [i]blood upon the dry land.

11 And the LORD said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? [l]have not I the LORD?

12 Now therefore go, and [m]I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.

13 And he said, O my Lord, [n]send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou [‖]wilt send.

14 And the [o]anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses, and he said, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can [p]speak well. And also, behold, he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart.

e The faith of Moses is tried and exemplified in this first act of obedience. To grasp the serpent by the neck, would have been the dictate of human experience and wisdom, as even the lower animals that destroy serpents practise this method. But Moses obeys God without gainsaying, and though he did on his own impulse, he fearlessly seizes it by the tail, on God's authority. —Note. We are not to combat sin and Satan by our own wisdom and plan, but by God's revealed command.—Ed.

* God's hardening of Pharaoh's heart, has been a subject of much difficulty to some and of reproach to others. There is no room for either. The creditor who demands his own from a dishonest debtor, can practically explain the meaning of the phrase. So long as he makes no demand, the debtor seldom thinks of him; when he makes the first demand, he thinks of him with aversion—an aversion increased by every repetition of his claim, and when that claim is enforced by the strong arm of the law, the heart of the unjust debtor is often hardened into determined hatred. But is this hardening any crime in the creditor? None. Who then shall charge Jehovah with being the author of sin, when the hardening of Pharaoh's heart arose from the just demand, that he would let his people go?—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Learn, my soul, never to be discouraged from present duty by former disappointments. God's promise is sufficient to balance all opposition. Let me accept of miracles recorded in God's word as the most convincing external proofs of a divine mission; and let me admire the kindness of God in so abundantly confirming the intimations of his will to mankind. Never should I excuse myself from the work to which God calls me, from any wickedness about others, or weakness in myself. God can make mountains his way, and qualify me as is necessary. Let me cheerfully connect the exercise of the gifts or graces which God hath given me in whatever order of precedence or subordination he pleaseth, employing them in the service he commands. But let no intended service of God render me undutiful to my relations; and, on the contrary, never let me fear men, when I have a clear call from God to my work, and a promise of his presence to be with me in it. Meanwhile, let no distance from the public ordinances of God, and the fellowship of saints, cool my zeal for his worship. Never let fond indulgence of my earthly relations make me to neglect any part of God's

(1) Pharaoh chideth Moses and Aaron, and impiously disregardeth the authority of God, and increaseth the tasks of the Hebrews: 1—14. (2) Checketh their complaints: 15—18. (3) The oppressed people cry out upon Moses and Aaron: 19—21. (4) Moses complaineth to God: 22, 23.

AND afterward Moses and Aaron went in and [a] told Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold a [b] feast unto me in the wilderness.

2 And Pharaoh said, [c] Who is the LORD, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the LORD, neither will I let Israel go.

3 And they said, [d] The God of the Hebrews hath met with us: let us go, we pray thee, three days' journey into the desert, and sacrifice unto the LORD our God; lest he [e] fall upon us with pestilence, or with the sword.

4 And the king of Egypt said unto them, [f] Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, let the people from their works? get you unto your burdens.

5 And Pharaoh said, Behold, the people of the land now are many, and ye make them rest from their burdens.

7 Ye shall no more give the people straw [†] to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves.

† This cruel and oppressive mandate will not be rightly understood without alluding to the fact, that not only the stubble and the dry remains of grassy plants, which formed a substitute for straw were frequently burnt up, and entirely destroyed by hot winds, but that the grain with its straw was likewise consumed ere it was completely ripe for the sickle, and thus a scarcity prevailed to a greater or less extent almost every year.

§ The task-masters were Egyptians, the officers Hebrews, as may be seen by comparing this account with ver. 16, 17, 21. shall not diminish ought thereof: for they be idle; therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God.

9 * Let there more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein; and let them not regard [†] vain words.

10 ¶ And [‡] the taskmasters of the people went out, and their officers, and they spake to the people, saying, Thus saith Pharaoh, I will not give you straw.

11 Go ye, get you straw where ye can find it: [†] yet not ought of your work shall be diminished.

12 So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt to gather stubble instead of straw.

13 And the taskmasters hasted them, saying, Fulfil your works, your [‡] daily tasks, as when there was straw.

14 And the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, [§] and demanded, Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your task in making brick both yesterday and to-day, as heretofore?

15 ¶ Then the officers of the children of Israel came and cried unto Pharaoh, saying, [k] Wherefore dealest thou thus with thy servants?

16 There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they say to us, Make brick: and, behold, thy servants are beaten; but the fault is in thine own people.

17 But he said, Ye are idle, ye are idle; therefore ye say, Let us go and do sacrifice to the LORD.

18 Go therefore now and work: for there shall no straw be given you, yet shall ye deliver the tale of bricks.

19 And the officers of the children of Israel did see that they were in [l] evil case, after it was said, Ye shall not minish ought from your bricks of your daily task.

20 ¶ And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood in the way, as they came forth from Pharaoh:

21 And they said unto them, The LORD [m] look upon you, and judge; because ye have institutions, or of my religious duty towards them; if I do so God will make me to smart for it in his time. Nay, it is better to part with relations for a time, than to have them an incumbrance to us in the service of God. Whatever knowledge, gifts, or grace, God bestows upon me, it becomes me to improve them for the benefit of others, particularly of my fellow-labourers in the Lord; that with one mind, and one mouth, we may glorify God. But let my hopes never be too sanguine on the first promising appearances; for if grace do not really touch the heart, miracles themselves can produce but a temporary faith, a transient flash of religious affection.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—Let me here remark, that, however poor and despicable the people of God may be on earth, he will acknowledge them, and in his own time plead their cause. The most presumptuous rebellion against God's will is founded in ignorance of him; and, while persecutors obstinately cleave to their wickedness, God's people ought to be peculiarly careful of offending him. It is no new thing for carnal men to look on religious worship as useless or hurtful, and to improve God's demands upon his people as a spur to their own cruelty: and cruel princes never want cruel agents to promote their barbarous purposes. In evil times God's ministers may expect a double share of abuse at all hands; and be blamed as the causes of distress, when they are but the innocent and dutiful occasions of it. But what a mercy is it that they have a God to go to with their complaints! Surely there is need to believe in hope against hope, since the heaviest trials may happen, when we expect, and are even at the daybreak of, remarkable deliverances. Meanwhile, let me think of the bondage of heathenish and antichristian superstition, idolatry, oppression, and persecution, from which God hath delivered, and will deliver his gospel-church. But how much more oppressive is the bondage of our natural and unregenerated state!—the bondage to a broken law, which demands the perfect performance of every duty, and yet denies all strength for that effect! —the bondage to divers lusts, which lade men with guilt, drown them in perdition, and pierce them through with many sorrows!—the bondage to this world, in minding nothing but carnal things!—the bondage of the fears of death and hell, which often render life a burden!—and the bondage to Satan, who goeth about seeking whom he may devour! Blessed for ever be the Lord, who hath sent a Saviour and a great One to deliver us! Dare not, my soul, to murmur against him, though fires should go before him, and it should be very tempestuous round about him. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.

[o] We read (Gen. 12. 8.) that Abram called upon the name of JEHOVAH; that (Gen. 15. 2.) Abram said, JEHOVAH ELOHIM; but, still more expressly to the point, we read (Gen 15. 7.) "I am JEHOVAH that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees." How, then, are we to reconcile these statements with the assertion in the text? Some translate the word "knew" by appropriate, but this will not solve the difficulty, for Abram did appropriate God by faith. Some translate the sentence interrogatively, and it will bear this form: but, by this change, no explanation is gained. Let us then seek the meaning of the passage in the word JEHOVAH itself. JEHOVAH means, he that is, that always is, the unchangeable one. Now, the name "Almighty God," in which (Gen. 17. 1.) Abram was called and encouraged, refers to power to protect—the attribute which Abram's defenceless condition most required him to seek for the support of his faith; but the name JEHOVAH—the unchangeable—refers to time, and therefore requires promise, and long experience of faithfulness, to illustrate and establish its evidence. Thus Abram had abundant evidence that God was Almighty to defend and protect; but though his faith did not doubt, time did not allow him to test his unchangeableness; whereas, now, when centuries of changing time, and of God's apparent "slackness concerning his promise," (2 Pet. 3. 9.) had passed away, JEHOVAH, as the unchangeable, is made known to his people, and an attribute that time alone could develop, is that upon which God rests his chief claim to confidence and obedience.—ED.

‡ Moses has here recorded the marriage of his father Amram, with Jochebed and his own aunt, and it appears from Num. 26. 59, but it must be taken strictly for his father's own sister, at least by the half blood. The marriage was afterward forbidden as incestuous, Lev. 18. 12, which might be looked upon as a blot upon his family, though it took place before that law; and Moses does not conceal it, for he sought not his own praise, but wrote with a sincere regard to truth, whether it smiled or frowned upon him.

§ Aaron is here mentioned first as he was older than Moses. It is, however, usual in Scripture, as in the case of Shem, Abraham, and others, to name a younger brother first when there is any peculiarly excellent trait in his character; and thus we find Moses is generally mentioned before Aaron.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. God's strong hand, and stretched-out arm, denote the remarkable manifestations of his power, in plaguing the Egyptians, dividing the Red Sea, &c.——Ver. 3. God was not so much manifested to the patriarchs by this his name Jehovah, which denotes his self-existence, necessary existence, self-sufficiency, independency; and his being not only Being itself, but also the effectual and eminent giver of being to his promises and creatures; nor had he given actual being to his promises in the remarkable fulfilment thereof.——Ver. 7. He took them under his immediate government, that they might know and serve him, and receive from him his distinguished benefits, temporal and spiritual.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VI.—In our greatest extremity, God often interposes for our relief; and the hardest work is easily effected when he puts his hand to it. If his mighty arm of mercy or judgment be stretched out, when he begins he will make an end. Certain is that deliverance for which the character, the covenant, the pity, the purpose, and the power, of God, are all engaged; and yet the objects thereof, through anguish of spirit, or through his delay of performance, put his strong consolations from them. The frowardness of gospel-hearers makes ministers despair of success with others, and repeat the excuses which God hath already answered, till he charge them, on their peril, to obey his appoint-[*] Moses does not affirm that there was a perfect conformity between his works and those of the magicians; he makes choice of a word which does not necessarily express any thing more than a general similitude, such as is consistent with a difference in many important respects,—they did so, or in like manner.—Farmer.

[†] We learn from Paul (2 Tim. 3. 8.) that these, at least the chief of them, were Jannes and Jambres, and they withstood Moses, as Farmer judiciously intimates in the preceding note, not as some suppose, by performing, through diabolical power, the same miracle that Moses wrought by the power of God; but merely in like manner by what is called legerdemain, sleight of hand, and visual deception, with the privity, and through the connivance of Pharaoh, as, from Ch. 5. 19, will afterwards appear.—Ed.

[‡] That is, they became serpents to the eye of the spectators—Moses relating, not what actually took place, but what, to the senses, appeared to take place. The key to the inconsistent and vacillating conduct of Pharaoh is found, 1. In his total disregard of Jehovah, the true God, (Ch. 5. 2.) and 2. In the idolatrous principle, that gods were local, and of different powers, contending even in bitter rivalry for pre-eminence, and occasionally foiled or successful, according to fate and circumstances.—Note. How many are the destructive consequences of one original erroneous principle! Like the foundation on sand, it ensures the ruin of the superstructure.—Ed.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. Moses was a god to Pharaoh: he dealt with him in the name and authority of God, and punished his disobedience with plagues, which none but God could inflict.——Ver. 6. They manifested the noblest courage in speaking to, or dealing with proud Pharaoh, and the most exact fidelity in the execution of all God's commands.——Ver. 12, 22. Whether the magicians imposed upon the sight of the spectators by artfully conveying away the rods, and putting serpents in their places; or whether Satan actuated the rods, and made them appear as serpents; or whether, for the hardening of Pharaoh, God himself effected this change, is hard to determine. It was more easy to impose upon spectators, in turning the water into blood, or in bringing up frogs. But it is manifest, that all which the magicians did, increased the plagues, but could not remove them; and that the swallowing up of their rods by Aaron's, and their inability to produce lice, proved that Moses' miracles were effected by a power infinitely superior to what they had in command.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—How great is the condescension of God, in putting some of his honour upon sinful men, and in speaking to us by them, that his dread may not make us afraid! But, amidst trials and discouragements, ministers have need to be fully satisfied that, whatever contradiction they meet with, God shall be glorified by their work, both in them that are saved, and in them that perish. § The Septuagint, Origen and Jerome, translate the word mosquito gnat, an insect which from its habits, is known to be insufferably galling. Josephus, supported by the Jewish Rabbis, renders the word lice, a species of vermin, of which the Egyptians, from their singular attention to cleanliness, were peculiarly abhorrent. Others think it was the crocus sanguinarius, or greedy bloodsucker, a small tick which buried itself in the flesh of both man and beast, and this is countenanced by the phraseology of ver. 17. The Egyptian impostors could not imitate this miracle, because the plague was on themselves already, and therefore they acknowledged it to have been caused by the finger of God alone; and Pharaoh, aware of their former chicanery, in so often attempting to deceive him, refuses to believe them—looking upon the miracle as a mere temporary triumph of Jehovah. It is farther to be observed, that this plague, unlike the former two, was inflicted without any previous warning; so that Jannes and Jambres could make no preparation, and being taken unawares, acknowledged the finger of God, not because they honoured him, but to hide their own defeat. That this was the real state of the case, is rendered still more probable from their continued attempt to "stand before Moses," recorded in ch. 9. 11.—ED.

to them: but miserable indeed are they who know him to be God by the execution of his vengeance upon them! The contest between Almighty God and the strongest worms of mankind is greatly unequal: let the potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth; for, if men will not bow before the sceptre of his grace, they must break beneath the rod of his judgment. But, in mercy, God often warns before he punishes them. Sinners frequently desire to see miracles, not for their conviction, but to strengthen their unbelief. And readily is Satan permitted to harden such in their sin by his lying wonders. Through his influence, men harden themselves against warnings, against judgments and deliverances: and, whatever other shifts they try for relief, they will not so much as cry to God when he bindeth them. But the cause of God and truth shall prevail at last, and reign without contradiction: and dreadful shall be the just miseries of them who oppressed his people, and contemned his admonition!

[a] The Septuagint, which in all things referring to Egypt, must be considered high authority, translates the word, dog-fly—a most tormenting insect—others think it a species of beetle, of most destructive propensities and powers—whilst some believe it to mean "a mixture of venomous and ravenous creatures."—Ed.

[‖] That is, not what the Egyptians abominated, but what Moses, as a worshipper of the true God, called an abomination, because idolatrously worshipped by the Egyptians. But why does Moses employ such an offensive term to Pharaoh? Because if Pharaoh was an idolater, it was the duty of Moses to bear testimony against idolatry. The bull and the cow are the animals chiefly meant, both of which a Hebrew would have sacrificed, and an Egyptian most abjectly worshipped. That the Egyptians would have stoned the Hebrews, as Moses affirms, had they sacrificed a cow, is well illustrated by the fact—that, in after years, they put a Roman citizen of rank to death for killing a cat—another of their gods—though they exceedingly dreaded the power of Rome, and anxiously courted her favour.—Ed.

marvellous his kindness to his people, in distinguishing them from their fellow-sinners of mankind, and hiding them from common calamities under the shadow of his wings. But, alas! how quickly unrenewed hearts return to their wickedness; and reigning lusts break through every bond, and render men impudently presumptuous, and scandalously perfidious!—Let me, with Moses and Aaron, be bold and faithful in every point in the service of God! neither fearing the wrath of kings nor the opposition of devils; and let me always be ready to pray for mine enemies when I have any encouragement to it, any hopes of their change of heart, or of a blessing from the Lord upon them.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IX.—God can execute the most numerous, diversified, and extensive judgments upon such as hate him. He can easily make what we have idolized, whether our cattle, our bodies, or our fields, the immediate objects of our punishment; and how severe is the punishment which he hath laid up in store for such as have been most instrumental in deceiving and hardening others! Satan can delude men into sin, but he cannot preserve them from suffering. And, in tremendous sovereignty, God fixes on the objects of his wrath, and renders their prosperity the means of their ruin, to the praise of the glory of his justice. Though men may sport with his judgments, the indignation of the Almighty will most

I may smite thee and thy people with pestilence; and thou shalt be [p] cut off from the earth.

16 And in very deed for [q] this cause have I [*] raised thee up, for to show in thee my power; and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth.

17 As yet [r] exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go?

18 Behold, to-morrow about this time, I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail, [†] such as hath not been in Egypt since the foundation thereof even until now.

19 [*] Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field: for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, the hail shall come down upon them, and they shall die.

20 He that [t] feared the word of the LORD among the servants of Pharaoh made his servants and his cattle flee into the houses:

21 And he that [u] regarded not the word of the LORD left his servants and his cattle in the field.

22 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch forth thine [‡] hand toward heaven, that there may be hail in all the land of Egypt, [x] upon man, and upon beast, and upon every herb of the field, throughout the land of Egypt.

23 And Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven: and the LORD sent [y] thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground; and the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt.

24 So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, such as there was none like it in all the land of Egypt [z] since it became a nation.

25 And the hail smote throughout all the land of Egypt all that was in the field, both man and beast; and the hail smote every herb of the field, and brake every tree of the field. [§]

26 [*] Only in the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, was there no hail.

27 ¶ And Pharaoh sent, and called for Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, [b] I have sinned this time: the LORD is righteous, and I and my people are wicked.

28 [c] Entreat the LORD, (for it is enough,) that there be no more [d] mighty thunderings and hail; and I will let you go, and ye shall stay no longer.

29 And Moses said unto him, As soon as I am gone out of the city, I [*] will spread abroad my hands unto the LORD; and the thunder shall cease, neither shall there be any more hail; that [f] thou mayest know how that the [g] earth is the LORD's.

30 But as for thee and thy servants, I know that ye will [h] not yet fear the LORD God.

31 And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled.

32 But the wheat and the rye [*] were not smitten: for they were [†] not grown up.

33 And Moses went out of the city from Pharaoh, and spread abroad his hands unto the LORD: and the thunders and hail [i] ceased, and the rain was not poured upon the earth.

34 And [k] when Pharaoh saw that the rain, and the hail, and the thunders, were ceased, he sinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his servants.

35 And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, neither would he let the children of Israel go; as the LORD had spoken [l] by Moses.

3 And Moses and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, [d] How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me? [*] Let my people go, that they may serve me:

4 Else, if thou refuse to let my people go, behold, to-morrow will I bring the [f] locusts into thy coast: [*]

5 And they shall cover the [†] face of the earth, that one cannot be able to see the earth: and they shall eat the [g] residue of that which is escaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field.

† Rain is extremely rare in Egypt, and is seldom or never seen in Delta, or Egypt proper, and hence Claudian designates the country, Ægyptus sine nube ferax—Egypt fruitful without a cloud. In addition to this, hail and fire mingled with it, as it ran along upon the ground, to the great annoyance of their characteristic superstition respecting portents and prodigies. Strongly addicted to the worship of fire and water as deities, and the former they even believed to be a living creature, endowed with a soul. Hence, not only the presiding deity, but the elements themselves were adored, consequently the present judgment was a formidable attack upon their vain and idolatrous confidence.

§ Here we have a picture of the awful devastation and ruin this storm of hail produced; notice is however taken of the land of Goshen being preserved from receiving any damage by the plague. God directs the clouds, and causes rain or hail on one city and not on another, either in mercy or judgment. The effect it had on Pharaoh, is marked and striking. The haughty monarch humbled himself to Moses in the language of a penitent. No man could have indeed spoken better. He owns his wrongs, and the equity of God's proceedings against him, and, yet, as was seen in the sequel his heart remained hardened all the while; for those who grow no better under mercies and judgments frequently get worse.

that they were upon the earth unto this day. And he turned himself, and went out from Pharaoh.

7 ¶ And Pharaoh's servants said unto him, How long shall this man be a [i]snare unto us? Let the men go, that they may serve the LORD their God. Knowest thou not yet that Egypt is [k]destroyed?

8 And Moses and Aaron were brought again unto Pharaoh: and he said unto them, Go, serve the LORD your God; but who are they that shall go?

9 And Moses said, [l]We will go with our young and with our old, with our sons and with our daughters, with our flocks and with our herds will we go: for we must hold a feast unto the LORD.

10 And he said unto them, [*]Let the LORD be so with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones: [m]look to it; for evil is before you.

11 Not so: go now ye that are men, and serve the LORD; for that ye did desire. [n]And they were driven out from Pharaoh's presence.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch out thine hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt, and eat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left.

13 And Moses [†]stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an [o]east wind upon the land all that day, and all that night; and, when it was morning, the east wind brought the [p]locusts.

14 And the locusts went up over all the land of Egypt, and rested in all the coasts of Egypt: very grievous were they; before them there were no such locusts as they, neither after them shall be such.

15 [q]For they covered the face of the whole earth, [‡]so that the land was darkened; and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.

16 ¶ Then Pharaoh [§]called for Moses and Aaron in haste; and he said, [r]I have sinned against the LORD your God, and against you.

17 Now therefore [s]forgive, I pray thee, my sin only this once, and entreat the LORD your God, that he may take away from me this [t]death only.

‡ The locust is a creature akin to the cricket and grasshopper. The great brown locust is about three inches in length, has two antennæ or feelers, of about an inch long, projecting from the head, and two pair of wings. When they migrate from the place of their birth in the great African and Asiatic deserts, they always follow a leader, and appear in such immense flocks as to darken the air. In whatever country they settle, they devour all the produce of the earth; and though "the land be before them as the garden of Eden, behind them it is a desolate wilderness." Bochart enumerates ten species, differing in size and habits, but all agreeing in voracity. Their irruptions are frequent into many countries of Africa and Asia, and are not unusual in the southern parts of Europe, especially in Spain. When the locust-clouds appear, the consternation of the inhabitants of agricultural districts is extreme; and loud noises, fires, and even artillery are employed to keep them on the wing, for when they once descend hope of deliverance is over.—Note. How weak is a mighty monarch, and a mighty nation, when they contend with God, seeing they are unable to conquer an insect!—Ed.

* Some have rendered this "darkness which causeth to feel," but the expression as it stands is sufficiently intelligible, and although it is difficult, perhaps impossible, to account for the partial limits of the darkness, it was the will of God in this instance, it should be so drawn as to make a distinction between the Egyptians and the Israelites.

† Lightfoot, in his comments on the latter clause of Ps. 105. 28. "and they rebelled not against his word," conceives the language to allude to Israel, who in this plague of darkness performed some special act of obedience, and that upon inquiry will be found to have been the undergoing circumcision, and that there was a general circumcision in Egypt, appears from Jos. 5. 2—9. It would appear, therefore, that God closed up Egypt in three days' darkness, and in horror, that they might not take an opportunity of injuring the children of Israel, while suffering under this rite.

22 And Moses stretched forth his hand toward heaven; and there was a thick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days:

23 They saw not one another, neither rose any from his place, for [†]three days: [a]but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings.

24 ¶ And Pharaoh called unto Moses, and said, Go ye, serve the LORD; only [b]let your flocks and your herds be stayed: let your little ones also go with you.

25 And Moses said, Thou must give us also sacrifices and burnt-offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the LORD our God.

26 [c]Our cattle also shall go with us; there shall not an hoof be left behind: for thereof must we take to serve the LORD our God; and [d]we know not with what we must serve the LORD, until we come thither.

27 ¶ But the LORD [e]hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let them go.

28 And Pharaoh said unto him, [f]Get thee from me, take heed to thyself, see my face no more: for in that day thou seest my face thou shalt die.

29 And Moses [g]said, Thou hast spoken well; I will see thy face again no more.

no temptation to return.—[*]Ver. 29. Moses saw Pharaoh no more; for he denounced the death of the first-born before he left his presence at this time, ch. xi. 4—8; and when they were destroyed, Pharaoh only sent to him, ch. xii. 31.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. X.—Let me, with holy awe, observe, that God intends the judgments which he executes as standing memorials of his supreme power and authority over all creatures, and of his victorious power over the kingdom of Satan, in restraining the malice, and chastising the insolence, of his and his people's enemies. But there is nothing for which God more readily quarrels with men than for their pride. Whole nations are often ruined through the pride and obstinacy of their governors: and, when Satan has got sinners to the brink of ruin, he exerts all his might in pushing them down headlong. The early engagement of children in the service of God is exceedingly contrary to the inclinations and interests of Satan and his agents. But the proudest contemners of God's messengers will be obliged to stoop to them at last. Professions of repentance, extorted by punishment, are but hypocritical, and quickly issue in more obstinate relapses into wickedness: but such as baffle manifold convictions may expect to be given up to such hardness of heart, that nothing but the flames of hell will impress or awaken their conscience. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much: it often, for a time, diverts the just vengeance of God from his insolent enemies. The wicked need not therefore hasten the godly from among them; for, if once a full separation be made,

3 And the LORD [c]gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover, the man Moses was [d] very great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people.

4 ¶ And Moses said, [e] Thus saith the LORD, [f] About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt:

5 And all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the first-born of the maid-servant that is [g] behind the mill; and all the first-born of beasts.

6 And there shall be a [h] great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as there was none like it, nor shall be like it any more.

7 But against any of the children of Israel [i] shall not a [o] dog move his tongue, against man or beast; that ye may know [k] how that the LORD doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel.

8 And all these [l] thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me, saying, Get thee out, and all the people that [m] follow thee; and after that I will go out. And he went out from Pharaoh in [n] a great anger.

9 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [o] Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you; that my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt.

10 And Moses and Aaron did all these wonders before Pharaoh: and the LORD [p] hardened Pharaoh's heart, [†] so that he would not let the children of Israel go out of his land.

2 This [a] month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you.

a Ch. 13. 4. Deut. 16. 1.

3 ¶ Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall [b] take to them every man [c] a lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for an house:

4 And if the household be [d] too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbour next unto his house take it, according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.

5 Your lamb shall be [e] without blemish, a [f] male [g] of the first year; ye shall take it out from the sheep, or from the goats.

6 And ye shall [h] keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the [i] whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it [k] in the evening.

7 And they shall [l] take of the blood, and strike it on the two side-posts, and on the upper door-post, of the houses wherein they shall eat it.

8 And they shall [m] eat the flesh in that night [n] roast with fire, and [o] unleavened bread; and with bitter herbs they shall eat it.

9 Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof.

10 And ye shall let [p] nothing of it remain until the morning; and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.

11 ¶ And thus shall ye eat it; [q] with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste: it is the [r] LORD's passover.

12 [s] For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and against all the [t] gods of Egypt I will execute judgment: I am the LORD.

the former will be irrecoverably and inexpressibly miserable, and the just judgment of God will no longer tarry.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 3. Moses was very great; was much honoured, as one who could bring upon them fearful judgments, and remove them at his pleasure.——Ver. 4. I will go out; manifest my powerful and just vengeance in an eminent and extensive manner.——Ver. 7. They shall not meet with the smallest opposition or disturbance in their departure from Egypt.——Ver. 8. Moses' great anger manifested his detestation of Pharaoh's incurable obstinacy; and represented the terrible displeasure of God against him.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XI.—How extensive is the indignation of God! He has still, in life, one plague more to inflict, even death in sin, and damnation to attend it! Of this the guilty sinner has now warning; may the goodness of God lead him to repentance, lest his righteousness be manifested in his awful judgment! Meanwhile, by increasing his strokes of wrath, he can force men to fulfil his gracious purposes and kind promises to his people, if they refuse to do it willingly; and will make his favourites perfectly safe, even in the midst of their enemies. Nay, he will effectually redress the grievances, and repay the wages, of his people, in his own time and manner, and maintain the honour of his faithful servants, in despite of whatever hell and earth can do to oppose them! But what a bitter grief to the ministers of Christ is the hardness and obstinacy of sinners against the Lord and his Christ! And when sin is the object of our indignation, we may be angry and sin not.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 2. The month Ahib, which nearly corresponds to our March, was the seventh of the common year among the Egyptians and others, all along, I suppose from the creation; but was made the first of the Jewish sacred year now established by God, according to which the ceremonial festivals were to be regulated: but they continued to reckon by the ancient year in their civil matters; and even the years of jubilee and release began, in the ancient manner, about September, as then the crop was entirely off the ground.——Ver. 3. The taking of the lamb four days before the time, prevented their neglect, and stirred them up to the consideration of, and faith in, their approaching deliverance.——Ver. 4. Every family of these, so joined together, paid their respective share of the lamb's price.——Ver. 6. The lamb was killed between three o'clock in the afternoon and sunset.——Ver. 8. The bitter herbs were endive, succory, wild lettuce, thyme, or the like.——Ver. 9. The word rendered raw signifies not thoroughly roasted. It was to be roasted all in one piece.——Ver. 10. They were to leave none of it, lest the Egyptians should abuse it, or themselves make a superstitious use of it.——Ver. 11. These circumstances imported their holding themselves in readiness to leave the country, and march off, as the Lord's freemen; but these, as well as the taking of the lamb on the tenth day of the month, seem to have been required only with respect to the first celebration.——Ver. 14. This feast was to be a joyful commemoration of their deliverance, observed every year, and during the whole period of the ceremonial dispensation, until the death of Christ, thereby prefigured.——Ver. 15—21. The feast of unleavened bread immediately succeeded the passover. The holy convocation, on the fifteenth day of the month, commemorated their departure from see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt.

14 And this day shall be unto you for a [x] memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the LORD throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever.

15 ¶ [y] Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, [z] that soul shall be cut off from Israel.

16 And in the first day there shall be an [a] holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you: no [b] manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you.

17 And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self-same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance [c] for ever.

18 In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even.

19 Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses: for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be [d] cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or born in the land.

20 Ye shall eat nothing leavened: in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread.

21 ¶ Then Moses called for all the [e] elders of Israel, and said unto them, Draw out, and take you a lamb, according to your families, and kill the passover.

22 [f] And ye shall take a bunch of [*] hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the bason, and strike the lintel and the two side-posts with the blood that is in the bason; and none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning.

23 For the LORD will pass through to smite the Egyptians; and when he seeth the blood upon the lintel and on the two side-posts, the LORD will [g] pass over the door, and will not suffer the [h] destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you.

24 And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to thee and to thy sons [i] for ever.

25 And it shall come to pass, when ye be come to the land [k] which the LORD will give you, according as he hath promised, that [l] ye shall keep this service.

26 [m] And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service?

27 That ye shall say, It is the [n] sacrifice of the LORD'S passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses. And the people [o] bowed the head, and worshipped.

28 And the children of Israel went away, and [p] did as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

29 ¶ [q] And it came to pass, that at midnight the LORD [r] smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sat on his throne, unto the first-born of the captive that was in the dungeon; and all the first-born of cattle.

30 And Pharaoh rose up in the night, he, and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a [s] great cry in Egypt: for there was not a house where there was not one dead.

31 ¶ And he called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, [t] Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Israel; and go serve the LORD, as ye have said.

32 Also [u] take your flocks and your herds, as ye have said, and be gone, and [x] bless me also.

33 And the Egyptians were [y] urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste; for they said, We be all [*] dead men.

34 And the people took their dough before

No heathen, or uncircumcised person, was allowed to partake thereof.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XII.—Come near, my soul, and behold what the Lord hath wrought for Israel! He had multiplied them amidst cruel bondage and murder: he had protected them amidst ruinous plagues: and now, after a solemn feast, he brings them forth with wealth, with honour, in health, in peace, in order, and in due time! Behold what things he, who sitteth on the throne, makes new! A new year; new festivals; new liberties; a new nation to himself! Behold how their enemies push them into liberty; how they enrich them; and what a mixed multitude take part with them in their journey! Behold the care with which God distinguishes his people from the rest of the world! But chiefly behold God's great work of the redemption of mankind, through the blood of his Son! O the strong hand! the stretched-out arm! the grace! the mercy! the sovereignty! the wisdom! the justice! the exact fidelity to his promise, which appears in this! How are violated commandments, enraged devils, and mighty lusts, made to let the ransomed of the Lord depart into liberty! With what spiritual wealth, what spoils of principalities and powers, nay, unsearchable riches, and righteousness, they come forth! In what high honour, spiritual soundness, peace, and order, they are brought from heathenism or popery; nay, from their natural state of bondage and death in trespasses and sins; and all in the precise time of love, the day of espousals, the hour of grace, appointed of the Father! And how marvellously JEHOVAH here makes all things new. A new thing is created on the earth—a virgin brings forth a child whose name is IMMANUEL, God with us! A new testament is ratified in his blood! a new covenant is confirmed with many! a new gospel period, a year of God's redeemed, is introduced! new festivals on the flesh and blood of his Son! new liberties! freedom indeed, for those who are made heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ! a new church of Jews and Gentiles, purified by his oblation, a peculiar people to himself zealous of good works!—But what a mixed multitude of empty professors attend and plague the church in every reformation on earth! What a multitude it was leavened, their [a] kneading-troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders.

35 And the children of Israel did according to the word of Moses; and [x] they [†] borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment.

36 And the LORD [a] gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they [‡] lent unto them such things as they required: and they spoiled the Egyptians.

37 ¶ And [b] the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses to Succoth, about six hundred thousand on foot that were men, besides children.

38 And [c] a mixed multitude went up also with them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle.

39 And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened; because they were [†] thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any victual.

40 ¶ Now the [e] sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was [f] four hundred and thirty years.[§]

41 And it came to pass, at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the [g] self-same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the LORD went out from the land of Egypt.

42 It is [h] a night to be much observed unto the LORD for bringing them out from the land of Egypt; this is that night of the LORD to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations.

43 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron, This is the ordinance of the passover; There [i] shall no stranger eat thereof:

44 But every man's servant [k] that is bought for money, when thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof.

45 A [l] foreigner and an hired servant shall not eat thereof.

46 In [m] one house shall it be eaten: thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house; [n] neither shall ye break a bone thereof.

47 [o] All the congregation of Israel shall keep it.

48 And when [p] a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the LORD, let all his [q] males be circumcised, and then [*] let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land: for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof.

49 One [r] law shall be to him that is home-born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you.

50 Thus did all the children of Israel; [s] as the LORD commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

51 And it came to pass [t] the self-same day, that the LORD did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by their [u] armies.

CHAPTER XIII.

(1) God's command to devote the first-born of man and beast to his service: 1—16; to observe the passover and feast of unleavened bread in their seasons. (2) God's care of Israel, in conducting them by a cloudy pillar: 17—22. (3) Joseph's bones: 19.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 [a] Sanctify unto me all the first-born, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast; it is mine.

3 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, [b] Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for by [c] strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this place: there shall no [d] leavened bread be eaten.

4 [e] This day came ye out, in the month Abib.

5 And it shall be, when the LORD [f] shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee, a land flowing with milk and honey, that [g] thou shalt keep this service in this month.

6 [h] Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, and in the seventh day shall be a feast to the LORD.

7 Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days: and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee; neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters.

[§] The apparent contradiction between this verse and Gen. 15. 13, where the period of predicted affliction, in a strange land, is said to be 400 years, will evanish by the following comparison:—From Abram's entrance into Canaan to the birth of Isaac, 25 years; Isaac at the birth of Jacob was 60; Jacob at going down to Egypt was 130, making 215 years;—then Jacob's children remained in Egypt 215 years more, thus making up the statement given, viz. 430 years. Again, Abram immediately after entering Canaan, rested at Shechem, only for a very short period, whence he removed to Bethel, and thence, "journeyed, going on still towards the south," till, probably, in the very first year after his call, famine compelled him to go down into Egypt, to sojourn there. Now, as Abram would nationally be called an Israelite, he would, in this sense, be called also one of the children of Israel, whose sojourning in Egypt commencing with his going down, and closing with their bringing up, gives us the complete period of 430 years. The prediction in Gen. 15. 13. is 400 years, i. e. a period not less than that.—Ed.

of remaining lusts and infirmities attend the choicest saints till they get to the Canaan above! In this passover-feast, let me behold how Jesus, the all-excellent, the mighty, the unblemished Son of God, who was set up from everlasting, and promised and typified four thousand years, in the fulness of time assumes our nature, partakes of flesh and blood, obeys the law, and suffers the most flaming and tremendous vengeance of God, without being crushed, broken, or ruined;—and all this that he might be our all-sufficient and everlasting covert from the wrath of God;—might be the means of destruction to sin, Satan, and death, for us;—and might, with unfeigned faith, sincere love, and bitter grief for sin, be fed upon by us, in holy fellowship, as the sweet, the heart-cheering, supporting, and strengthening food of our soul, by which we are enabled to go up from this evil world towards our everlasting inheritance in the Canaan above! And, blessed be the Lord, we, strangers and foreigners, sinners of the Gentiles, are admitted to feast on him, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God, while the Jewish children of the kingdom are cast out! In their feast of unleavened bread, may I not discern Jesus' state of debasement on earth? his week fulfilled in holiness, in sorrows, and in sufferings; on the first day of which he assumed his holy manhood, was gathered with sinners, but without sin; and on the last of which he made his life a ransom for many? May I not discern the pure, but afflicted state of the gospel-church in her apostolical and millennial periods, noted for holy convocations of men to the Lord? May I not discern the festival-week of the Christian life, spent in purity and pressures, and noted for its first day of conversion to Christ, and its last of departure, to be with him for evermore? Let me in it feed upon him as the incorrupted nourishment of my soul, carefully avoiding and detesting the leaven of malice, hypocrisy, error, or corrupt practices! Let me in it improve Jesus, as the blessed first-fruit unto God which sanctifieth all my enjoyments, the cause and token of my deliverance into the glorious liberty of the gospel!

8 And [t]thou shalt show thy son in that day, saying, This is done because of that which the LORD did unto me when I came forth out of Egypt.

9 And it shall be for a [k]sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes, that the LORD's law may be in thy mouth: for with a [l]strong hand hath the LORD brought thee out of Egypt.

10 [m]Thou shalt therefore keep this ordinance in his season from year to year.

11 ¶ And it shall be, when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, as he sware unto thee and to thy fathers, and shall give it thee, 12 [n]That thou shalt [*]set apart unto the LORD all that openeth the matrix, and every firstling that cometh of a beast which thou hast; the males shall be the LORD's.

13 [o]And every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a [†]lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break his neck: and [p]all the first-born of man among thy children shalt thou redeem.

14 And it shall be, when thy [q]son asketh thee [‡]in time to come, saying, What is this? that thou shalt say unto him, By [r]strength of hand the LORD brought us out from Egypt, from the house of bondage:

15 And it came to pass, when Pharaoh would [s]hardly let us go, that the LORD slew all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both the first-born of man and the first-born of beast: therefore I sacrifice to the LORD all that openeth the matrix, being males; but all the first-born of my children I redeem.

16 And it shall be for a [t]token upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes: for by strength of hand the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when Pharaoh had let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, although that was near; for God said, [u]Lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and they [x]return to Egypt:

18 But God [y]led the people about, through the way of the wilderness of the Red sea. And the children of Israel went up [z]harnessed [§]out of the land of Egypt.

[§] The word may be rendered harnessed, in array, or by fives. We adopt the last translation. Against it, it has been alleged, that the Hebrews formed into a column of five in breadth, would have required a line of march of 60 miles. But why should they march in one single column? Why not rather in twelve columns, requiring a line of barely five miles? Our reason for preferring the translation by fives to harnessed, is simply this:—Five is the ordinary average of a family; and though some are fewer, some more, yet the arrangement into columns of five in breadth, would finally keep families of all sizes together. The importance of this arrangement to the oversight, protection, and morals of children must at once be apparent.—ED.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, that they [a]turn and encamp before [b]Pi-hahiroth, between Migdol and the sea, over against Baal-zephon: before it shall ye encamp by the sea.

3 For Pharaoh will [c]say of the children of Israel, They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in.

4 And I [d]will [e]harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them; and I will be [e]honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; [f]that the Egyptians may know that I am the LORD. And they did so.

5 ¶ And it was told the king of Egypt that the people fled: and [g]the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was turned against the people, and they said, Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us?

6 And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him.

7 And he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them.

8 [h]And the LORD [†]hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he pursued after the children of Israel: and the children of Israel went out [i]with an high hand.

were either to be redeemed, or else killed, that they might not be put to any other use than for the Lord.——Ver. 17. The Philistines, who had originated from Lower Egypt, Gen. x. 13, 14; and dwelt in the south-west corner of Canaan, were a numerous, valiant, and fierce nation, whom the Hebrews, unarmed, and quite dispirited by their long bondage, durst not have encountered.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIII.—Never forget, O my soul, the great things which God has done for his church, or for thyself, in his common or special providence! Let me carefully observe every mean of keeping them fresh on my mind; and let me teach them diligently unto my children, that they may hear and fear the Lord for their good. What the Lord marvellously brings to me, or preserves for me, let me cheerfully surrender to his service, at his call. The life he rescues from imminent danger is doubly obliged to be devoted to his service; and they who truly love God will readily serve him with the best they have. But if troubles and difficulties attend my path, conscious of my weakness and folly, let me trust in him who proportions his people's trials to their strength, and look up to him for direction in all my ways. In this pillar of cloud and fire, I discern God's special care and protection of his people. Even, while clouds and darkness are round about him, justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne, and mercy and truth go before his face. Do I not behold Jesus likewise given to be an ever-attending light and leader, as well as protector and glory, to his people in this wilderness world? Let me always follow his direction and example; so shall I, in due time, arrive safe at the promised Canaan which is above. And, though the way in which he leads me be very contrary to the will and wisdom of the flesh, let me rest assured that it is a right one to the fulfilment of all his glorious promises of grace and glory.

10 ¶ And when Pharaoh drew nigh, the children of Israel lifted up their eyes, and, behold, the Egyptians marched after them; and they were [m] sore afraid: and the children of Israel cried out unto the LORD.

11 And [n] they said unto Moses, Because there were no [*] graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness? wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt?

12 [o] Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians? for it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness.

13 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, [p] Fear ye not; stand still, and see the salvation [q] of the LORD, which he will show to you to-day: for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more for ever.

14 The LORD shall [r] fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Wherefore [s] criest thou unto me? speak unto [t] the children of Israel, that they go forward:

16 But [t] lift thou up thy rod, and stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it; and the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea.

17 And I, behold, I will [u] harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them: and I will get me honour upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

18 And the Egyptians shall [v] know that I am the LORD, when I have gotten me honour upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

19 ¶ And the [x] angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed, and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them:

20 And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a [y] cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these: so that the one came not near the other all the night.

21 ¶ And Moses stretched out his hand over the sea; and the LORD caused the sea to [z] go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided.

22 And [a] the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon the dry ground: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

23 ¶ And the Egyptians [b] pursued, and went in after them to the midst of the sea, even all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen.

24 [*] And it came to pass, that in the [c] morning-watch the LORD [d] looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians,

25 And [†] took off their chariot-wheels, [‡] that they drave them heavily: so that the Egyptians said, Let us flee from the face of Israel; for the LORD [*] fighteth for them against the Egyptians.

26 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [f] Stretch out thine hand over the sea, that the waters may [g] come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen.

27 And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the [h] sea returned to his strength when the morning appeared; and the Egyptians fled against it: and the LORD [i] overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea.

28 And the waters [k] returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them: there remained not so much as [l] one of them.

29 But the children of Israel [m] walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

30 Thus the LORD saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel [n] saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea-shore.

31 And Israel saw that great [§] work which the LORD did upon the Egyptians: and the people [o] feared the LORD, and believed the LORD, and his servant Moses.

† As a man is said to do what his servants do by his commands, so God is said to do what his works effect by his disposal. God "took off" the chariot wheels of the Egyptians by means of the deep sands or rugged bottom of the sea. The Egyptian chariot, as commonly represented in ancient sculptures and paintings, is a small box, in which the warrior stands, mounted upon two low wheels, and fearfully ornamented with human heads, a terrible emblem of the fate that awaited the Israelite that would return to his bondage.—Note. How truly does the proverb speak, man's extremity, is God's opportunity! The mountains are on each side, the Red Sea before; Pharaoh and his chariots and horsemen behind; Israel trembling, murmuring, and crying in the midst, but God is over all, and salvation arises when hope had all but expired.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIV.—God frequently musters up difficulties in the way of his people, that his glory may appear in subduing and helping over them. Often he feeds the pride and malice of his enemies by apparent prosperity, that he may ripen them for destruction; while, with blind infatuation, they quickly repent of their best deeds, and rush forward, in their hatred of God and his people, till they find no place for repentance of their wickedness! What necessity there is to set out in the Lord's way with much strong faith, assured hope, and holy courage, as in it we may lay our account with many and great perplexities and troubles! Such as escape out of a sinful world, may expect a hot pursuit from the devil and his servants: but he that brings us out with an high hand, can bear us up with everlasting strength. In straits let me therefore never dare to chide my deliverer, or to think of returning to my bondage, but in patience possess my soul, hoping for his salvation. What he does I know not now, but I shall know hereafter. Sedateness in danger is the most likely mean to extricate myself out of it; and to encourage my heart in God is the way, not only to remove my fears, but to surmount my difficulties. However dangerous and dark the path may be, if I go forward, God will take care of the event; and, while the darkness of sin leads down to the darkness of eternal death, the light of grace will conduct me to eternal life and light in glory. What a present help is God in trouble! But how tremendous a foe! who can stand before him if once he be angry! Certain is their fall at last who are found fighting against God. If the Lord has delivered me from so great a death, let my heart, not for a while only, but for ever, be kindly impressed with his mercy; and rejoice that Jesus has delivered, and will deliver, his church at the expense of her enemies.

THEN sang [a] Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the LORD, and spake, saying, I will sing unto the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

2 The LORD is [b] my strength and song, and he is become my [c] salvation: he is [d] my God, and I will prepare him an [e] habitation; my father's God, and I will [f] exalt him.

3 The LORD is [g] a man of war: the [h] LORD is his name.

4 [i] Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea; his chosen captains also are drowned in the Red sea.

5 The depths have covered them: they sank into the bottom as [k] a stone.

6 [l] Thy right hand, O LORD, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O LORD, hath dashed in pieces the enemy.

7 And in the [m] greatness of thine excellency thou hast overthrown them that rose up against [n] thee: thou sentest forth thy wrath, which consumed them [o] as stubble.

8 And with the [p] blast of thy nostrils the waters were gathered together, the floods stood upright as an heap, and the depths were congealed in the heart of the sea.

9 The enemy said, [q] I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them: I will draw my sword; my hand shall [*] destroy them.

10 Thou didst [r] blow with thy wind, the sea covered them: they sank as lead in the mighty waters.

11 [s] Who is like unto thee, O LORD, among the [†] gods? who is like thee, [t] glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?

12 Thou stretchedst out thy right hand, the earth swallowed them.

13 Thou in thy mercy hast [u] led forth the people which thou hast redeemed; thou hast guided them in thy strength unto [x] thy holy habitation.

* The evidence for the Exodus, and passage of the Red Sea is most complete. 1. The institution of the passover in commemoration of the Exodus, can be assigned to no other period. 2. The divine inspiration of Moses proved by his miracles, and the abundant fulfilment of his prophecies. 3. The continued murmuring and rebellion of the people had Moses exaggerated or falsified in this, the imposition must immediately have been detected. 4. Though the narrative of Moses rests its credibility on his own character and actions; yet human evidence is abundantly, though unintentionally furnished. Justin, a heathen historian, distinctly notices the Exodus; and Diodorus Siculus, another heathen, relates a very old tradition of the miraculous dividing of the Red Sea, leaving its bottom for some time dry, and then returning to its usual bed.—Kb.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1. Several of the verbs in this song, relating to their past deliverance, are of the future tense in the original Hebrew, to intimate that it was but an earnest of many similar ones to the Jewish nation, and especially to the gospel-church and her true members, Josh. vi—xxi. Judg. iii. 10, 30; and iv. 16. vii. viii. and xi. 33. 1 Sam. vii. 10—13. and xi. 11. and xiv. 13—23. and xvii. 51, 52. 2 Sam. v. viii. x. 2 Chron. xiv. xx. Ezra i. ii. Esth. viii. ix. Acts ii—xix. Rev. vi. 13—17. xv—xix. ——Ver. 2. God is, and gives to his people, strength, and matter of joy and praise.—Moses foresaw that God would have a peculiar dwelling among the Jews in his tabernacle or temple.——Ver. 3. God is a man of war, as he powerfully protects his people, and executes judgment upon their enemies.——Ver. 7. By manifold, glorious, and marvellous works, God manifested his own infinite perfections.—He consumed the Egyptians as stubble, easily, suddenly, utterly.——Ver. 8. The strong wind, which God raised, made the waters to stand as still, on either side of the passage, as if they had been mountains of ice.——Ver. 11. Holiness is, as it were, the beauty, comeliness, and glory of the Godhead, and every particular excellency of it; and the very perfections and works, for which God is to be praised, are awful, and to be revered.——Ver. 13, 17. Canaan was a mountainous country, and is called God's inheritance, sanctuary, and holy habitation; because, for one thousand five hundred years of the typical dispensation, God chose it for the special residence of his worship and service.——Ver. 14—16. All the nations about heard of God's delivering his people, and destroying the Egyptians; and then, but especially afterwards, when the Israelites approached their territories, they were filled with terror and dread.——Ver. 20, 21. Perhaps Miriam is here called the sister of Aaron, rather than of Moses, because she lived mostly with Aaron.—She and her companions seem to have repeated the whole song after Moses and his brethren.——Ver. 24. To murmur against God, is to conceive unworthy and hard thoughts of his nature, word, or works; or to utter them with our tongue.——Ver. 25. God there proved their faith and obedience, and published his statutes, promising them future favours, on condition of their obedience.——Ver. 26. God heals, and helps, in every case respecting either soul or body, and delivers from all evils, felt or feared, whether spiritual, temporal, or eternal.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XV.—Admire, my soul, the displayed perfections, the transacted works, the fulfilled promises, the endearing relations of the Most High! How his feeble followers are encouraged and helped! How his proud opposers fall under him! Awake, awake, and utter this song of Moses and of the Lamb! Since the Lord hath brought me through fire and water to a goodly heritage, since he hath brought me out of a fearful pit, and out of the miry clay, let me believe his mighty works, and sing his praise. Let there be a new song in my heart, and in my mouth, even praises to our God. Let my meditation of him be sweet: and let my soul, which he hath redeemed, rejoice in God, my only Lord. With sweet astonishment, with heart-burning affection, and with enrapturing joy, let me sing what JEHOVAH, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, have done, and will do for me; what they have given, and will give to MEN—to ME;—what they are, and for ever will be to men—to ME! And while I go up, through this wilderness-world.

AND they [a] took their journey from Elim; and all the congregation of the children of Israel came unto the wilderness of Sin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month after their departing out of the land of Egypt.

2 And the [b] whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness:

3 And the children of Israel said unto them, [c] Would to God we had died by the hand of the LORD in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the [d] flesh-pots, and when we did eat bread to the full! for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with [e] hunger.

4 ¶ Then said the LORD unto Moses, [f] Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather [g] a certain rate every day, that I may [h] prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no.

5 And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall [i] prepare that which they bring in; and it shall be twice as much as they gather daily.

6 And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, At even, then ye shall know that [k] the LORD hath brought you out from the land of Egypt.

† The quail is a migratory bird of the gallinaceous kind. That commonly known in Europe is about the size of a lark; but there is a much larger kind, well known in Arabia and the adjoining countries. That the word translated quails does not mean locusts, as some have supposed, but some species of birds, is evident from Ps. 78. 27, where they are called feathered fowls. The period of this event was the spring, at which time these birds migrate from Asia to Europe: yet was not the miracle the less, for the miracle lay not in the event itself, which might have been what is called accidental, but in the prophecy announcing it, which none but one inspired of God could possibly have foreseen.—Ed.

7 [l] And in the morning, then ye shall see the [m] glory of the LORD; for that he heareth your murmurings [*] against the LORD: and what are we, that ye murmur against us?

8 And Moses said, This shall be, when the LORD shall give you in the evening flesh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full; for that the LORD heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against him: and what are we? your murmurings are not [n] against us, but against the LORD.

9 And Moses spake unto Aaron, Say unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, Come near [o] before the LORD: for he hath [p] heard your murmurings.

10 And it came to pass, as Aaron spake unto the whole congregation of the children of Israel, that they looked toward the wilderness, and, behold, the glory of the LORD [q] appeared in the cloud.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 [r] I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel; speak unto them, saying, [s] At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread; and [t] ye shall know that I am the LORD your God.

13 ¶ And it came to pass, that at even [u] the [†] quails came up, and covered the camp; and in the morning the [x] dew lay round about the host.

14 And when the [y] dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar-frost on the ground.

15 And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, [z] It is manna: for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, [a] This is the bread which the LORD hath given you to eat.

16 ¶ This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded, Gather of it every man according to his eating, an [b] omer [c] for every man, according to the number of your persons; take ye every man for them which are in his tents.

17 And the children of Israel did so, and gathered, some more, some less.

to my Canaan above, let me kindly accept the mixture of crosses and comforts which God allots to me. If parching thirst, if bitter gall, succeed my noted deliverances, let me never once doubt of his love; never once fear that all things are against me. If I am dear to God, it is proper that he make me smart for my sin. If he love me, let him not spare his rod of correction, which drives folly from my heart. If Jesus' presence sweeten my bitter draughts, it is enough. The cup, which my Father giveth me, shall I not drink it? If JEHOVAH be my God that healeth me, let him make me wounds all over, that I may feel his word, his blood, his Spirit applied, and his hands binding up and making me whole. If I get Elim refreshments here, let me adore his sovereign kindness. But let my last march be to the river of life, clear as crystal; to the living fountains of waters, where God himself shall wipe all tears from mine eyes. Meanwhile, let me not be unaffected with the great deliverances which God hath wrought, and shall work, for his gospel-church; with his destruction of her heathenish and antichristian enemies; while exercised herself with a vicissitude of embarrassing troubles and joyful deliverances.

and he that gathered little had no lack: they gathered every man according to his eating.

19 And Moses said, Let no man [e] leave of it till the morning.

20 Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto Moses; but some of them left of it until the morning, and it [f] bred worms, and stank: and Moses was wroth with them.

21 And they gathered it [g] every morning,* every man according to his eating: and when the sun waxed hot, it melted.

22 ¶ And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered [h] twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses.

23 And he said unto them, This is that which the LORD hath said, To-morrow is the [i] rest of the holy sabbath unto the LORD: [k] bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning.

24 And they [l] laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade: and it did not stink, neither was there any worm therein.

25 And Moses said, [m] Eat that to-day; for to-day is a sabbath unto the LORD: to-day ye shall not find it in the field.

26 Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the sabbath, [n] in it there shall be none.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, that there [o] went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none.

28 And the LORD said unto Moses, [p] How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?

29 See, for that the LORD hath given you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days: [q] abide ye every man in his place; let no man go out of his place on the seventh day.

* The miracle of the manna is the most extraordinary in the Old Testament. The evidences of its reality are—1. The established inspiration of Moses. 2. His books were written and published at the time of the event recorded. 3. The rebellions of the people against him in the wilderness were so frequent and inveterate, that there is no possibility of collusion. 4. The people's loathing of this gift of God. 5. The preservation of a specimen, ver. 32, 33, and its consequent historical union with the services of the Jewish law.—Note. The manna furnishes a beautiful type of Christ, "that bread of God that cometh down from heaven," (John 6. 33,) sent without our asking, continued notwithstanding our ingratitude—loathed by the infidel, sweet to the believer, and given in daily portions through our weary pilgrimage, till we "hunger no more" and "rest from our labours."—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVI.—Our comfortable glances of prosperity on earth soon change and pass away; while fresh difficulties produce fresh murmurings; and discontent vilifies what it has, and magnifies what it loseth or desires. But how criminal to distrust God's goodness and power, to despair of mercy and life, whenever we are brought into straits! and to murmur desperately, after God hath wrought wonders for our relief! Observe, all abuse of his servants strikes against God himself; and noted displays of his glory shall effectually check the murmurs of presumptuous sinners, and vindicate the faithful messengers of Christ! But for the children of God to disquiet their minds about temporal necessaries, when their heavenly Father can with a word supply them with every thing useful, is both foolish and highly offensive. Bread shall be given them, and their water shall be sure. So transcendent is his kindness, that he bestows on wicked murmurers, not only necessaries, but even delicacies. Amidst prudent care and diligent activity to make provision for myself, it becomes me to beware of covetousness or sinful distrust; to live alway contented with bare necessaries for the time, and depend upon God for what may be needful hereafter. Never let any earthly gain prevent my sanctification of the Sabbath. If, from regard to its honour, I deny myself, the Lord of it will assuredly make up my loss, and be my exceeding great reward. But if the Lord hath showed me his great kindness, let me treasure it up in my heart for grateful remembrance through all my life.—In this manna I contemplate Jesus the true bread—Jesus the bread of life. He is the free gift of God to murmuring and rebellious sinners, starving to eternal death. In the camp of the visible church he comes down from heaven, in the dewy ordinances and offers of the gospel, early, daily, and plentifully. Small, and contemned by many, and unknown to most, he is the divinely prepared, the mysterious, the pure, the sweet, the wholesome, the all-sufficient, and all-suitable nourishment of our souls; which God liberally and constantly distributes to us, and which we ought early, earnestly, and daily, to receive, each for ourselves; and the more so as we approach towards the eternal state, in which we shall have no further offers of his grace. And, as he was bruised in the mortar and mill of his Father's indignation, and baked in the oven of his wrath, let me receive him into a wounded conscience and a broken heart, as the grand restorative and nourisher to eternal life.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 2. The Israelites abused Moses with provoking and reproachful language.—Men tempt the Lord, (1) By sinning wilfully, and thus putting him to the trial, whether he be omniscient, just, powerful, &c. Acts v. 3. (2) By unnecessary rushing on visible dangers without any lawful call, Mat. iv. 6, 7. (3) By a presumptuous demanding of miracles, to try whether God can work them, Mat. xvi. 1. Luke xi. 16. (4) By presumptuously prescribing to him when and how he should accomplish his promises or threatenings as the token of his presence with them, Ps. lxxviii. 41.——Ver. 5. The elders of the people were to witness Moses' bringing forth water from the rock, and to report it to the people.——Ver. 6. God stood above the rock in the pillar of cloud, the token of his presence, to show that it was his powerful influence, not Moses' stroke that brought forth the water.—This rock, it is reported, remains visible to this day, as a kind of large stone, with twelve or twenty-four openings, in the valley of Rephidim.——Ver. 8. Whether these Amalekites were in league with the Egyptians, or were Canaanites, or Edomites; or whether they attacked them merely for the sake of the riches they had brought out of Egypt, we know not.——Ver. 9. us up out of Egypt to kill us, and our children, and our cattle, with thirst?

4 And Moses cried unto the LORD, saying, [f] What shall I do unto this people? they be almost ready to [g] stone me.

5 And the LORD said unto Moses, [h] Go on before the people, and take with thee of the [i] elders of Israel; and thy rod, [k] wherewith thou smotest the river, take in thine hand, and go.

6 [l] Behold, I will stand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel.

7 And he called the name of the place [o] Massah, and [t] Meribah, [m] because of the chiding of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the LORD, saying, Is the LORD among us, or not?

8 ¶ [n] Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim.

10 So [q] Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek: and Moses, Aaron, and Hur, went up to the top of the hill.

11 And it came to pass, when Moses [r] held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed.

12 But Moses' hands were [s] heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur [t] stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun.

13 And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword.

14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [u] Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua: for [x] I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven.

15 And Moses [y] built an altar, and called the name of it * JEHOVAH-nissi:

the hill, in view of the Israelites, with his wonder-working rod lifted up as their banner, and as a token of the Lord's presence with, and assistance of them.——Ver. 11. This different success, answerable to Moses' elevation of his hands and rod, marked the power and efficacy of prayer; and that they could do nothing but as God encouraged and strengthened them.——Ver. 12. This marked the human weakness of Moses; and that Christ, by his presence and Spirit, must help our infirmities in prayer.——Ver. 14. Joshua was to hear it, as he and his successors, who commanded the armies of Israel, were to watch every opportunity of destroying the Amalekites.——Ver. 15. The design of this altar was to commemorate the victory divinely bestowed, and to offer sacrifices of thanksgiving thereupon.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVII.—The straits of the people of God frequently recur upon them; and how commonly do they afford occasion for repeated unbelief, and a sinful rage of spirit, under them, while the greatest kindnesses are forgotten, or ill-requited. Humble prayer is most effectual to compose the spirit under such injurious treatment. Did we then but recollect the circumstances of our sins, it would tend rather to our humiliation; and, did we but wait with humble patience, we should soon discover that God can open the most abundant supplies in our greatest distresses. How heartily wicked men hate the saints, and take all opportunities to distress them! But terrible is the vengeance that awaits them on account of it. The prayers of the saints, and the sword of JEHOVAH are effectual to accomplish their ruin. Let me then never murmur against, never distrust, my God of infinite power and grace! Let me, in every case, cry to him who can turn flinty rocks into water springs! If I receive mercies amidst my provocations, I may expect new trials. But let me depend upon God, in all my warfare, and praise him for all my victories.—But in this smitten rock I behold Jesus, the firm, the unchangeable God, and Mediator of his people, who, for our deserts of hell and damnation, appeared in our nature!—Jesus, the stone smitten by Moses' fiery law, before the rulers and people of Israel, that streams of atoning blood and sanctifying virtue might issue forth, and run in this wilderness of our world, for the purification and refreshment of sinful men. In this warfare I behold Jesus, MY ALL IN ALL, as the Captain of salvation directing the Lord's host.—Jesus, the rod, the branch, lifted up as an ensign to the Gentiles!—Jesus, as my unwearied intercessor at the right hand of the Majesty on high!—Jesus, through whom I am more than a conqueror; and who hath sworn that he will have war with the enemies of his people, from generation to generation, till they be utterly destroyed.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 6, 7. Jethro sent a messenger to inform Moses of his coming; and Moses hereupon went to meet him.——Ver. 11. Even in the Egyptians' haughty and insolent detaining of his people Israel, imagining it impossible for their God to deliver them, he showed himself infinitely their superior in wisdom and might.——Ver. 12. They feasted before God, near to the symbol of his presence in the cloud, or on the mount, and in holy awe of him, and as in his sight.——Ver. 17, 18. What thou dost is not convenient either for thyself or the people. This tedious attendance will destroy thine own health and theirs.——Ver. 19. I make no doubt but God will bless thee in following the course to which I advise.——Ver. 20. Thou shalt deliver and explain to them God's laws, which they may apply to their particular cases and occasions.——Ver. 21. Men of understanding, courage, piety, candour, faithfulness, and honesty, and who will discourage every wicked thing.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVIII.—It is highly becoming that professed saints should mark every turn of providence that befalls them; and, in a dependence on God as their help, reckon themselves strangers on earth: and that they should inquire after, and rejoice in, one another's welfare. It is necessary that, if married persons part for a time, they should meet again with the first conveniency, that they may share in one another's honours and comforts, as well as in their troubles; and that children should be, as much as possible, under the immediate inspection of religious parents. When great honours from God are attended with due humility towards men; and when such as have seen much of the Lord's goodness readily communicate their experiences to their friends, especially when meeting together, they chiefly converse concerning the things of God, and sanctify their mutual friendship with joint prayer and praise, it is both pleasing and instructive. Those in office should always execute the same with fidelity and condescension, even law Jethro am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two sons with her.

7 ¶ And Moses went out to [l]meet his father-in-law, and did obeisance, and kissed him; and they asked each other of their [k]welfare: and they came into the tent.

8 And Moses [l]told his father-in-law all that the LORD had done unto Pharaoh and to the Egyptians for Israel's sake, and all the travail that had [m]come upon them by the way, and how the LORD delivered them.

9 ¶ And Jethro [n]rejoiced for all the goodness which the LORD had done to Israel, whom he had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians.

10 And Jethro said, [o]Blessed be the LORD, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh, who hath delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians.

11 Now I [p]know that the [q]LORD is greater than all gods: [r]for in the thing wherein they dealt proudly he was above them.

12 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took [s]a burnt-offering and [s]sacrifices for God: and Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to [t]eat bread with Moses' father-in-law before God.

13 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses [u]sat to judge the people; and the people stood by Moses from the morning unto the evening.

14 And when Moses' father-in-law saw all that he did to the people, he said, What is this thing that thou doest to the people? why sittest thou thyself alone, and all the people stand by thee from morning unto even?

15 And Moses said unto his father-in-law, Because the people come unto me to [x]inquire of God.

16 When they have a matter, they come unto me; and I judge between [t]one and another; and I do make them know the statutes of God, and his laws.

17 And Moses' father-in-law said unto him, The thing that thou doest is not good.

18 [y]Thou wilt surely wear away, both thou and this people that is with thee: for this thing is too heavy for thee; [z]thou art not able to perform it thyself alone.

19 Hearken now unto my voice, I will give thee counsel, and [a]God shall be with thee: Be thou for the people to God-ward, that thou mayest bring the [b]causes unto God:

IN the third month, when the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, the same day came they into the wilderness of Sinai.

2 For they were [a]departed from Rephidim, and were come to the desert of Sinai, and had pitched in the wilderness; and there Israel camped before the mount.

3 ¶ And [b]Moses went up unto God, and the LORD called unto him out of the mountain, saying, [c]Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel;

4 [d]Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on [*]eagles' wings, and brought you [e]unto myself.

to such as have deserved their disregard; and prefer public business to private civilities. But how profitable is wisdom to direct in every thing, that we may not overdo even in well-doing! Good counsel is helpful even to the wisest, and proper assistance to the ablest, in office; and it will be readily embraced by such as are wise and prudent. With great care and conscience should persons be chosen to offices of government, either in church or state, that none may be admitted but such as are able men, men of truth, fearing God, and hating covetousness. And dreadful is their guilt who help or hold in ignorant and profane persons, to the dishonour of God and the hurt of his people.

indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a [s]peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for [h]all the earth is mine.

6 And ye shall be unto me a [i]kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel.

7 ¶ And Moses came, and called for the [k]elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the LORD commanded him.

8 And [l] all the people answered together, and said, [o]All that the LORD hath spoken we will do. And Moses returned the words of the people unto the LORD.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, Lo, I come unto thee in [m]a thick cloud, † that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee ‡ for ever. And Moses told the words of the people unto the LORD.

10 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Go unto the people, and [n]sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their clothes, 11 And be ready against the third day: for the [o]third day the LORD will [p]come down in the sight of all the people upon mount Sinai.

12 And thou shalt [q]set bounds unto the people round about, saying, Take heed to yourselves, that ye go not up into the mount, or touch the border of it: whosoever toucheth the mount shall be surely put to death.

13 There shall not an [r]hand touch it, but he shall surely be stoned, or shot through; whether it be beast or man, it shall not live: when the [s]trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount.

14 ¶ And Moses went down from the mount unto the people, and sanctified the people; and they washed their clothes.

15 And he said unto the people, [t]Be ready against the third day: [u]come not at your wives.

16 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there [x]were thunders, and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled.

17 And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp [y]to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount.

18 And mount Sinai was altogether [z]on a smoke, because the LORD descended upon it in fire; and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount [a]quaked greatly.

19 And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, [b]Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice.

20 And the LORD came down upon mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the LORD called Moses up to the top of the mount; and Moses went up.

21 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go down, [c]charge the people, lest they [d]break through unto the LORD to gaze, and many of them perish.

22 And let the [d]priests also, which come near to the LORD, sanctify themselves, lest the LORD break forth upon them.

23 And Moses said unto the LORD, The people cannot come up to mount Sinai: for thou chargedst us, saying, [e]Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it.

24 And the LORD said unto him, †Away, get thee down, and thou shalt come up, thou, and Aaron with thee: but [f]let not the priests and the people break through, to come up unto the LORD, lest he break forth upon them.

25 [g]So Moses went down unto the people, and spake unto them.

† When God had already said to Moses, "Away, get thee down, charge the people, lest they break through," why did Moses hesitate, and why does the Lord require to reiterate the order? Simply because Moses, relying upon the ready promise of obedience in ver. 8, does not think it possible the people could ever violate their pledge. God, who knew what was in man, reorders Moses to go down to prevent their sin.—Note. Preventing grace, though little, or perhaps, not at all observable by ignorant and "self-confident man, is yet the most common and the most important of the mercies of God. This preventing grace of God, is frequently put forth in the faithful admonitions and warnings of religious friends, God putting it into their hearts to speak in warning, as Moses did, or in reproof of sin committed, or encouragement to neglected duty.—ED.

——Ver. 8. This they promised too rashly, not considering the extent, spirituality, and strictness of the holy law, or their own weakness; and hence, when the law was published, they fled away for terror.——Ver. 8, 9. Moses, being a typical mediator between God and the people, reported the words of the one to the other.——Ver. 10—12. They were to prepare themselves by inwardly laying aside carnal affections and worldly cares, and by keeping their hearts in an holy frame; and outwardly by washing their clothes. The design of this was to render them sensible of their vileness and weakness, and their need of a mediator, Gal. iii. 19.——Ver. 13. By the ministration of angels, a trumpet, in the manner of thunder, was sounded in the air; and whenever it gave a long continued sound, the Hebrews were to approach as near to the mount as they durst, in order to hear the law proclaimed.——Ver. 15. All carnal cares and affections were to be laid aside, that their minds might be wholly intent on hearing the law.——Ver. 16. The thunders, lightnings, fire and smoke, were intended to awaken their attention in hearing the law, to promote their careful observance of it, and to manifest how dangerous it was to be under it as a covenant.—The thick cloud signified the invisible, awful, and incomprehensible, nature of God, and the obscurity of the legal dispensation of the covenant of grace.——Ver. 18. God's descent meant his manifesting the signs of his glorious presence.——Ver. 19. God answered Moses, by a voice distinct, plain and audible, which all the people might hear.——Ver. 21, 23. Vain curiosity is forbidden, that we may learn to live by faith, and not by sight, and to be humble. Their dulness and hardness of heart made repeated warnings necessary; and they were commanded to hold the very mountain sacred, because of God's presence. This might also signify, that the law rather excludes men from God, on account of their sins, than justifies or gives them life.——Ver. 22. Some think these priests were the first-born; but there is no evidence that birthright invested with any such office; they were persons, probably the most excellent, chosen by Moses for offering sacrifices, till God should assign that work to Aaron and his sons.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIX.—Infinitely gracious and undeserved are the favours of God to men. But peculiarly kind his care of his people, and great the honour he bestows upon them. His condescension is most astonishing in admitting them into covenant with himself; his requirements most reasonable; and surely his distinguishing kindness ought to promote our cheerful obedience. But how apt are men to be hasty in promising obedience, and backward in performing it! Serious preparation for solemn intercourse with God is necessary and becoming; and a careful respect to every disposition and deportment of body, soul, and spirit. Never, O my soul, presumptuously intrude into those secrets over which God hath cast a veil! Never hazard thy life, by pushing over the bounds which he hath set for thy good. Let me have nothing to do with his fiery law, but as it is fulfilled by Christ as a covenant, and issued forth by him as a rule. Let me always approach unto his presence with reverence and godly fear; and never let vain curiosity, but humble faith and holy love, attend me in all my concerns with him.

4 [d] Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth.

5 Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am a [e] jealous God, [f] visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that [*] hate me;

6 And [g] showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

7 [h] Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

8 [i] Remember the sabbath-day, to keep it holy.

9 Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work:

10 But the seventh day is the sabbath of the LORD thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:

11 For [k] in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the LORD blessed the sabbath-day, and hallowed it.

12 ¶ [l] Honour thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

13 [m] Thou shalt not kill.

14 [n] Thou shalt not commit adultery.

15 [o] Thou shalt not steal.

16 [p] Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

17 [q] Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's.

18 ¶ [r] And all the people saw the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain smoking: and when the people saw it, they removed, and stood afar off.

19 And they said unto Moses, [s] Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die.

20 And Moses said unto the people, [t] Fear not: for God is come to [u] prove you, and that his [x] fear may be before your faces, that ye sin not.

21 And the [y] people stood afar off; and Moses drew near [*] unto the thick darkness where God was.

22 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Thus thou shalt say unto the children of Israel, Ye have seen that I have [a] talked with you from heaven.

23 [a] Ye shall not make with me gods of silver, neither shall ye make unto you gods of gold.

24 ¶ An [b] altar of earth thou shalt make[†] unto me, and shalt sacrifice thereon thy burnt-offerings, and thy peace-offerings, thy sheep, and thine oxen. In all places where I [c] record my name I will come unto thee, and I will [d] bless thee.

25 And [e] if thou wilt make me an altar of stone, thou shalt not build it of hewn stone: for if thou lift up [f] thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it.

26 Neither shall thou go up by steps unto mine altar, that [g] thy nakedness be not discovered thereon.

immediately published by God himself, in the hearing of all Israel. (2) That every command is delivered in the singular number, that every one may take it home to himself: (3) And to mark that God's grant of himself to men, as their God and Redeemer, is the foundation of all gospel-obedience: it is frequently repeated, ver. 7, 10, 12, 25; and in Lev. xviii. xix., it is connected with almost every particular command. The rules for the right understanding of these commandments, and the particular duties required, and sins forbidden in each, being so fully exhibited in the Assembly's Larger and Shorter Catechisms, with the various expositions thereof, it is sufficient to refer to these.——Ver. 20. Let not slavish fear make you neglect your duty, for God is come to prove whether you be sincere or hypocritical.—— Ver. 24, 25. These altars of turf and stone were only to be used for the present, before that of brass was made, or on extraordinary occasions; and were always to be most simple, and unlike to those of the heathens.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XX.—Now, my soul, let my religious principles, and my whole practice, follow the order of this divine sermon. Let the leading articles of my knowledge and belief be, that God, as in Christ, giveth himself to me, in the gospel-promise, for my God, my Redeemer, and my ALL IN ALL: and let my leading exercise be to receive him as such. Let his being JEHOVAH, my God and Redeemer, be the foundation, the great reason and motive of all that I do. Influenced by this, let me renounce and detest every idol which robs him of his honour, or me of my enjoyment of him. Let me embrace every instituted ordinance as coming from my God, and observe it in the nearest fellowship with him. Having received JEHOVAH as my God, let me have grace from him to serve him with reverence and godly fear. Copying after his pattern, and desiring the enjoyment of him as my chief good, let me observe the appointed seasons of intercourse with him. Let me regard relations and property among men as the constitutions of my God: and, in all my dealings with them, let me act as a possessor of God, that needs nothing in an unlawful manner, and as a cordial imitator of God, who is gracious and merciful, long-suffering, and abundant in holiness, righteousness, goodness, and truth. But, having tasted the terrors of a broken law, and an angry God, let me rejoice that, without my request, I have one Mediator between God and me, the man Christ Jesus. Detesting every species of false worship, let me rejoice that Jesus, the fruit of the earth, Jesus, the chosen stone, is my all-sanctifying altar, on which I must present all my services before God; and my unfailing security for the presence of God in ordinances: and God forbid that I should disgrace him with any light, licentious, or injurious behaviour.

4 If his master have given him [d] a wife, and she have born him sons or daughters; the wife and her children shall be her [*] master's, and he shall go out by himself.

5 And if [*] the servant shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children, I will not go out free:

6 Then his master shall bring him unto [f] the judges; he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the door-post; and his master shall [g] bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him [h] for ever.

7 ¶ And if a man [i] sell his daughter to be a maid-servant, she shall [k] not go out as the men-servants do.[†]

8 [‡] If she please not her master, who hath betrothed her to himself, then shall he let her be redeemed: to sell her unto a strange nation he shall have no power, seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her.

9 And if he have betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her after the [l] manner of daughters.

10 If he take him another wife, her food, her raiment, and her [m] duty of marriage, shall he not diminish.

11 And if he do not these three unto her, then shall she go out [n] free without money.

12 ¶ He that [o] smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death.

13 And if a man lie not in wait, but God [§] deliver him into his hand; then [p] I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee.

14 But if a man come [q] presumptuously upon his neighbour, to slay him with guile; thou shalt take him from mine altar, that he may die.

15 ¶ And he that [r] smiteth his father or his mother shall be surely put to death.

16 ¶ And he that [s] stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death.

17 ¶ And [t] he that [||] curseth his father or his mother shall surely be put to death.

18 ¶ And if men strive together, and one smite another with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepeth his bed;

19 If he rise again, and walk abroad [u] upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: only he shall pay for [x] the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.

20 ¶ And if a man smite his [y] servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be surely [z] punished.

21 Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: [*] for he is his money.

22 ¶ If men strive, and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her, and yet no mischief follow: [‡] he shall be surely punished, according as the woman's husband will lay upon him; and he shall pay as the judges determine.

23 And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life,

24 [†] Eye [a] for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot,

25 Burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.[‡]

26 ¶ And [b] if a man smite the eye of his servant, or the eye of his maid, that it perish; he shall let him go free for his eye's sake.

27 And if he smite out his man-servant's tooth, or his maid-servant's tooth; he shall let him go free for his tooth's sake.[§]

28 ¶ If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die: then [c] the ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quit.

29 But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; [d] the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death.

30 [*] If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give, for the ransom of his life, whatsoever is laid upon him.

31 Whether he have gored a son, or have gored a daughter, according to this judgment shall it be done unto him.

32 If the ox shall push a man-servant or maid-servant; he shall give unto their master [f] thirty shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned.

33 ¶ And if a man shall open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it, and an ox or an ass fall therein;

34 The owner of the pit [g] shall make it good, and give money unto the owner of them; and the dead beast shall be his.

35 ¶ And if one man's ox hurt another's, that he die; then they shall sell the live ox and divide the money of it; and the dead ox also they shall divide.

36 Or if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past, and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay ox for ox; and the dead shall be his [l] own.

† This law has been represented by some as relaxed in favour of female servants, Deut. 15. 12; but the idea of relaxation seems not consistent with the divine origin of a law. But in point of fact, the law in Exod., and the law in Deut. are on two different subjects. That in Exod. relates to a maid-servant not only purchased, but betrothed to her master or his son; that in Deut. to a maid-servant merely purchased. Both are glorious specimens of the justice and mercy of the divine legislation.—Ed.

‡ The lex talionis, or law of like for like, in case of injuries of the person, has prevailed amongst all civilized nations. Into the code of Solon, the Athenian legislator, and into the famous twelve tables of the Romans, it most probably made its way from this judgment in the law of Moses. And that it would operate more powerfully in the prevention of crime, than all the modern European system of fine, imprisonment, hard labour, banishment, or even death, we need not hesitate to affirm. God knew the evil that was in the heart of man, and best knew how to restrain it. And did legislators follow his wisdom more, and their own expedients less, we might well calculate on a diminution of these crimes, which many merely human enactments are calculated to provoke and perpetuate. It is not improbable, from considering the commutation of the extreme punishment of death to fine, permitted in ver. 30, that a similar commutation, as Josephus affirms, was permissible in any of these cases, at the option, of the person injured.—Note. Between the law and our Saviour's exposition, Mat. 5. 38. there is no contradiction. Moses directs the judge in the prevention and punishment of crime; our Saviour addresses private individuals, forbidding revenge, and inculcating forbearance and forgiveness.—Ed.

debt, 2 Kings iv. 1. Mat. xviii. 25. To such bond-servants masters often gave heathen maid-slaves, as a kind of wives or concubines, to beget other slaves.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXI.—How just, gracious, and condescending, must God, the giver of these laws, be! How mindful of the welfare of mankind! How profitable to be his voluntary servants! His providence extends even to that which appears accidental; and he exercises the most exact care to preserve the innocent, and at the same time punish the guilty. Let me therefore take heed, that neither I, nor what pertains to me, prove hurtful to my neighbour or to his property! Suppose no laws of men can punish me, the vengeance of God can overtake me. Let me rather, as an elect vessel, put on bowels of mercy and long-suffering, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. Meanwhile, in those voluntary bond-servants I may behold Jesus, the only begotten Son of God, from love to his Father, from love to his chosen people, solemnly surrendering himself to be his Father's bond-servant in our stead, till he should finish the whole obedience and suffering due from us;—and to be his honorary servant for ever, for our good, that he might bestow upon us all his unsearchable blessings in time and eternity.

CHAPTER XXII.

(1) Laws relating to thieft, 1—4; Grazing in other men's vineyards or fields, &c. 5; wilful or careless raising of fire, 6; losing or hurting of things intrusted, 7—13; or borrowed, 14, 15. (2) The punishment of fornication and bestiality, 16, 17, 19. (3) Of kindness to strangers, widows, and fatherless, 21—24; of lending money to the poor, and taking pledges, 25—27; of reverent speaking concerning rulers, 28. (4) Laws against witchcraft and idolatry; undue delay of offering the first-fruits, and eating flesh of animals torn by beasts, 20, 29—31.

A. M. 2513. B. C. 1491.

IF a man [a] shall [*] steal an [b] ox or a [†] sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep.

2 If a thief be [c] found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall no blood be shed for him.

3 [d] If the sun be risen upon him, there shall be blood shed for him; for he should make full restitution: if he have nothing, then he shall be [*] sold for his theft.

4 If the [‡] theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep; he shall restore [f] double.

5 ¶ If a man shall cause a field or vineyard to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field; of the best of his own field, and of the best of his own vineyard, shall he make restitution.

6 ¶ If fire break out, and catch in thorns, so that the stacks of corn, or the standing corn, or the field, be consumed therewith; he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution.

7 ¶ If a man shall deliver unto his neighbour money or stuff to keep, and it be stolen out of the man's house; if the thief be found, let him pay double.

8 If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought unto the [g] judges, to see whether he have put his hand unto his neighbour's goods.

9 For all manner of trespass, whether it be for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment, or for any manner of lost thing, which another challengeth to be his, the [h] cause of both parties shall come before the judges; and whom the judges shall condemn, he shall pay double unto his neighbour.

10 If a man deliver unto his neighbour an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast, [i] to keep; and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it:

11 Then shall [k] an oath of the LORD be between them both, that he hath not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods; and the owner of it shall accept thereof, and he shall not make it good.

12 And [l] if it be stolen from him, he shall make restitution unto the owner thereof.

13 If it be torn in pieces, then let him bring [m] it for witness, and he shall not make good that which was torn.

14 ¶ And if a man [n] borrow ought of his neighbour, and it be hurt, or die, the owner thereof being not with it; he shall surely make it good.

15 But if the owner thereof be with it, he shall not make it good: if it be an hired thing, it came for his hire.

16 ¶ [o] And if a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her; he shall surely endow her to be his wife.

17 If her [p] father utterly refuse to give her unto him, he shall pay [q] money according to the dowry of virgins.

18 ¶ [r] Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.

19 ¶ Whosoever [s] lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death.

20 ¶ [t] He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the LORD only, he shall be utterly destroyed.

21 ¶ [u] Thou shalt neither vex a stranger, nor oppress him: for ye were strangers in the [*] land of Egypt.

22 ¶ [x] Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child.

23 If thou afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I [y] will surely hear their cry:

24 And my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and [z] your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless.

25 ¶ [a] If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.[†]

26 ¶ If thou [b] at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

27 For that is his covering only; it is his raiment for his skin: wherein shall he sleep? and it shall come to pass, [c] when he crieth unto me, that I will hear; for I am gracious.

28 ¶ [d] Thou shalt not revile the [e] gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people.

29 ¶ Thou [f] shalt not delay to offer [‡] the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy [§] liquors: [g] the first-born of thy sons shalt thou give unto me.

30 Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep: [i] seven days it shall be with his dam; on the eighth day thou shalt give it me.

31 ¶ And ye shall be [h] holy men unto me: [j] neither shall ye eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXII.—Behold how the righteous Lord loveth righteousness, and beholdeth the upright with a pleasant countenance! Let, therefore, the grace revealed in the gospel, teach me to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world, rendering unto God and men their respective dues. If God be my portion, all covetousness, injustice, and infidelity, should be far from my heart and hand. If God be my pleasure, never should I wallow in fleshly lusts, or render others disgraced and miserable by any means. If God be my new-covenant husband and Lord, I should, as under the sweetest and strongest obligation, resist the devil, and detest his in-

THOU [a] shalt not [*] raise a false report: [b] put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness.

2 ¶ Thou [c] shalt not follow a multitude to [†] do evil; neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment.

3 Neither shalt thou [d] countenance a poor man in his cause.

4 ¶ If thou [e] meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again.

5 [f] If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, [‡] and wouldest forbear to help him; thou shalt surely help with him.

6 ¶ Thou shalt not [g] wrest the judgment of thy poor in his cause.

7 [h] Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for [i] I will not justify the wicked.

8 ¶ And [k] thou shalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth [§] the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.

9 ¶ Also [l] thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the [‖] heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

10 ¶ And [m] six years thou shalt sow thy land, and shalt gather in the fruits thereof:

11 But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still; that the poor of thy people may eat: and what they leave the beasts of the field shall eat. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy [*] olive-yard.

12 ¶ [n] Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid and the stranger may be refreshed.

13 ¶ And in all things that I have said unto you be [o] circumspect: and [p] make no mention of the name of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth.

14 ¶ [q] Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year.

15 [r] Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread: (thou shalt eat unleavened bread seven days, as I commanded thee, in the time appointed of the month Abib; for in it thou camest out from Egypt; [s] and none shall appear before me empty:)

16 And the [t] feast of harvest, the first-fruits of thy labours, which thou hast sown in [*] thy field; and [u] the feast of ingathering, which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field.

17 Three times in the year all [x] thy males shall appear before the LORD God.

18 ¶ Thou [y] shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread; neither shall the fat of my [*] sacrifice [z] remain until the morning.

19 [a] The first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the LORD thy God. [b] Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

20 ¶ [c] Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the [d] place which I have prepared.

21 [e] Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not [f] pardon your transgressions: for my [g] name is in him.

22 But if thou shalt indeed [h] obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then [i] I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and [†] an adversary unto thine adversaries.

NOTE.—Verse 19. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.—Whatever be the meaning of this prohibition, there can be no doubt of its importance, as it is thrice enforced in the same words. It is here the last of the judgments delivered to Moses, during his first interview with God on the mount, (ch. 20, 21, 22. & 21. 1. & 24. 3d.) On the renewal of the broken tables, (ch. 34. 1.) and solemn annunciation of the covenant, (ch. 34. 10.) the same words are repeated in ver. 26; and, lastly, in (Deut. 14. 21.) holiness to the Lord, as exhibited in abstaining from forbidden food, immediately precedes. Maimonides, a Jewish expositor, considers it merely a precept against an unwholesome food. Philo, another Jew, considers it a precept against cruelty; and a Cairite Jew, quoted by Cudworth, represents it as a reference to a heathen custom of boiling a kid in its mother's milk, and sprinkling it on fields and trees, with the superstitious idea of rendering them fruitful; and, in either the first or last of these opinions, there is a general concurrence of Christian expositors. It is with much diffidence we would venture to present another view. To prepare our way, two facts in Scripture history require to be considered—(1) That the Jews, and the Jewish priesthood, even "from the days of their fathers, have gone away from God's ordinances, and have not kept them, Mal. 3. 7. and have "transgressed and rendered of none effect the commandments of God by their traditions," Mat. 15. 3, 6. (2) That one of the sins that did most early, and "most easily beset, or entangle the nation, was the appetite for flesh. Hear the proof from their own lips, (Exod. 16. 3.) "Would to God we had died in Egypt, when we sat by the flesh-pots." See it in their fretful and angry tears, (Num. 11. 3.), when they "wept, and said, who shall give us flesh to eat?" To a people and priesthood so disposed, it became therefore necessary to give "precept upon precept," against epicurism in food, and especially against its introduction in their religious festivals. It is remarkable that this prohibition is twice connected with the offering of first-fruits, a festival peculiarly privileged as an occasion of domestic and national joy, (Deut. 26. 11.) But on no solemn occasion of thanksgiving has the disposition to indulgence been more observable than in the celebration of the Harvest Home—the very festival, in modern language, to which the prohibition is appended. Of this festival, amongst the Jews, a kid constituted an essential part, being appointed for a sin-offering and atonement, Lev. 23. 19. Num. 28. 30. This being observed, two questions present themselves. (1) Why prohibit no other young animal but a kid? According to the manner of Scripture, which ever avoids prolixity in its laws, one of the sacrificial animals stands for them all. This abbreviation may be exemplified, Exod. 20. 7. where "the name of the Lord" stands, by irresistible inference, for his "names, titles, attributes, ordinances, words, and works, or any thing whereby he maketh himself known." (2) Can the reference to seething this kid, seeing it was a sacrifice? It will appear from examining Lev. 23. 19. & 4. 23. & 3. 15—15. that the chief parts of the sin-offering (Lev. 6. 25, 29.) were to be "eaten in the holy place by all the males among the priests." (3) A third question still remains, Why specially prohibit seething in the mother's milk? From Zech. 14. 21. it appears that seething was the common mode of preparing the feast of the sacrifices. But amongst God's ordinances for sacrifice, we find the following: Lev. 22. 27. "When a bullock, or goat, or sheep, is brought forth, then, it shall be seven days under the dam, and from the eighth day and thenceforth, it shall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the Lord." Now it is during these seven reserved and prohibited days, that the kid is said to be in or on its mother's milk; and, as during that period, it could not be sacrificed to the honour of God; so, during a like period, it should not be devoted either to the sustenance or epicurism of man. The prohibition was therefore a special memorial to the priests, for a strict adherence to the ritual of divine service, and a solemn caveat against any infringement, through temptation of appetite—a restraint, which, if the priests faithfully imposed upon themselves, there was every reason to expect, would extend its self-denying influence to the people.—EDITOR.

fluence. Let me therefore honour JEHOVAH with due worship, and with the first-fruits of all my increase; and regard magistrates as his deputies on earth, who are bound in the most exact manner to punish crimes against God or men. If God be my pattern, let me prepare, of my goodness, for the poor. It is more blessed to give than to receive. While I have new covenant provision, let my soul never live on that which is corrupt, or can be torn from me; but, despising the blessings of earth, show myself fully satisfied with the rich provisions of divine grace.

28 And [s] I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite, from before thee.

29 I will [t] not drive them out from before thee in one year; lest the land become desolate, and the beast of the field multiply against thee.

30 By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land.

31 And [u] I will set thy bounds from the Red sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the [*] river: for I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou shalt drive them out before thee.

32 [x] Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods.

AND he said unto Moses, [a] Come up unto the LORD, thou, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and [b] seventy of the elders of Israel; and worship ye afar off.

2 And [c] Moses alone shall come near the LORD: but they shall not come nigh; neither shall the people go up with him.

3 ¶ And Moses came and told the people [d] all the words of the LORD, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, [e] All the words which the LORD hath said will we do.

4 ¶ And Moses [f] wrote all the words of the LORD, and [g] rose up early in the morning, and [h] builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

5 And he sent [i] young men of the children of Israel, which offered [k] burnt-offerings, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the LORD.

6 And Moses [l] took half of the blood, and put it in basons; and half of the blood he sprinkled [m] on the altar.

7 And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, [n] All that the LORD hath said will we do, and be obedient.

8 And Moses took the [o] blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold [p] the blood of the covenant, which the LORD hath made with you concerning all these words.

9 ¶ [q] Then went up Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the [*] elders of Israel;

10 And they saw the [r] God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness.

11 And upon the [s] [†] nobles of the children of Israel he [t] laid not his hand: also [u] they saw God, and [x] did eat and drink.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount, and be there; and I [y] will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them.

13 And Moses rose up, and his [s] minister Joshua; and Moses went up into the mount of God.

14 And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you: and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you; if any REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIII.—Think, O my soul, have I taken heed to my ways, that I might not sin with my tongue? Have I always acted with conscience and impartiality in all my conduct? Have I always spoken only the truth, and that in due season, and with a good intent? Have I been a hater of bribery and all perverting of justice? Have I entertained strangers; done good to mine enemies; and prayed for them that despitefully use me? Do I in all things acknowledge God, the giver of my mercies? Am I careful to keep his sabbaths, and to observe every instituted opportunity of fellowship with him? Are even his most circumstantial laws hidden in my heart?—While I thus seriously examine myself, endeavour to conform myself to his will, and lament my infirmities and failings, let me rejoice that Jesus, the angel of the covenant, will safely lead me through this wilderness-world to the promised Canaan above, where no accursed inhabitant shall ever molest me, nor idols deceive me. Meanwhile, let him put out my inward corruptions, and the enemies of his people, by little and little; and let me keep myself from idols, and from voluntary intimacy with wicked men, cheerfully obeying his gracious voice, that I may not feel the rod of his chastisement, but in all my ways rejoice in his presence, blessing, and protection.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 4. The altar represented God the chief party in the covenant, and the twelve stony pillars the tribes of Israel, as having hard and stony hearts.—Ver. 6—8. The sprinkling of the blood on the altar, the book, the young men, the elders, and the pillars which represented the people, denoted the satisfaction of God's perfections, the fulfilment of the broken law, and the purification of men's consciences by the blood of Jesus. Hence, in ver. 9, 10, God, perhaps in human shape, appears as smiling on them: and they, with comfort and safety, feast in his presence.—Ver. 16. In these six days Moses is prepared to receive new commandments, as the people were in three days prepared for hearing the law.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIV.—One instance of fellowship with God ensures and prepares for another more remarkable, while believers are allowed to come even to his seat—for this purpose his oracles are revealed, and his ordinances dispensed to us. But how many rashly consent to God's covenant, and resolve on duty, who in the issue prove very unsteadfast! Let me then bless the Lord that our new covenant is made with all the elect, however hard-hearted in themselves; and that it is a new testament in Christ's blood. His finished atonement hath glorified his Father's perfections to the highest; hath magnified the law; and

5 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and [e] shittim-wood,

6 [f] Oil for the light, spices for anointing oil, and for sweet incense,

7 [g] Onyx-stones, and stones to be set in the ephod, and in the breastplate.

8 And [h] let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them.

9 According to all that I show thee, after the pattern [i] of the tabernacle, and the pattern of [k] all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it.

10 ¶ [l] And they shall make an ark of shittim-wood: [†] two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

11 And thou shalt overlay it with [m] pure gold: within and without shalt thou overlay it; and shalt make upon it a [n] crown of gold round about.

12 And thou shalt cast four rings of gold for it, and put them in the four corners thereof; and two rings shall be in the one side of it, and two rings in the other side of it.

13 And thou shalt make [o] staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold.

14 And thou shalt put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, that the ark may be [p] borne with them.

15 The staves shall be in the rings of the ark; they shall not be taken from it.

16 And thou shalt put into the ark the [q] testimony which I shall give thee.

17 ¶ And thou shalt make a [r] mercy-seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof.

18 And thou shalt make two [s] cherubims of gold: of beaten work shalt thou make them, in the two ends of the mercy-seat.

19 And make one cherub on the one end, and the other cherub on the other end; even [t] of the mercy-seat shall ye make the cherubims on the two ends thereof.

20 And the [u] cherubims shall stretch forth their wings on high, covering the mercy-seat with their wings, and their faces shall look one to another; [x] toward the mercy-seat shall the faces of the cherubims be.

21 And thou shalt put the [y] mercy-seat above upon the ark; and in the ark thou shalt put the [z] testimony that I shall give thee.

22 [*] And [a] there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel.

23 ¶ [b] Thou shalt also make a table of shittim-wood: two cubits shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

24 And thou shalt overlay it with [c] pure gold, and make thereto a [d] crown of gold round about.

25 And thou shalt make unto it [e] a border of an hand-breadth round about; and thou shalt make a golden crown to the border thereof round about.

pacifies and purges our conscience from dead works. By these means I am determined to receive his words into my heart, as indeed the word of God, since I am allowed the clear and amiable displays of a reconciled God, while in his presence I feast on the flesh and blood of his Son. But, behold, likewise, how my Redeemer, having fulfilled the law, and by himself purged away our sins, ascends into the hill of God, sits down on the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens, and thence, in due time, he will return without sin unto salvation.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1. These, and other ceremonial institutes, are minutely described, because they flowed from the mere will of God. They were significant of great and important things; and were to be strictly observed in the adoration of a God, jealous with respect to his own worship.——Ver. 8. While this tabernacle was a sign of God's presence with, and protection of, his people, it was a type (1) of Christ's person; Heb. viii. 2; (2) of the gospel-church, the habitation of God by the Spirit; 2 Cor. vi. 16; (3) of every Christian in whose heart God dwells; Cor. iii. 16. and vi. 19; (4) of the new covenant and heavenly state; Is. lxvi. 1; and according to these different significations may the furniture thereof be understood in different views.——Ver. 10. The ark was the chief of all the sacred furniture which peculiarly sanctified the tabernacle, and for which it was principally made.——Ver. 16. The two tables of stone upon which the law was written, are called the Testimony, because they witnessed the covenant between God and the people; testified what God required of them; and testified against them if they observed it not.——Ver. 17. The lid, or mercy-seat, placed between the tables of the law, and the shechinah, or cloudy symbol of the divine presence, denoted Jesus' atonement; which answers to all the demands of the law, and interposes between us and Jehovah, that he may deal mercifully with us in Christ.——Ver. 18. The cherubims signified angels, as prying into the mysteries of redemption, and ministering to Christ and his people; or ministers, as founded on Christ, admiring his work, and attending on God and his service.——Ver. 23. This table typified Christ, as having all fulness in him, and supporting and presenting before God all his people; and also the gospel-church and the ordinances of it.——Ver. 31. This candlestick typified Christ himself, or his gospel-church and ordinances thereof.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXV.—Since, in deep compassion to human poverty, JEHOVAH hath freely taken upon himself the whole expense of the work of redemption; the infinite expense of raising up a Saviour, erecting a church, and preparing a new covenant and an heavenly state, as means of his residence amongst us,—since he has made Jesus an ARK for holding and fulfilling his law; a propitiatory or MERCY-SEAT, whence, to the everlasting astonishment of angels and men, and by their ministration, he may declare his oracles, promises, and laws:—a TABLE to feed his people, and on which the tribes of the redeemed are, in their successive generations, safely and honourably presented before God;—and a LIGHT to his church, by his word and Spirit;—may I, may thousands more, be the willing members of his church! Let us surrender ourselves, and all that we have, whether more or less valuable, to the service of Christ! Following with care the prescriptions of heaven, let us come boldly to the throne of his grace, and commune with our God! Let us feast from day to day, especially from one sabbath to another, upon Jesus, the bread indeed,—Jesus, the finest of the wheat; that we may be to God a sweet savour of Christ! And, even in this earthly tabernacle and militant church, let us walk in the light of the Lord; so shall we shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life!

15 ¶ And thou shalt make [l] boards for the tabernacle of shittim-wood, standing up.

16 Ten cubits shall be the length of a board, and a cubit and a half shall be the breadth of one board.

17 Two [m] tenons shall there be in one board, set in order one against another: thus shalt thou make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

18 And thou shalt make the boards for the tabernacle, twenty boards on the south side southward.

19 And thou shalt make forty sockets of silver under the twenty boards: two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

20 And for the second side of the tabernacle, on the north side, there shall be twenty boards,

21 And their forty sockets of silver: two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

22 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward thou shalt make six boards.

23 And two boards shalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

24 And they shall be [n] coupled together beneath, and they shall be coupled together above the head of it unto one ring: thus shall it be for them both; they shall be for the two corners.

25 And they shall be eight boards, and their sockets of silver, sixteen sockets: two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

26 ¶ And thou shalt make [o] bars of shittim-wood; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle, 27 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the side of the tabernacle, for the two sides westward.

28 And the middle bar in the midst of the boards shall reach from end to end.

29 And thou shalt overlay the boards with gold, and make their rings of gold for places for the bars: and thou shalt overlay the bars with gold.

30 And thou shalt rear up the [p] tabernacle, [p] according to the fashion thereof which was showed thee in the mount.

p The various parts of this tabernacle "serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things," Heb. 8. 5. 1. The vail represents the flesh of Christ, veiling his Godhead, Heb. 10. 20, and opening the way by death, to the heavenly mercy-seat, Rom. 3. 25, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, or mercy-seat, &c. 2. The tabernacle represents Christ's Godhead incarnate, Heb. 9. 11, 12. Col. 1. 19—2. 9. 3. The curtains with the cherubims prefigure the Father's providential covering of Christ and his church, by the ministry of angels, and other means, Luke 22. 43. Heb. 1. 13, 14. 4. The very nice exactness of the curtains, represents the fitness of the means used in providence and redemption, Rom. 8. 28. 5. The coverings of goats' hair and rams' skins, the relics of the sacrifices, represent both the legal types and the actual sacrifice by which He is set forth and vested in the gospel, (Heb. 9. 23—28.) till his second coming. 6. The sockets of silver, the tenons and bars, most aptly point to the fundamental truths of the gospel, their relative adaptation, and the firmness and stability of gospel ordinances. 7. The absolute necessity of regeneration and holiness are signified by the divine prescription of every thing, the most minute. 8. The gold and silver of which the taches were made, being precious metals, (Zech. 13. 9.) represent the pure faith of God's people, and the precious emblem of Christ's person, (Rev. 1. 15.) of the blessed union of Christ and his church, and the holy communion among its members, while the overlaying it with pure gold is beautifully illustrated in Rom. 3. 22. 9. The door, with its hangings of three royal colours, represents Christ the door, in all the beauty of holiness.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVI.—How graciously God suits the tokens of his favour to our circumstances, as he formed a moveable residence, and furniture for himself, to the wandering condition of his chosen people. But herein may I contemplate Jesus, mean and debased in the view of carnal beholders, but inwardly decked with all the golden glories of Godhead, and the pure graces of manhood! I see how every thing about him, as Mediator, is founded and fixed in, erected and Joined together, according to the purpose, and by the infinite wisdom and power, of God. Let me behold, likewise, the Christian church, outwardly despicable in the view of a carnal world, but inwardly decked, established, and knit together, by every precious ordinance, spiritual grace, faithful minister, or true saint! Let my entrance into her be by Jesus Christ, the door, the way, the truth, and the life: and, amidst all my outward infirmities, let me be all-glorious within, a meet habitation

[*] The whole tabernacle was an oblong square, or parallelogram, fifty-five feet in length, by eighteen feet in breadth and height. The interior was divided into two apartments, of which the outer was called the holy place, and the inner the most holy place, or holy of holies. The hanging that separated these apartments was called the vail; and hence the expression within and without the vail. The people were never admitted to either of these apartments. The priests alone went into the outer, and the high priest, once a year, into the interior. The most holy place contained only the ark and its contents; the holy place contained the altar of incense, table of shew-bread, and candlestick. The open court in front of the tabernacle contained the brazen altar and laver.—ED.

2 ¶ And thou shalt make [c] holy garments for Aaron thy brother, for glory and for beauty.

3 And thou shalt speak unto all that are [d] wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments to consecrate him, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

4 And these are the [*] garments which they shall make; [e] a breastplate, and an ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat, a mitre, and a girdle: and they shall make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

5 And they shall take [f] gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen.

6 ¶ [g] And they shall make the ephod of gold, of blue, and of purple, of scarlet, and fine twined linen, with cunning work.

7 It shall have the two shoulder-pieces thereof joined at the two edges thereof; and so it shall be joined together.

8 And the [h] curious girdle of the ephod, which is upon it, shall be of the same, according to the work thereof; even of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 [i] And thou shalt take two onyx-stones, and grave on them the names of the children of Israel.

10 Six of their names on one stone, and the other six names of the rest on the other stone, [k] according to their birth.

11 With the work of an engraver in stone, like the engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones with the names of the children of Israel: thou shalt make them to be set in ouches of gold.

12 And thou shalt [l] put the two stones upon the shoulders of the ephod, for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel: and Aaron shall [†] bear their names before the LORD upon his two shoulders for a memorial.

13 And thou shalt make ouches of gold;

14 And two chains of pure gold at the ends: of wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the ouches.

15 ¶ And thou shalt make the [m] breastplate of judgment with cunning work; after the work of the ephod thou shalt make it: of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine twined linen, thou shalt make it.

[e] The high priest's dress was composed of the ephod, the girdle, the shoulder-piece, the breastplate, the Urim and Thummim, the robe of the ephod, the mitre, the coat of fine linen, the bonnets, and the linen breeches. The ephod was a close embroidered robe, reaching from the shoulders to the loins, confined there by the girdle. On each shoulder-piece was a socket of gold, containing an onyx-stone, with the names of the tribes; and on the breastplate were twelve gems, also having the names of the tribes. The typical bearing of these is very significant, Is. 9. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 7. John 15. 9. Heb. 9. 24. The Urim and Thummim, or "lights and perfections," were identical with the gems on the breastplate, compare ver. 29. with ver. 30. & ch. 39. 8—21. with Lev. 8. 8. As responses were anciently obtained by these, so will it be still. Our high priest has his elect constantly upon his heart, and is continually making intercession for them. The robe of the ephod was a long, blue, linen gown, reaching to the ankles, and decorated with pomegranates and bells. Christ's robe of righteousness covers the whole man. The mitre was a turban of fine linen, having a plate of gold, which the bonnets wanted. The believer's diadem will be a crown of glory that fadeth not away. The linen breeches reached from the loins to a little below the knee, made tight by strings drawn close like a purse.—ED.

of God through the Spirit! Thus shall I have access with boldness, by the blood of Jesus, into the sanctuary of fellowship with God on earth, and in due time into the heavenly state, the holiest of all.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVII.—Since I have the once debased, the all-atoning, all-perfect, powerful, and all-accessible, Jesus for my altar;—since I have his church and ordinances for a court and place of worship, divinely bounded and protected;—the oracles, gifts, and graces of his Spirit, for my all-illuminating oil;—let me, conscious of crimes unnumbered, flee to him as my refuge, and by faith lay hold on his horns of saving power and authority. Let me give up myself, and all that I have, to God through him; that in his courts I may behold his person and work, and worship him in fear. Let me, whether minister or private Christian, exert myself, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified; and, with exercised gifts and graces, let me shine forth as a light in the house of my God.

25 And the other two ends of the two wreathen chains thou shalt [§] fasten in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod before it.

26 And thou shalt make two rings of gold, and thou shalt put them upon the two ends of the breastplate, in the border thereof, which is in the side of the ephod inward.

27 And two other rings of gold thou shalt make, and shalt put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the fore-part thereof, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

28 And they shall bind the breastplate by the rings thereof unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate be not loosed from the ephod.

30 ¶ And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the [*] Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart when he goeth in before the LORD: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the LORD continually.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make [‖] the robe of the ephod all of blue.

32 And there shall be an hole in the top of it, in the midst thereof: it shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of an habergeon, that it be [n] not rent.

33 And beneath, upon the [*] hem of it, thou shalt make [x] pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and [y] bells of gold between them round about:

34 A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about.

35 And it shall be upon Aaron to minister: and his [z] sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the LORD, and when he cometh out, that he die not.

36 ¶ And thou shalt make a [a] plate of pure gold, and grave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

37 And thou shalt put it on a blue lace, that it may be upon the [†] mitre; upon the forefront of the mitre it shall be.

38 And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may [b] bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the LORD.

39 ¶ And thou shalt embroider the [c] coat of fine linen, and thou shalt make the [d] mitre of fine linen, and thou shalt make the [e] girdle of needle-work.

40 ¶ And [f] for Aaron's sons thou shalt make coats, and thou shalt make for them girdles, and bonnets shalt thou make for them, for glory and for beauty.

41 And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him; and shalt [g] anoint them, and [‡] consecrate them, and sanctify them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

42 And thou shalt make them linen [h] breeches to cover [§] their nakedness; from the loins even [‖] unto the thighs they shall [‖] reach.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVIII.—Come, my soul, is not the smell of my Redeemer's garments, his unspotted manhood, his mediatorial office, and his everlasting righteousness, as of a field which the Lord hath blessed! Are not these for glory and for beauty to himself and to his people! Is he not every way fitted to attract the admiration of angels and of men! every way qualified to atone for, to remember his people, and present them before God! Are not even the appearances and actions of his debased state calculated to promote his own and his Father's honour, and our everlasting happiness! Let me then behold and receive him as the Great High Priest of my profession; behold how, in his manhood, in his mediatorial office, and finished righteousness, he bears the names of all his chosen in all their diversified conditions, and supports and presents them before God! What sweet fruits, and joyful sounds, of gospel grace issue from his incarnation, righteousness, and intercession! In what a dignified manner hath he put away our sins that we die not! And, though in all things he must have the pre-eminence, let me, and all his children, be arrayed in our priestly robes of righteousness imputed, grace implanted, and of an holy conversation; and let me ever remember that it is death, eternal death, to all, but chiefly to ministers, if they attempt to serve God without putting on the Lord Jesus, as made of God to them righteousness, sanctification, and redemption.

15 [r] Thou shalt also take one ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram.

16 And [s] thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood, and sprinkle it round about upon the altar.

17 And thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and [t] wash the inwards of him and his legs, and put them unto his pieces, and [*] unto his head.

18 And thou shalt burn [u] the whole ram upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering unto the LORD: it is a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

CHAP. XXIX. Ver. 1, 2, 4. Their oblations signified, that they and their services should be holy, gracious, and excellent. Their washing signified justification and regeneration by the blood and Spirit of Christ.——Ver. 7. The common priests were, at least at first, anointed by sprinkling; but the high priest had oil poured out plentifully upon his head; Ps. cxxxiii. 3.——Ver. 12. The brazen altar was thus solemnly sanctified, that it might sanctify the offerings of the people.——Ver. 19. This was a kind of peace-offering, to thank God for calling them to the office, and to solicit his assistance in the discharge of it.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIX.—Through these dark shadows of good things to come, these washings, arrayings, oblations, and unctions, I look to Jesus and his ransomed offspring. I see his solemn call to his work, and theirs to their station. The infinite purity of his Godhead, the perfect holiness of his manhood; the complete humanity which he assumed; the extensive office which he undertook; the humble obedience which he fulfilled; the unbounded influences of the Holy Ghost which he received; fully qualified him to offer himself in his death, and to make continual intercession for us. Predestinated before the foundation of the world, wave-offering, and the shoulder of the [c] heave-offering which is waved, and which is heaved up, of the ram of the consecration, even of that which is for Aaron, and of that which is for his sons.

28 [h] And it shall be Aaron's and his sons' by a statute for ever from the children of Israel; for it is an heave-offering: and it shall be an heave-offering from the children of Israel of the sacrifice of their peace-offerings, even their heave-offering unto the LORD.

29 And [i] the holy garments of Aaron shall be his son's after him, to be [k] anointed therein, and to be consecrated in them.

30 And [*] that son that is priest in his stead shall put them on [l] seven days, when he cometh into the tabernacle of the congregation, to minister in the holy place.

31 And thou [m] shalt take the ram of the consecration, and seethe his flesh in the holy place.

32 And Aaron and his sons shall [n] eat the flesh of the ram, and the bread that is in the basket, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

33 And they shall eat those things wherewith the atonement was made, to consecrate and to sanctify them: but a [o] stranger shall not eat thereof, because they are holy.

34 And [p] if ought of the flesh of the consecrations, or of the bread, remain unto the morning, then thou shalt burn the remainder with fire: it shall not be eaten, because it is holy.

35 And thus shalt thou do unto Aaron, and to his sons, according to all things which I have commanded thee: [q] seven days shalt thou consecrate them.

36 And thou shalt [r] offer every day a bullock for a sin-offering for atonement: and thou shalt cleanse the altar, when thou hast made an atonement for it, and thou shalt [s] anoint it, to sanctify it.

37 Seven days thou shalt make an atonement for the altar, and sanctify it; and it shall be an altar [t] most holy: whatsoever toucheth the altar shall be holy.

38 ¶ Now this is that which thou shalt offer upon the altar: [u] two lambs of the first year, day by day, continually.[†] promised and typified at the fall, and manifested in the evening and end of the world, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, he is the daily, the continued salvation, provision, and comfort, of our souls; and, as reconciled in him, God dwells with and blesses us with all spiritual blessings.—Let none then approach to the sacred ministry without being washed in Jesus' blood, regenerated by his Spirit, endowed with his gifts and graces, and, at the same time, using due care and deliberation to prepare for their awful work. In the exercise of that ministry, let them daily exhibit Jesus as the atonement, food, and consolation of sinners; so shall God be present in his ordinances and bless the attenders.—Let every Christian likewise, as a redeemed priest unto God, always improve Jesus, as made of God unto him wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; that being purged in his atoning blood, clothed with his imputed righteousness, and endowed with his Spirit, he may daily live by faith on the Son of God, and offer up the spiritual sacrifices of prayer, praise, and good works; nay, his whole self, as acceptable to God through him; and let him constantly hold fellowship with a sanctifying God as his God, and his ALL in ALL.

7 And Aaron shall burn thereon [k] sweet incense every morning: when he [l] dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense upon it.

8 And when Aaron [*†] lighteth the lamps at even, he shall burn incense upon it; [m] a perpetual [‡] incense before the LORD, throughout your generations.

9 Ye shall offer [n] no strange incense thereon, nor burnt-sacrifice, nor meat-offering; neither shall ye pour drink-offering thereon.

10 And Aaron shall [o] make an atonement upon the horns of it once in a year with the blood of the sin-offering of atonements; once in the year shall he make atonement upon it throughout your generations: it is most holy unto the LORD.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 [p] When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel, after [§] their number, then shall they give every man a [q] ransom for his soul unto the LORD, when thou numberest them; that there be no plague among [r] them when thou numberest them.

13 This they shall give, every one that passeth among them that are [s] numbered, half a shekel, after the shekel of the sanctuary: (a shekel [t] is twenty [*] gerahs:) an half shekel shall be the offering of the LORD.

14 Every one that passeth among them that are numbered, from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the LORD.

15 [†] The rich [†] shall not give more, and the poor shall not [‡] give less, than half a shekel, when they give an offering unto the LORD, to make an atonement for your souls.

16 And thou shalt take the atonement-money of the children of Israel, and shalt appoint it for [u] the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be a [x] memorial unto the children of Israel before the LORD, to make an atonement for your souls.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Thou shalt also make [y] a laver of brass, [§] and his foot also of brass, to wash withal: and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein:

19 For Aaron and his sons shall [z] wash their hands and their feet thereat.

20 [a] When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water, that they die not; or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the LORD:

21 So they shall wash their hands and their feet, that they die not; and it shall be a statute [b] for ever to them, even to him and to his seed, throughout their generations.

22 ¶ Moreover, the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Take thou also unto thee [c] principal spices, of pure myrrh [*] five hundred shekels, and of sweet cinnamon half so much, even two hundred and fifty shekels, and of sweet calamus two hundred and fifty shekels,

24 And of cassia five hundred shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, and of oil-olive an [d] hin.

25 And thou shalt make it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compound after the art of the [e] apothecary: it shall be an [f] holy anointing oil.

26 And thou shalt [g] anoint the tabernacle of the congregation therewith, and the ark of the testimony,

27 And the table and all his vessels, and the candlestick and his vessels, and the altar of incense, 28 And the altar of burnt-offering with all his vessels, and the laver and his foot.

29 And thou shalt sanctify them, that they may be most holy: [h] whatsoever toucheth them shall be holy.

30 And thou shalt [i] anoint Aaron and his sons, and consecrate them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

31 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, This shall be an holy anointing oil unto me throughout your generations.

32 Upon man's [k] flesh shall it not be poured; [l] neither shall ye make any other like it, after the composition of it: it is holy, and it shall be holy unto you.

33 Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon a [m] stranger, [n] shall even be cut off from his people. [†]

34 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum; these sweet spices, with pure frankincense; of each shall there be a like weight.

35 And thou shalt make it a [o] perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, [‡] tempered together, pure and holy.

36 And thou shalt [p] beat some of it very small, and put of it [q] before the testimony in the tabernacle of the congregation, where [r] I will meet with thee: it shall be unto you most holy.

§ The form of the laver is not given. The expression his foot, to wash withal, suggests the probability, that the laver was a high vessel or cistern, from which the water could be let out by pipes and valves, and that the foot was a lower wider basin in and above which the laver stood, and into which the water fell, so that the priests could wash in the descending stream. This opinion is countenanced by the fact, that the orientals, till this day, dislike to wash in a basin, but prefer either a natural or artificial falling stream. This exhaustible laver in which the priests must be washed, "that they die not," represents that inexhaustible fountain, opened "for sin and for uncleanness," Zech. 13. 1. The washing of the hands and feet, represents the completeness of regeneration, (John 13. 10. 2 Cor. 5. 17.)—Ed.

† The perfumed anointing oil was poured (ver. 32.) on the tabernacle and its sacred contents, and upon Aaron and his sons, as the act, means, and witness of their being sanctified. That is separated from common use and service, and set apart to God. Oil was poured, at their inauguration, upon prophets, priests, and kings, or judges. It represents the Spirit of God, which alone qualifies for the effectual discharge of any duty. Thus it is said "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me," (Is. 61.) It was neither to be imitated nor put upon a stranger. From which we learn, that believers must follow God's word and spirit, not their own imagination, and that they must acknowledge none but Christ as their Prophet, Priest, and King, (John 10. 5.) —Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXX.—In this golden altar surely I discern Jesus, the God-man, crowned with glory and honour, and set down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, as the great Intercessor for his people, and the mean of the acceptance of all their prayers, praises, and religious services! In this ransom-money was not Jesus prefigured as giving himself equally for every one of his numbered, his chosen people, that no plague may be found among them? In this laver was not Jesus typified as the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness, in which all his people and ministers ought to wash their conscience and heart before and after every approach to God! In this sacred oil, I behold the Holy Ghost in his precious and manifold, but well-connected, gifts and graces, with which Jesus, his people, his ordinances, and none else are anointed of God! In this sacred incense I discern the precious and acceptable intercessions of my Redeemer, together with the cordial prayers, praises, and services of his people! Let me then, by faith, depend on his advocacy, since he presents his infinite merits before God, g To Egypt Israel went down shepherds, they came up expert artisans, "in all manner of workmanship." This attainment is justly attributed to the spirit of God, but we are not to overlook the means—even centuries of slavery—by which this great national change of habit was accomplished. But it is most important to observe these artisans were godly men, full of wisdom, understanding, and knowledge, knowing Christ, the wisdom of God, as set forth in the types of the law, and feeling the power of his spirit, as purifying their hearts.—Ed.

answerable to the circumstances of every particular member of his mystical body! Let all the Israel of God rest and rejoice in him as the redemption-price to the justice of God, while we daily wash in the fountain of his blood and Spirit, till we be without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing: and let the genuine spirit and grace of Christ dwell in us, and not the counterfeit appearance; for dreadful is the hazard of turning his grace into licentiousness, pretending the possession of the Spirit, or counterfeiting the work of God!

CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 15. Notwithstanding the work of the tabernacle was holy, and to be speedily and diligently done, yet nothing of it must be done on the sabbath-day.—The sabbath was a sign of God's acknowledging them for his people; and their observation of it was a sign of their acknowledging him for their God, Creator, Redeemer, and Sanctifier.——Ver. 18. The stony matter of these tables marked the perpetual obligation of the moral law, and the hardness of men's hearts, in which the Spirit of God alone can write it.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXI.—Nothing, even of natural excellency, but cometh from God. How easily and completely he can furnish his instruments for whatever service he calls them to; and therefore, with courage and comfort, may such, as have once his call, venture on the hardest work! But commonly we may observe, for the honour of Christ, who needed no assistant, and especially for the comfort of his servants, God sends forth his noted agents by twos! Great is the danger of sabbath-profanation: and yet how much are men disposed to it, especially if they can pretend the sacredness or the necessity of their work as an excuse! What exalted account God makes of Jesus Christ and his church. He, who spent but six days in creating a world, spends forty in prescribing a typical representation of those. But the most remarkable visits of God to men upon earth quickly come to an end; though he wisely frames every thing about his ordinances so as that it may be instructive and comforting. In these typical architects I may therefore behold Jesus, called of God to finish a work of redemption, and rear up a gospel-church—Jesus, qualified of God, by the unmeasured unction of the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, to fulfil the arduous task, and actually completing his design, to his own glory and the salvation of his people.

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 9. Stiff-necked signifies stubborn and disobedient, like unruly or unbroken bullocks, that will not submit their neck to the yoke.——Ver.

be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

5 And when Aaron saw it, [g] he built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation, and said, [h] To-morrow is a feast to the LORD.*

6 And [i] they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings; and the people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

7 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [k] Go, get thee down; for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves:

8 [l] They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, [m] I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiff-necked people:

10 Now therefore [n] let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and I will make of thee a great nation.

11 ¶ [o] And Moses besought † the LORD his God, and said, LORD, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand?

12 [p] Wherefore should the Egyptians speak, and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and [q] repent of this evil against thy people.

13 [r] Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, [s] and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever.

14 And the LORD [t] repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.‡

15 ¶ And Moses turned, and [u] went down from the mount, and the two tables of [x] the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written.

16 And the [y] tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.

17 And when [z] Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp.

18 And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for * being overcome; but the [a] noise of them that sing do I hear.†

19 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that [b] he saw the calf, and the dancing; and Moses' [c] anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.‡

20 [d] And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire,§ and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

21 ¶ And Moses said unto Aaron, What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them?

22 And Aaron said, Let not the anger of my lord wax hot: thou knowest the people, that they [e] are set on mischief.

23 [f] For they said unto me, Make us gods which shall go before us: for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

24 And I said unto them, Whosoever hath any gold, let them break it off. So they gave it me: then I cast it into the fire, and [g] there came out this calf.‖

25 ¶ And when Moses saw that the people were [h] naked, (for Aaron had made them naked unto their [i] shame among * their enemies,)

26 Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, [k] Who is on the LORD's side? let him come unto me. And [l] all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him.

27 And he said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man [m] his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour.

28 And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and there fell of the people that day about three thousand [n] men.

19. Moses brake the tables, not in rage, but in holy zeal, to mark that their sin might justly provoke God to give up his covenant-relation to them, and deprive them of his precious laws.——Ver. 25. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXII.—It is highly necessary that magistrates and ministers should attend to their charges closely, lest their absence occasion mischief: for those, who reckon God's counsels slow, readily rush headlong into ruin by their own; and most men are much readier to serve the devil than God, and to sacrifice one lust, pride itself not excepted, for the promotion of another still more sottish and absurd. Yea, even after the most solemn transactions with God, men quickly and fearfully stumble into sin; and the choicest saints are too apt to follow a multitude to do evil. But surely it is highly shameful when professed Christians imitate these idolaters in their mad revelling and mirth! All our wickedness is obvious and odious before God. And let professors of the true religion beware how they so corrupt themselves, lest God be ashamed to acknowledge them as his people! What a mercy is it for a guilty nation when they have powerful selves to-day to the LORD, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day.

30 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, Ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will [p] go up unto the LORD; peradventure I shall make an atonement for your sin.

31 And Moses [q] returned unto the LORD, and said, Oh this people have sinned [r] a great sin, and have made them gods of gold!

32 Yet [s] now, if thou wilt, forgive their sin; and if not, [t] blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written.*

33 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [u] whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book.

34 Therefore now [x] go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee. Behold, mine Angel shall go before thee: nevertheless, in the day when I visit, I will [y] visit their sin upon them.

intercessors at the throne of grace! They have to do with a gracious God, who takes pleasure to repent himself of the evil. Holy zeal for God, when prudently manifested on proper occasions, is highly becoming: but backsliders in heart shall be filled with their own ways, and have their idols broken before their eyes. And O, what misery and shame do good men bring on nations by joining them in their wickedness! The best excuse which they can make for their conduct is pitiful and absurd; and therefore it deeply concerns all men, in an evil day, to know whether they be on the Lord's side, or on that of his enemies. It is both necessary, honourable, and useful, to employ the strictest impartiality in the matters of God, and to use the most earnest intercessions with God, to avert, even for a time, his just vengeance from falling upon a nation which is ripened for destruction. And we have here the greatest encouragement to expect a gracious answer to our prayers.

the convictions of an awakened conscience, when God displays his terrors and appears as an enemy! There is need of uncommon humiliation and prayer when God's wrath is once kindled against a people, and he has begun to remove his ordinances from them. But when a gracious God, and a multitude of groaning hearts, meet together at the throne of grace, it is a token of his merciful designs; for he is ready to return to his praying people, and indulge them with the most astonishing familiarity. Their desire of fellowship and boldness of faith increases in his presence: and he will not refuse them any thing they ask, though it were to the whole of his kingdom. What blessing of direction, presence, or spiritual manifestation, can he deny us, who have Jesus our advocate within the vail! Come then, my soul, be no more a trifler in prayer, but make intercession with groans which cannot be uttered. Whatever I ask, believing, for myself, or my family, or the church, God will give it. Let me, adoring the sovereignty of his grace, press after clearer and clearer displays of his glory, his goodness, till at last I see him as he is! Awake, ye prayerless wasters of time!—Base and unprofitable are your fellowships with men, if compared to this of Moses with his God!

CHAP. XXXIV. Ver. 1.—Thus God left a mark of their rebellion on the tables in their not being hewn by himself; yet nevertheless he made his law to retain the same force; and manifested, that it is not graciously inscribed in our hearts, till once they be hewn and broken by Moses' covenant form of it.——Ver. 7. It is a part of goodness to hate and punish evil.——Ver. 13. For privacy and solemnity, to prevent interruption, and perhaps in imitation of the patriarchs, the heathens planted groves, in which they worshipped their idols.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIV.—It is a great mercy to have God's law manifested to us; but especially written on our hearts, when hewn by convictions of sin; and the necessity of reconciliation with God, through Christ, discovered thereby. Ministers must labour to hew men's hearts: but it is only God who can write divine truths in them. The most ready and believing dispatch is necessary in making up the breaches between God and our soul. But pleasant and transporting indeed are remarkable discoveries of the glory and grace of God! His new covenant name is exactly suited to our sinful and destitute condition! Clear and distinct views thereof produce the boldest pleadings of faith at his throne of month Abib; for in the month Abib thou camest out from Egypt.

19 [e]All that openeth the matrix is mine; and every firstling among thy cattle, whether ox or sheep, that is male.

20 But the [f]firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a [*]lamb: and if thou redeem him not, then shalt thou break his neck. All the first-born of thy sons thou shalt redeem; and [g]none shall appear before me empty.

21 ¶ [h]Six days thou shalt work; but on the seventh day thou shalt rest: in earing-time and in harvest thou shalt rest.

22 ¶ [i]And thou shalt observe the feast of weeks, of the first-fruits of wheat-harvest, and the feast of in-gathering at the [†]year's end.

23 ¶ [k]Thrice in the year shall all your men-children appear before the LORD God, the God of Israel.

24 For I [l]will cast out the nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders: neither shall [m]any man desire thy land when thou shalt go up to appear before the LORD thy God thrice in the year.

25 ¶ [n]Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven; neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover [o]be left until the morning.

26 [p]The first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring unto the house of the LORD thy God. [q]Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.[‡]

27 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [r]Write thou these words:[§] for [s]after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee, and with Israel.

28 [t]And he was there with the LORD forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water: and [u]He wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten [‖]commandments.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, (when he came down from the mount,) that Moses [*]wist not that [x]the skin of his face shone while He talked with him.

30 And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were [y]afraid to come nigh him.

31 And Moses [z]called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moses talked with them.

32 And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he [a]gave them in commandment all that the LORD had spoken with him in mount Sinai.

33 And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put [b]a vail on his face.[*]

34 But when Moses went in before the LORD, to speak with Him, he [c]took the vail off until he came out. [d]And he came out, and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded.

35 And the children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone: and Moses put [*]the vail upon his face again, until he went in to speak with Him.

AND Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, These are the words which the LORD hath commanded, that ye should [*]do them.

2 [b]Six days shall work be done; but on the seventh day there shall be to you [*]an holy day, a sabbath of rest to the LORD: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death.

3 Ye shall [c]kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath-day.

4 ¶ And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the LORD commanded, saying,

5 [d]Take ye from among you an offering unto the LORD: [e]whosoever is of a willing heart let him bring it, an offering of the LORD; gold, and silver, and brass,

6 And [f]blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and [g]goats' hair,

7 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim-wood,

8 And [h]oil for the light, and [i]spices for anointing oil, and for the sweet incense,

9 And [k]onyx-stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breastplate.

10 And every [l]wise-hearted among you shall come, and make [m]all that the LORD hath commanded;

11 [n]The tabernacle, his tent, and his covering, his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars, and his sockets;

12 The [o]ark, and the staves thereof, with the mercy-seat, and the vail of the covering;

* The ignorance of Moses beautifully illustrates an important fact on religious experience, viz., that one believer sees more grace in another, than that other sees in himself. The reason of the differences is plain. The one knows his own conflicts, the other sees nothing but the victories; the one feels his own weakness, the other sees nothing but a man "strong in the Lord;" the one feels the power of temptation, and exclaims, "O! wretched man that I am," the other sees nothing but the grace of God (upon him) and is glad," Acts 11. 23.—ED.

grace, and we cannot sufficiently admire that God should so often repeat his promises, warnings, and laws, to us, who are so ignorant, heedless, and forgetful. How great is their safety who live in close fellowship with him! He takes pleasure to honour such as honour him; and clear views of the glory of God beget in his people the most glorious conformity to him, and elevate above all the fears or hopes of nature.—But it is very becoming when those, who are most distinguished with gifts and graces, are, through lowliness of mind, scarcely conscious of their own excellencies! when others are more sensible of our spiritual beauty than we ourselves are!—and when ministers, who have the deepest insight into divine things, accommodate their instructions to their people's capacity!—In the whole of this breach and reconcilement between God and Israel, let me behold how the law entered that the offence might abound: but where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; that, as sin had reigned unto death, grace might reign, through righteousness, unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord!

13 The [p] table, and his staves, and all his vessels, and the show-bread;

14 The candlestick also for the light, and his furniture, and his lamps, with the oil for the light;

15 [q] And the incense-altar, and his staves, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, and [r] the hanging for the door at the entering in of the tabernacle;

16 [s] The altar of burnt-offering, with his brazen grate, his staves, and all his vessels; the laver and his foot;

17 The [t] hangings of the court, his pillars, and their sockets, and the hanging for the door of the court;

18 The pins of the tabernacle, and the pins of the court, and their cords;*

19 The [u] clothes of service, to do service in the holy place; the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office.

20 ¶ And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses.

21 And they came, every one whose [x] heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the LORD's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for the holy garments.

22 And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought [y] bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold: and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the LORD.

23 And every man with whom [z] was found blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, and red skins of rams, and badgers' skins, brought them.

24 Every one that did offer an offering of silver and brass brought [†] the LORD's offering: and every man with whom was found shittim-wood, for any work of the service, brought it.

25 And all the [a] women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen.

26 And all the women, whose heart stirred them up in wisdom, spun goats' hair.

27 And [b] the rulers brought onyx-stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breastplate;

28 And spice, and oil for the light, and for the anointing oil, and for the sweet incense.

29 The children of Israel brought a [c] willing offering unto the LORD, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work, [d] which the LORD had commanded to be made by the hand of Moses.

30 ¶ And Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, [e] the LORD hath called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah;

31 And he hath filled him with the spirit of God, [f] in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship;

32 And to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, 33 And in the cutting of stones to set them, and in carving of wood, to make any manner of cunning work.

34 And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, both he, and Aholiab the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan.

35 Them hath he filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work of the engraver, and of the [g] cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise [*] cunning work. [†]

CHAPTER XXXVI.

(1) The collected materials delivered to Bezaleel and Aholiab: 1—4. (2) The people offer so liberally, that restraint is put upon them: 5—7. (3) The appurtenances of the tabernacle itself; its fine inner curtains, 8—13; its three outer coverings 14—19; its boards, 20—30; cross bars, 31—34; partition-vail, 35, 36; and vail for the door, 37, 38.

THEN wrought [a] Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whom the LORD put wisdom and understanding, to know how to work all manner of work for the service of the sanctuary, [b] according to all that the LORD had commanded.

2 And Moses [c] called Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whose heart the LORD had put wisdom, even every one whose heart stirred him up, to come unto the work to do it.

3 And they received of Moses all the offering which the children of Israel [d] had brought for the work of the service of the sanctuary, to make it withal. And they brought yet unto him free-offerings every [e] morning.

4 And all the [f] wise men, that wrought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which they made;

5 And they spake unto Moses, saying, The people bring [g] much more than enough for the service of the work which the LORD commanded to make.

† The narrative of Moses has been questioned, on the allegation, that the Israelites in the wilderness could not have had so much property. But, in Egypt, though enslaved, they still had flocks and herds, and from their produce and sale, must have had money. They also had houses and furniture, the valuable metallic parts of which they would naturally carry off in their baggage. Then they obtained large donations from the Egyptians, and probably many spoils from the host of Pharaoh, all of which will sufficiently account for their means of such liberal contributions to the tabernacle.—ED.

generally relate no more but the execution of what was directed in chapters xxv—xxviii, xxx, xxxi. the notes and reflections there found are referred to. Only let me observe, that the glory of God, the happiness of men, are deeply interested in the exact observance of the sabbath; and that God will either have voluntary service, or will not accept of it at all. Sincere repentance always issues in hearty dedications to God: and it is comely when professors, according to their respective abilities, concur in promoting the honour and service of God. In such a work he graciously accepts, not according to what they have not, but according to what they have, if there be first a willing mind. And, since God liberally furnishes such as he calls to public offices in his church, the greater our gifts or grace, or the higher our station, the more earnest ought to be our labour in the service of Christ, and in helpfulness to our fellow-members.

6 And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing.

7 For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much.

8 ¶ [b] And every wise-hearted man, among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle, made ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet: with [i] cherubims of cunning work made he them.

9 The length of one curtain was [*] twenty and eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain [†] four cubits: the curtains were all of one size.

10 And he [k] coupled the five curtains one unto another; and the other five curtains he coupled one unto another.

11 And he made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain, from the selvedge in the coupling: likewise he made in the uttermost side of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

12 Fifty loops made he in one curtain, and fifty loops made he in the edge of the curtain which was in the coupling of the second: the loops held one curtain to another.

13 And he made fifty taches of gold, and coupled the curtains one unto another with the taches. So it became one tabernacle.[‡]

14 ¶ And he made curtains of goats' hair for the tent over the tabernacle: eleven curtains he made them.

15 The length of one curtain was [§] thirty cubits, and four cubits was the breadth of one curtain: the eleven curtains were of one size.

16 And he coupled five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves.

17 And he made fifty loops upon the uttermost edge of the curtain in the coupling, and fifty loops made he upon the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second.

18 And he made fifty taches of brass to couple the tent together, that it might be one.

19 ¶ And he made a covering [‖] for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering of badgers' skins above that.[*]

20 ¶ And he made boards for the tabernacle of [l] shittim-wood, standing up.

21 The length of a board was [†] ten cubits, and the breadth of a board [‡] one cubit and a half.

22 One board had two tenons, equally distant one from another: thus did he make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

23 And he made boards for the tabernacle: twenty boards for the south side southward;

24 And forty sockets of silver he made under the twenty boards: two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

25 And for the other side of the tabernacle, which is toward the north corner, he made twenty boards,

26 And their forty sockets of silver: two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

27 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward he made six boards.

28 And two boards made he for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

29 And they were [m] coupled beneath, and coupled together at the head thereof, to one ring: thus he did to both of them in both the corners.

30 And there were eight boards, and their sockets were sixteen sockets of silver, [*] under every board two sockets.

31 ¶ And he made bars [n] of shittim-wood: five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle,

32 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the tabernacle for the sides westward.

33 And he made the middle bar to shoot through the boards from the one end to the other.

34 And he overlaid the boards with [†] gold, and made their rings of gold to be places for the bars, and overlaid the bars with gold.

35 ¶ And he made [°] a vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: with cherubims made he it of cunning work.

36 And he made thereunto four pillars of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold: their hooks were of gold; and he cast for them four sockets of silver.

37 ¶ And he made an [p] hanging for the tabernacle-door of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, [‡] of needle-work:

38 And the five pillars of it with their hooks; and he overlaid their chapiters and their fillets with gold: but their five sockets were of brass.

* The Hebrew word translated Badger, is of uncertain meaning, but it is clear that it signifies some unclean animal. Why then is it the uppermost covering of the tabernacle? Because it is significant of the world, in which the church is still enveloped, and from which it is to be "called out and gathered," and of which our Lord says, (John 17. 15.) "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world." This covering is likewise significant of that protection which the world, though at heart a persecutor of Christ, does nevertheless, often afford to the church. Thus Pharaoh enriched and protected Abram in Egypt, (Gen. 12. 16, 20.) Thus Abimelech protected Isaac, (Gen. 26. 11.) ‡ The two cherubims were expansions of the mercy-seat. Now God's mercy-seat or propitiation is Christ, (Rom. 3. 25.) The cherubim represent the angels and all spiritual worshippers of God, and students of his mysteries, (1 Pet. 1. 12.) Now all these are of one, (Eph. 1. 10.) Christ is the vine, believers are the branches, (John 15. 5.) Christ the body, believers the members, (Eph. 5. 30.) Nay, the angels that are in heaven are thus spiritually united to him, for they believe in him and worship him, (Heb. 1. 6.) The cherubims have their faces towards one another, representing the communion of all pure spiritual minds. They look also down upon the mercy-seat, beneath which are laid the tables of the covenant. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXVII.—How unbounded is the excellency and usefulness of Christ, that so many things are necessary to represent him! Pleasant is the work of ministers and Christians, where he is ALL and IN ALL, the FIRST and the LAST! and it becomes them regularly to proceed from the inward to the outward concerns thereof. May I embrace Jesus as my propitiation! feed on him as my provision; walk in him as my light; depend on him as my interceding advocate; and, being anointed with his Spirit, offer up my supplications, intercessions, and thanksgivings, kindled by the holy fire of his love shed abroad in my heart.

† There is considerable difference of opinion about this correct translation of this passage. Luther, Matthewes, and others, render it, "and he made the laver under the inspection of the women, who ministered at the door." It is true that the word rendered looking-glasses, is else where in Scripture, rendered sight. Still the idea of inspection seems inconsistent with the description of the qualifications of Bezaleel for all manner of work. We prefer the authorised translation, and consider it as conveying an important lesson. That the ancient mirrors were generally polished brasses is admitted. That the women were accustomed to carry them to public worship, is also acknowledged. But, that beauty may not merely be pleasing to the beholder, but intoxicating to the possessor, is a melancholy fact in female history. Now, the minister of that beauty, presiding in its cenature; the friend that so often exhibits it to flatter and to fascinate the heart, is required for the service of God, and must be sacrificed, and freely these "holy women who trusted in God" did render up their second selves, evidencing by this act of self-denial, that to all "outward adorning of gold or putting on of apparel" they preferred "that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." (1 Pet. 3. 3, 4.)—Note. Genuine Christianity has alone raised woman to her proper place in society, and largely has woman repaid the boon. Since Hannah presented Samuel to the Lord, (1 Sam. 1. 28.) Since the faith of Lois and Eunice was transferred to Timothy, (2 Tim. 1. 5.); the instruction and prayers of godly self-denying mothers and sisters, in the family and the school, have conferred blessings on the church that eternity alone can reveal.—Ed.

If this increase appear to any improbable, let them recollect, that according to one of the best statistical authorities (Richenora, in the introduction to the Population Returns) the number of males above twenty, averages one half the entire number of males. The whole male population would thus be, at the exodus, 1,300,000. Now, taking the number of males under twenty at the exodus to be 600,000, and, making the largest deduction for those who ordinarily die before attaining twenty, a number will remain, still more than sufficient to supply the increase recorded in the text, with all the casualties besides, to which the people might be exposed, as well as for the further deduction of 22,000 Levites, excluded from the census by the command of God, Num. 1. 49.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXVIII.—The work still proceeds pleasantly from that which is most inward and important. And let us observe, that Jesus' atonement for sin, and the purification of our conscience from dead works, are closely linked together; that fervent devotion disposes persons to part with that, which others most admire, for the service of Christ. And it is necessary to examine ourselves in the glass of God's law when we go to the laver of Jesus' blood for spiritual purification. What a small enclosure is the church of Christ! it together: by the two edges was it coupled together.

5 And the curious girdle of his ephod that was upon it was of the same, according to the work thereof, of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen; as the LORD commanded Moses.

6 [d]And they wrought onyx-stones enclosed in ouches of gold, graven, as signets are graven, with the names of the children of Israel.

7 And he put them on the shoulders of the ephod, that they should be stones for a [e]memorial to the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses.

8 ¶ And he made the [f]breastplate of cunning work, like the work of the ephod; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 It was four-square; they made the breastplate double:[*] a span was the length thereof, and a span the breadth thereof, being doubled.

10 And they set in it four rows of stones: the first row was a [†]sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle; this was the first row.

11 And the second row, an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

12 And the third row, a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.

13 And the fourth row, a beryl, an onyx, and a jasper: they were enclosed in ouches of gold in their enclosings.

14 And the stones were according to the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet, every one with his name, according to the twelve tribes.

15 And they made upon the breastplate [g]chains at the ends of wreathen work of pure gold.

16 And they made two ouches of gold, and two gold rings, and put the two rings in the two ends of the breastplate.

17 And they put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings on the ends of the breastplate.

18 And the two ends of the two wreathen chains they fastened in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod before it.

19 And they made two rings of gold, and put them on the two ends of the breastplate, upon the border of it, which was on the side of the ephod inward.

20 And they made two other golden rings, and put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the fore-part of it, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

* Every object endangered merits, and should receive protection proportioned to its value, consequently the heart, as a chief organ of life, is naturally defended as by a fortress of many bones and muscles, in addition to which the eye and the arms are appointed as auxiliaries. But besides these natural defences, artificial aid is called in, and the soldier is covered with the cuirass or the breastplate. So, "the hidden man of the heart" (1 Pet. 3. 4.) requires to be "kept with all diligence," (Prov. 4. 23.) and that of every representative, as was the high priest, who required to keep it, first, on his own account, and secondly, on account of the people. Hence his typical breastplate was double, because the seal of the covenant was double, "that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to the hope set before us," (Heb. 6. 18.)—Note. The assurance of believers reposes under the double protection of Christ's brotherhood with them, (Heb. 2. 17, 18.) and his equality with the Father, (Phil. 2. 6. John 10. 15.)—ED.

* The minute and lengthened specification delivered to Moses, was at last finished. So our Lord says to the Father, "I have finished the works which thou gavest me to do," (John 17. 4.) Not meaning that the work of saving sinners was yet finished, (for that was not till he died and rose again, Rom. 4. 24.) but the work of glorifying the Father on earth as the angels do in heaven. Again he said, "it is finished," (John 19. 30.); yet still not the work of saving sinners, nor of casting out Satan, (for that was effected by death, (Heb. 2. 14.) which had not yet passed upon him) but the last voluntary act, foretold by the spirit of prophecy was finished, when having completed the will of him that sent him, he bowed the head and gave up the ghost.—Note. What a rebuke to indolence! what a stimulus to diligence! AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 On the first day of the [a] first month shalt thou set up the [b] tabernacle of the tent of the congregation;

3 And thou [c] shalt put therein the ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the vail.

4 And [d] thou shalt bring in the table, and set in order [e] the things that are to be set in order upon it; [f] and thou shalt bring in the candlestick, and light the lamps thereof.

5 And thou shalt set the [e] altar of gold for the incense before the ark of the testimony, and put the hanging of the door to the tabernacle.

6 [f] And thou shalt set the altar of the burnt-offering before the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

7 And thou shalt set the [g] laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and shalt put water therein.

8 And thou shalt [h] set up the court round about, and hang up the hanging at the court-gate.

9 ¶ And thou shalt [i] take the anointing oil, and anoint the tabernacle, and all that is therein, and shalt hallow it, and all the vessels thereof; and it shall be holy.

10 And thou shalt [k] anoint the altar of the burnt-offering, and all his vessels, and sanctify the altar: and it shall be an altar [l] most holy.

11 And thou shalt anoint the laver and his foot, and sanctify it.

12 ¶ And thou shalt [m] bring Aaron and his sons unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and wash them with water.

13 And thou shalt put upon Aaron the holy garments, and anoint him, and sanctify him; that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

14 [n] And thou shalt bring his sons, and clothe them with coats:

15 And thou shalt anoint them, as thou didst anoint their father, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office: for their anointing shall surely be an [o] everlasting priesthood throughout their generations.

16 Thus did Moses: [p] according to all that the LORD commanded him, so did he.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, in the first month, in the second year, on the first day of the month, that the [q] tabernacle was reared up.

18 And Moses [r] reared up the tabernacle, and fastened his sockets, and set up the boards thereof, and put in the bars thereof, and reared up his pillars.

19 And he [s] spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent above upon it; as the LORD commanded Moses.

20 ¶ And he took and put the [t] testimony into the ark, and set the staves on the ark, and put the [u] mercy-seat above upon the ark.

21 And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and [x] set up the vail of the covering, and covered the ark of the testimony; as the LORD commanded Moses.

CHAP. XL. Ver. 1—33. The form of the tabernacle when erected was as follows: the court was sixty-one yards long, and half as much in breadth. It was enclosed by a linen hanging of about nine feet in height, suspended by silver hooks, on fifty-six brazen pillars, filleted with silver, and fixed in large sockets of brass. The only entrance, from the east, was twelve yards wide, and hung over with a fine vail of embroidered linen, suspended on four pillars. Here, under the open sky, stood the brazen altar and laver; and hither every clean Hebrew or proselyte might come with his oblations. At the west end of this court stood the tabernacle itself; a close tent, in the form of a house, standing with its end towards the east. It was about eighteen and one-fourth yards long, six and one-twelfth broad, and as much in height. It was reared with forty-eight boards of shittim-wood, overlaid with gold, and fixed at bottom in ninety-six large sockets of silver, and bound together with five cross-bars of the same materials. On this frame was suspended a fourfold covering. The innermost consisted of ten embroidered linen curtains, each about seventeen yards in length, and about two and one-half yards in breadth, coupled with taches or buttons of gold. Over this was a covering of eleven curtains of goats' hair, coupled with taches of brass; the next was of rams' skins dyed red: the uppermost was of a strong leather, called badgers' skins. The whole east end was an entrance, and hung over with a fine vail of embroidered linen, suspended on five pillars, or boards, by golden hooks; and just before it, in the court, stood the brazen altar and laver. This tent was distinguished into two apartments. The first, or holy place, was in length twelve yards and six inches; into which only the clean priests might enter. At the inner, or west end of it, stood the golden candlestick, altar of incense, and table of show-bread. The second, or most holy place, or oracle, was at the west end of the former, and separated from it by a fine vail of embroidered linen, suspended on four pillars, fixed erect in large sockets of silver. It was a square of ninety-six yards and three inches. Here, amidst gross darkness, at the west end, was set the ark covered by the mercy-seat, and overshadowed by the golden cherubims; between which hovered the shechinah, or cloud of the divine presence. The tables of the law were put into the ark. The golden 24 ¶ And he put the [a] candlestick in the tent of the congregation, over against the table, on the side of the tabernacle southward.

25 And he lighted the lamps before the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.

26 ¶ And [a] he put the golden altar in the tent of the congregation before the vail.

27 And he burnt sweet incense thereon; as the LORD commanded Moses.

29 And he [c] put the altar of burnt-offering by the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation, and offered upon it the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering; as the LORD commanded Moses.

30 ¶ And he set [d] the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there, to wash withal.

31 And Moses, and Aaron, and his sons, [e] washed their hands and their feet thereat.

32 When they went into the tent of the congregation, and when they came near unto the altar, they washed; as the Lord commanded Moses.

33 ¶ And he [f] reared up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the [g] hanging of the court-gate: so Moses finished the work.

34 ¶ [h] Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

35 And Moses was [i] not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

36 And [k] when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel [*] went onward in all their journeys:

37 But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till the day that it was taken up.

38 For the cloud of the LORD was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys.[†]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XL.—It is comely when new years are commenced with remarkable transactions for God, and when every thing is performed and placed in due order; for God is ready to meet such as are occupied in his service, and remember him in all their ways. Desolate and dreary are ordinances if without the presence of God; but if the Spirit of God and of glory rest upon us, we may be well comforted, for God is with us and for us; and who then can be against us! But was not this reared tabernacle a type of our once apparently mean, but truly glorious Redeemer, in his manhood and mediatorial office; devised of God, and reared up with infinite skill; consecrated by the oil of the Holy Ghost, and his own bloody sufferings! In him dwells all the fulness of the Godhead. He is the mean of all our fellowship with God; and the treasury of all that atonement, purification, light, food, intercession, and acceptance, which is necessary for our souls. In his debased state he was made the atonement, the laver of purification; in his exalted state he is the eternal rest of JEHOVAH, and the enlightener, advocate, and feeder of his people. Was it not likewise a figure of the gospel-church, planned by the wisdom of God, and reared up by inspired ministers of Christ! Outwardly mean, but inwardly glorious, she is the residence of God in Christ; and in her he is worshipped in an acceptable manner. In her a fulness of atonement, purification, spiritual light, and provision, of acceptable prayers, praises, and services, are to be found. Was it not a figure of heaven itself, where all its emblems are realized, and in which Jesus, JEHOVAH, and every thing substantial, are to be found in the most eminent degree!

THE THIRD BOOK OF MOSES

CALLED

LEVITICUS.

THIS book, so called from its connexion with the Levitical tribe, contains the laws which God intimated to Moses from off the mercy-seat, during the first month after the tabernacle was erected; viz. (1) Laws relative to sacred oblations, burnt-offerings, meat-offerings, peace-offerings, sin-offerings, trespass-offerings; i—vii. (2) The history of the consecration of Aaron and his sons, and the death of the two eldest; laws concerning priests' mourning, and abstinence from liquor; viii—x. (3) Laws of purifications from ceremonial uncleanness, contracted by means of unclean beasts, childbirth, leprosy, running issues, public and national sins; xi—xvi. (4) Miscellaneous laws, prohibiting the eating of blood, sacrificing to devils, alliance with Canaanites, imitation of heathenish superstition and idolatry, theft, perjury, incest, sodomy, bestiality; or requiring abstinence from fruit of trees newly planted; leaving of gleanings to the poor; regulating the priests' mournings and marriages; marking the blemishes which disqualified them for their work, and partaking of the more sacred victuals, or which rendered animals unfit for sacrifice; xvii—xxii. (5) Laws directing the observation of their sacred solemnities; sabbath, passover, pentecost, feast of trumpets, feast of expiation, feast of tabernacles, release, jubilee; intermixed with some regulations relative to the lighting of the lamps, show-bread, punishment of blasphemy, murder, &c. lending to or buying of poor Hebrews; xxiii—xxv. (6) After promises of great favour to the obedient and penitent, and threatenings of manifold punishments to the disobedient, are subjoined laws regulating the dedication of things to the Lord, and redeeming them back; xxvi. xxvii.

Whatever this book, or some parts thereof, may appear to an ignorant and carnal mind,—to such as are truly sensible, and evangelical, it is a rich, though obscure mine of the gospel of Christ, typically exhibiting him as the great high priest, called and prepared of God for his work; exhibiting his sacrifice in its nature and form; and its influence, as appeasing the wrath of God, expiating the curse of sin, procuring peace to the mind, quieting the guilty conscience, nourishing the soul, and purifying the heart; exhibiting the gospel-method of cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh or spirit, inherent or contracted, by due applications of his blood and Spirit: and, in fine, exhibiting the necessity of abstaining from sin, in all its forms, appearances, and temptations; of exact attendance on instituted means of grace, and of perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord.

[The Moral Law, though in itself "holy and just," and "the commandment good," (Rom. vii. 12.) brings yet no gift to the sinner beyond "the knowledge of sin;" while by that knowledge "every mouth is stopped" from either palliation or denial of its sinfulness, and "all the world stands guilty before God," Rom. iii. 19, 20. Now this law, was delivered on the mount, "amidst blackness, and darkness, and tempest," Heb. xii. 18. But the Ceremonial Law, as it has been called, which is partly delivered in Exodus, and partly in Deuteronomy, and is spread out at large in Leviticus, was delivered "out of the tabernacle," where God appeared in all the mild effulgence of the Shechinah, and spoke from the mercy-seat, "God in Christ," preparing the way for the "word of reconciliation," 2 Cor. v. 19. This book may, accordingly be described as THE PICTORIAL GOSPEL;—the gospel for the eye, as well as for the ear; the gospel to the sense, that it may conduct to faith.

Taking the Epistle to the Hebrews as the key to this book, we discover that the gospel was presented by it in types, figures, emblems, or shadows. Heb. x. 1. A type is something shown as being more or less like another, and which it is intended to represent. The chief types of Christ, are, (1) persons, as Adam, Noah, Moses, Joshua, David; (2) offices, as the priestly, prophetical, and kingly; (3) places, as Jerusalem, Zion; (4) times, as the jubilee; (5) laws, as of the sabbath, of the first-born; (6) feasts, as of tabernacles; (7) special food, as of unleavened bread; (8) things made, or buildings erected, according to God's direction, as the golden candlestick, the tabernacle, the temple; (9) offerings, and sacrifices, of various kinds. Now these, with many other things, are severally called types of Christ, in so far as, by any inferior excellence, they contain and exhibit some correspondent but far more exceeding excellence in Christ. But whilst one great end of the Levitical institutions was to exhibit Christ to the eye and the understanding, another great end was—to gain him, as the promised seed and Saviour, a place in the heart. But when Christ enters, idolatry must be cast out. The Levitical institutions were therefore God's great antidote to idolatry. Now one of the most universal and besetting forms of idolatry, is "covetousness," Col. iii. 5. To rebuke, to check, to condemn, and to mortify covetousness, will accordingly be found one great spiritual end of all the ceremonial enactments. Hence, at every approach of the sinner, God demands his heart, through a claim upon his hand, thus testing the sincerity of the worship offered, through the cheerfulness of the surrender made. But another of the most general objects of idolatry is the appetite. So general and so melancholy is this fact, that Paul records it "weeping," and so general, that he affirms there are "many whose god is their belly." Phil. iii. 19. Now a large portion of the most stringent directions and interdicts of the Levitical institutions, is dedicated to the subject of food; and in this department, no doubt, their primary reference was to him who is "the bread of God which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." John vi. 33. But another object was by every feeling of appetite which it was forbidden to gratify, unless with food which God had sanctioned, to impose a daily, habitual, and above all, a divine restraint upon the appetite, and thus to teach the true worshippers of God to "keep under the body and bring it into subjection" in order to its being presented a "living sacrifice," Rom. xii. 1.

These views of the Levitical institutions, are intended to condemn, and through the spiritual and mortifying use of the sacrifices, utterly to cast out, the idols of covetousness and appetite, and, thus, to preserve undefiled the temple of the heart, "an habitation of God through the Spirit," (1 Cor. iii. 17. Eph. ii. 22.) will serve to illuminate our path as we attempt to trace out their shadowy mysteries, till we discover their connexion with the "body of Christ," "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Rom. x. 4.—ED.]

the burnt-offering. (1) The bullock: 1—9. (2) The sheep or goat: 10—13. (3) The bird: 14—17.

AND the [a] LORD called unto Moses, and spake unto him out of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man of you [b] bring an offering unto the LORD, ye shall bring your offering of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock.

3 ¶ If his offering be a burnt-sacrifice of the herd, let him offer a [c] male without blemish: he shall offer it of his own [d] voluntary will, [e] at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD.

4 And he shall [f] put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering; and it shall be [g] accepted for him, to make atonement for him.

5 And he shall [h] kill the bullock before the LORD: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, and [i] sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

6 And he shall [k] flay the burnt-offering, and cut it into his pieces.

7 And the sons of Aaron the priest shall [l] put fire upon the altar, and lay the wood in order upon the fire.

8 And the priests, Aaron's sons, shall [m] lay the parts, the head, and the fat, in order upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar.

9 But his [n] inwards and his legs shall he wash in water: and the priest shall [o] burn all on the altar, to be a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

10 ¶ And if his offering be of the flocks, namely, of the [p] sheep, or of the [q] goats, for a burnt-sacrifice; he shall bring it a male without blemish.

11 And [r] he shall kill it on the side of the altar northward before the LORD: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall sprinkle his blood round about upon the altar.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I. Ver. 2—9. The Jewish oblations, in their matter and ceremonies, were not only typical of Christ, but most of them also emblems of the moral duties of Christians, whether ministers or people. The matter of the offerings pointed at qualities in Christ, or in his people and their service. The male sex figured out the excellency of these; the being without blemish their purity; the voluntariness, the willingness and cheerfulness with which God must be served. The presenting at the door of the tabernacle, in ordinary cases, (for in extraordinary ones it might be otherwise, 1 Sam. vii. 9, and xi. 15. 2 Sam. xxiv. 18. 1 Kings viii. 64. and xviii. 32. Judg. vi. 26.) imported the acceptableness to be through the person and mediation of Christ. The laying on of the offerer's hand imported the transferring of guilt on the sacrifice, and devoting it to God. The sprinkling of the blood round about the altar imported the divinity of Christ's atonement, and the extensive virtue of it to all the church and ordinances thereof. The washing of the inwards and legs imports the perfect holiness of heart and life in Christ, and which ought to be in his people. The burning of the whole flesh imported that Christ was, and his people ought to be, wholly devoted to God. The holy fire denoted the wrath of God on Christ, and holy love in him, and in his people.

[CHAP. I. Ver. 3. The gospel—and we may rightly so speak—the gospel revealed to Moses, begins with an OFFERING, saying, "If any man (even the chief of sinners) offer an offering, rather, bring near an offering, thus announcing that no one can come near to God but by sacrifice; and that those who were once afar off, "are made nigh by the blood of Christ," (Eph. 2. 13.) "who offered up himself," Heb. 7. 27. It must be an offering without BLEMISH, either from malformation, disease, injury, or spot, (Comp. Mal. 1. 14. Num. 19. 2, 9, 11. with 28. 3.) wherein it is a lively image of him who was offered without "blemish or spot," (1 Pet. 1. 19.) while it also demands of the offerer that "holiness without which no man shall see the Lord," Heb. 12. 14. It must be a FREE-WILL-OFFERING; so Christ testifies, "I lay down my life—no man taketh it from me—I lay it down of myself," John 10. 17, 18. It must be offered before the Lord, not within, but at the door of the tabernacle; so Christ was offered up not in heaven, but upon earth, in virtue of which offering he summons the "everlasting doors to be lifted up" for the entrance of "the King of glory," Ps. 24. 7. 1 Cor. 2. 8; into which he entered as our forerunner, at once a priest and a sacrifice for ever.——Ver. 4. The laying of the hands on the head of the sacrifice, directs also to Christ for "the Lord laid on him the iniquities of us all," Is. 53. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 24. The sacrifice was accepted for atonement, that is, as the original implies, for covering the sin, agreeably to Ps. 32. 1. Rom. 4. 6. and so, reconciling God and man by the honouring of the violated law, Rom. 5. 11. Is. 42. 21.——Ver. 5. The sacrifice must be killed, thus "it behoved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead," (Luke 24. 46.) Because, "without shedding of blood there is no remission of sin, (Heb. 9. 22); and the believer receives this remission, because, in the sight of God, and the law, and his own conscience, he is reckoned actually as dead in, and with Christ, (Rom. 6. 2—11. 1 Pet. 2. 24.) and actually risen with him, and sitting with him in heavenly places, (Col. 3. 1. Eph. 1. 19, 20. & 2. 1, 5, 6.) of all which, the spirit working the life of faith in him, is now the evidence and earnest, 2 Cor. 5. 5. The blood is sprinkled, to exemplify its extended applicability. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him, might not perish," John 3. 16. It is sprinkled round about upon the altar, to exhibit the believer protected, on all sides, against the charge of the broken law; and thus, "there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," Rom. 8. 1.——Ver. 6. The flaying of the sacrifice, is the emblem of the grievous external cruelties inflicted on our Lord and his church. Mic. 3. 3. The cutting in pieces, pourtrays the efforts at total extinction, first directed against our Lord and his apostles, and occasionally, in some countries, and throughout all ages, against his faithful witnesses, Mat. 27. 20. 1 Cor. 4. 9. Rev. 6. 9.—— Ver. 7. The fire—diffusing the savour, and causing the elementary parts to ascend them in order on the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar.

13 [t] But he shall wash the inwards and the legs with water; and the priest shall bring it all, and burn it upon the altar: it is a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

14 ¶ And if the burnt-sacrifice for his offering to the LORD be of [u] fowls, then he shall bring his offering of turtle-doves, or of young pigeons.

15 And the priest shall bring it unto the altar, and [x] wring off his head, and burn it on the altar; and the blood thereof shall be wrung out at the side of the altar.

16 And he shall pluck away his crop with [y] his feathers, and cast it beside the altar on the east part, by the [z] place of the ashes.

17 And [a] he shall cleave it with the wings thereof, but shall [b] not divide it asunder: and the priest shall burn it upon the altar, upon the wood that is upon the fire: it is a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, [c] of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

AND when any will offer a [a] meat-offering unto the LORD, his offering shall be of [b] fine flour; and he shall pour oil upon it, and put frankincense thereon.

2 And he shall bring it to Aaron's sons the priests: and he shall take thereout his handful of the flour thereof, and of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof; and the priest shall burn the [c] memorial of it upon the altar, to be an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

3 And [d] the remnant of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing [e] most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

4 ¶ And if thou bring an oblation of [f] a meat-offering baken in the oven, it shall be [g] unleavened cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened wafers [h] anointed with oil.

5 ¶ And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baken [i] in a pan, it shall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil.

6 Thou shalt [l] part it in pieces, and pour oil thereon: it is a meat-offering.

7 ¶ And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baken in the frying-pan, it shall be made of fine flour with oil.

towards heaven, in new forms, is first the emblem of that baptism, "with the Holy Ghost, and with fire," (Matt. 3. 11.) by which "the love of God is shed abroad in the heart," (Rom. 5. 5.) the desire to "do good unto all men, and especially to them of the household of faith," (Gal. 6. 10.) becomes "an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God." Phil. 4. 18. Secondly, the fire is the emblem of that wrath of God against sin, which our Lord endured because he bare our sins, 1 Pet. 2. 24. Ps. 22. 1. comp. Heb. 10. 5, 6, 7. with Ps. 40. 6, then read Ps. 40. 2, 12, 13, as descriptive of the fire of suffering in which our Lord was tried. The wood in order, as necessary to the speedy kindling and maintenance of the fire, sets forth to us the regular observance of those various ordinances, whose use is to "stir up the gift that is in us," (2 Tim. 1. 6.) and cause "our hearts to burn within us," (Luke 24. 32.) while Jesus "talks with us by the way," in the closet, in his word, or at his holy table. The head, the most elevated part of the body, the chief seat of the senses, the natural emblem of dignity and power—the fat of the inwards; the emblem of health, abundance, rest—are first devoted to the sacrifice. Most appropriate pictures of him who is "the head over all things to the church," (Eph. 1. 22.) who is the "health of our countenance," (Ps. 42. 11.) and who alone to the labouring and heavy laden, can secure eternal rest, Mat. 11. 28.——Ver. 9. The Inwards as the receptacle of unseen and natural impurity, the legs as exposed to visible and contracted uncleanness, are, before sacrifice, to be washed in water. The washing of the inwards is thus explained by David, "Thou desirest truth in the inward parts, (Ps. 51. 6.) see Ps. 139. 23, 24. Alas! what an unexpected discovery is made when the inwards of an unrenewed heart are laid bare. "Deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," (Jer. 17. 9.) is the fountain, and out of it "proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false-witness, blasphemies," (Mat. 15. 19.) "the things which defile a man," the outward man, and demand that "clean water" of the Spirit, which alone can cleanse the heart and the life from all their filthiness, (Ezek. 36. 25.) of all this the spotless Saviour was the reverse, "He knew no sin," neither—when sought by his bitter enemies—"neither was guile found in his mouth," 2 Cor. 5. 21. 1 Pet. 2. 22. To complete the sacrifice, the priest burns all upon the altar. So Christ offered his whole person. Though in co-equal Godhead, he offered himself humbled, (Phil. 2. 8.) though in sinless manhood, he was numbered with the transgressors, his soul was troubled, and his body crucified, Mark 15. 28. John 12. 27. 1 Cor. 1. 23. And so likewise the believer who draws "nigh by the blood of Christ," offers not a divided service, but his "whole body, soul, and spirit," to God.——Ver. 11. The former offering of the bullock (ver. 3.) was at the door of the tabernacle which looks to the east, and there it appears to have been killed. The offering of the sheep or of the goats, is however, to be killed on the side of the altar northward. Why northward? Of Zion it is said, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King," (Ps. 48. 2.) Now, what excellence of situation is this! Simply, in the northern hemisphere, and beneath a burning sun, the excellence of shade. Now, this is one of the Scripture emblems of Christ's protection. "A man shall be an hiding place from the wind, a covert from the tempest, the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." "The Lord is thy keeper, thy shade upon thy right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night," Ps. 121. 5. Of a shade from the sun, thus speaks the prophet, Is. 4. 6. & 25. 1, 4. "There shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from the heat." "O Lord, thou hast been a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat." According to these views, the sacrifice northward, being within the shadow of the altar, represents the refuge, protection, and covering, which the sacrifice of Christ affords to the believer, who can well adopt the words of the bride, Cant. 2. 3. "I sat under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste."——Ver. 17. This offering (comp. ver. 14. with ch. 5. 11. & 12. 8.) is evidently that of a poor man unable to bring more; yet the same acceptance is affirmed of it as of the former more costly sacrifices, each is of "a sweet savour to the Lord."—Note. God asks but as he gives. But to the poorest, he gives enough, an offering—the body for a sacrifice, Rom. 12. 1. the spirit for renewal, Rom. 12. 2. Christ for redemption and acceptance, Eph. 1. 6, 7.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—In the oblation of these valuable, social, patient, pure, and peaceful animals, let me behold my all-excellent, social, patient, peaceful, and holy Redeemer, as presented before God in the counsel of peace, brought into this world, and in due time presented at Jerusalem; as having our sins imputed to him by his Father; and as offered by himself a sweet smelling sacrifice, without spot unto God, to vindicate and glorify his injured perfections, and to expiate our sin! How willingly he presented himself! How painful and dolorous were his sufferings, and chiefly those of his soul, while his love to us made him to lie in the flames of his Father's wrath bearing our sins! He expired on a cross on the north-west of Jerusalem, and extends the virtue of his death chiefly to the north-west parts of the world! For us, poor and destitute criminals, he exerted all his care; suffered his soul and body to be divided asunder; but neither separated from his Godhead! And, after lying in his grave, he put off every mark of mortality and guilt, and ascends to his throne on the right hand of God. What precious meat and drink-offerings of blessings and comfort to himself and to my soul do attend this oblation!—Let me, therefore, all inflamed with his dying love, cheerfully render to the Lord the best that I have. Acknowledging myself the servant of death, and rejoicing that Jesus has borne my sins and guilt, let me, though unworthy to enter into God's house, offer my whole self, and all that I have, to the Lord, as an holy sacrifice, acceptable through Jesus Christ. Washed in every part, may my whole soul be inflamed with the sacred fire; the love of God shed abroad in my heart by the Holy Ghost! May an holy and prudent zeal for the Lord consume and burn up every selfish care and inward corruption; and influence me earnestly to lay out all my gifts and graces in winning poor sinners to a God in Christ.

CHAP. II. Ver. 2. This memorial put God, as it were, in mind of his covenant, to accept Christ, and his people's services through him. And it put them in mind that all their store came from God, and ought to be dedicated to his service.——Ver. 3. The most holy provision allotted for the priests was to be eaten by themselves in the sacred courts; but the less holy things, as tithes, first-fruits, &c. might be eaten by them and their families elsewhere in Canaan; Num. xviii. 9, 10. Deut. xii. 5—7, &c.——Ver. 11. Leaven was forbidden in voluntary meat-offer-

8 And thou shalt bring the meat-offering that is made of these things unto the LORD: and when it is presented unto the priest, he shall bring it unto the altar.

9 And the priest shall take from the meat-offering a memorial thereof, and shall burn it upon the altar: it is an [k] offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

10 And that which is left of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': [l] it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

11 No meat-offering, which ye shall bring unto the LORD, shall be made with leaven: for ye shall burn no [m] leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the LORD made by fire.

12 ¶ As for the [n] oblation of the first-fruits, ye shall offer them unto the LORD; but they shall not be burnt on the altar [†] for a sweet savour.

13 ¶ And every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with [o] salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt.

14 ¶ And if thou offer a [p] meat-offering of thy first-fruits unto the LORD, thou shalt offer, for the meat-offering of thy first-fruits, green ears of corn dried by the fire, even corn beaten out of full ears.

15 And thou shalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon: it is a meat-offering.

16 And the priest shall [q] burn the memorial of it, part of the beaten corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof: it is an [r] offering made by fire unto the LORD.

AND if his oblation be a sacrifice of [a] peace-offering, if he offer it of the herd, whether it be a [b] male or [c] female, he shall offer it [d] without blemish before the LORD.

2 And he shall [e] lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and [f] kill it at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron's sons the priests shall [g] sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about.

3 And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace-offering an offering made by fire unto the LORD, [h] the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is of them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

5 And Aaron's sons shall [i] burn it on the [k] altar upon the burnt-sacrifice, which is upon the wood that is on the fire: it is an offering made by fire, [l] of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

6 ¶ And if his offering, for a sacrifice of [m] peace-offering unto the LORD, be of the flock, male or female, he shall offer it [n] without blemish.

7 If he offer a lamb for his offering, then shall he [o] offer it before the LORD.

8 And he shall [p] lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and [q] kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron's sons shall [r] sprinkle the blood thereof round about upon the altar.

9 And he shall offer, of the sacrifice of the peace-offering, an offering made by fire unto the LORD, the [s] fat thereof, and the whole rump, (it shall he take off hard by the back-bone,) and the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards, ings; (1) To put them in remembrance of their hasty redemption from Egypt; (2) To teach them to avoid human inventions in the worship of God; (3) To mark the perfect purity of Christ, and the sincerity of his people's services. Honey was prohibited for much the same reason; for it hath a leavening virtue, and may signify carnal pleasures.——Ver. 13. Salt was an emblem of sincerity and soundness in grace; purity, perseverance, and friendship; and of the perpetuity of God's covenant.

[CHAP. II. Ver. 1. The original word translated "meat-offering," applies to any solemn gift either to God or man. Of the meat-offerings to God three were congregational. (1) The waved sheaf, Lev. 23. 10, 11. (2) Waved-loaves, (Lev. 23. 17.) (3) Show-bread, Lev. 24. 5. Eight other meat-offerings were personal. (1) The poor man's, Lev. 5. 11. (2) Of jealousy, Num. 5. 15. (3) Of initiation of the priest, Lev. 8. 26. (4) Daily offering of the high priest, Lev. 6. 20. (5) Of fine flour. (6) That baked on a plate. (7) That of the frying-pan. (8) That of the oven. The last five are prescribed in this chapter. The offering well represents him who alone could say, "my meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work," John 4. 34. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world," John 6. 51. Now, the burnt-offering was an acknowledgment of death deserved, the meat-offering an acknowledgment of life received, a visible enunciation of the prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread." This meat-offering must be fine flour, for the same reason that the burnt sacrifice was without blemish. The oil comingled in the offering, or merely anointing it, represented both the external and internal work of the Spirit, and the odoriferous frankincense, the complete acceptableness of the sacrifice of Christ. Of this offering a memorial handful is burned on the altar, in witness of God's remembrance of the offerer, (Ps. 20. 4.) and his remembrance of God. Ps. 106. 4, 5. & 20. 7. ——Ver. 13. Salt was an essential addition to every offering. Salt either natural or artificial, may be described as the enemy of corruption in flesh, hence it becomes an expressive emblem of incorruption, not by inherent quality, but by addition of a preserving ingredient. The apostles were, and believers still are, "The salt of the earth," Mat. 5. 13. Let them then beware lest they lose their savour, the savour of truth, sincerity, godliness, brotherly-kindness, and charity. Let these comingle with all their offerings, as things "most holy of the offerings of the Lord."——Ver. 14. The offering of green ears of corn,—is not this for you, "both young men, and maidens, and children," (Ps. 148. 12.) saying, green and flourishing though ye be, as these shall ye be soon cut down, therefore, "Remember now your Creator, in the days of your youth," Eccles. 12. 1. But these green ears are dried in the fire, by this process they have lost weight but not substance; they possess an artificial and premature ripeness, and are thus prepared to be converted into fine flour. Even so must "the love of the world" be separated from the youthful heart, (1 John 2. 15. 2 Tim. 2. 22.) it may be by ostensible bereavements, by disappointment, or loss, or wasting disease, or pain, or sorrow, still, if the Spirit of God wake by these, they are separating a heart from the world, ripening its fruit for an earlier glory, and presenting its memorial before the Lord, a spiritual offering as made by fire.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—While in these meat-offerings I contemplate Jesus Christ as the fruit of the earth, prepared by the anointing influence of the Holy Ghost, and by dolorous sufferings, to be, as Mediator, the eternal delight of JEHOVAH, and the delicate provision of his ransomed people, in a state of sacerdotal and holy fellowship with him, and the everlasting remembrancer of both, let me, receiving of the Spirit of Christ, with solemn prayer and heart-burning affection, surrender myself to God through him, as a memorial that I was chosen from everlasting, and shall to eternity enjoy God as my ALL and IN ALL! Let me avoid infectious corruptions, carnal pleasures, and human inventions, in the worship of God; and have always my thoughts, my speech, and my practice seasoned with the purifying salt of spiritual grace! And, while I take care to allow the ministers of the Lord their due, let me, in an especial manner, consecrate the days of my youth, and the first-fruits of all my increase, unto Jesus Christ their Master!

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. Peace-offerings were offered; (1) To obtain some blessing desired; or (2) To thank God for some mercy received. And as they respected the offerer's own advantage, he was allowed to offer either male or female.——Ver. 3. Here only the fat or tallow was the Lord's portion; the officiating priest had the breast, the right shoulder, the cheeks, and the maw; chap. vii. 30—32. Deut. xviii. 3; and the offerer had the rest to feast upon with his friends; chap. vii. 15, 16.——Ver. 5. It was to be burnt upon the burnt-sacrifice, to mark that we are first to be reconciled to God by the death of Christ, before any of our services can be accepted.——Ver. 17. They were prohibited to eat fat or blood; (1) To teach them to beware of inhuman cruelties; (2) To exercise them in obedience, self-denial, and mortification of their appetites; (3) To direct them to consider their redemption as obtained only by the blood, and their sanctification effected by the Spirit of Christ, and not of themselves.

[CHAP. III. Ver. 1. Peace-offering—an offering in payment of vows, and thankful acknowledgment of mercies, (Ps. 116. 17, 18.) or of prayers for deliverance and peace, Judg. 20. 26. & 21. 4. 1 Chron. 21. 26. These offerings were lively emblems of "the Prince of Peace," (Is. 9. 6.) of him "who is our peace," Eph. 2. 14. The chief peculiarities in this offering are (1) That it may be either "a male or female," most probably shadowing out the doctrine of that complete spiritual equality of nation, rank or sex. Paul declares, "there is neither Greek nor Jew, bond nor free, male nor female, but all one in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3. 28. (2) That it is divided to God, the priest, and the offerer, (Lev. 7. 11.) an emblem of that blessed "fellowship of his Son," (1 Cor. 1. 9.) into which God has called believers, in which he "comes into them and sups with them, and they with him," (Rev. 3. 25.)——Ver. 4. Some suppose the "caul above the liver," to mean the great lobe of the liver itself; others, a part of the omentum, a kind of fatty apron, that covers the bowels in front; but there is no part of the animal to which the description can correctly apply, except the diaphragm, an internal compound muscle which divides the contents of the breast, from the lower bowels, and which is one of the principal agents in the act of breathing.——Ver. 17. The law against eating blood had three ends in view, (1) To preserve a faithful and reverent regard to the "blood that maketh atonement." Lev. 17. 11. (2) To preserve from the abominable idolatries of the heathen, of which David speaks, "Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another God, their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer." (3) As a religious check upon cruelty to the lower animals. The law against fat, cannot be explained upon any dietetic principle peculiar to eastern countries; moderately used, it is not unwholesome either in warm or cold climates. But it can justly be accounted for on the principle of the idolatry of the appetite, which made Paul weep when he contemplated its extent and ravages, (Phil. 3. 19.) and as a principal minister to luxury, the use of the fat of the sacrificial parts is perpetually prohibited to the Israelites "in all their dwellings."—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Still in these peace-offerings I behold Jesus, the Son of God and seed of the woman, making peace for men with God, by the blood of his cross, the travail of his soul, and obtaining eternal redemption for us. Let me learn then to thank God for every mercy received, and seek every blessing which I need, through Jesus' atonement, surrendering my soul wholly to his service and honour; so shall I at once be a sweet savour to my God, the rejoicing of ministers, and a comfort to myself and my friends. But never let me dare to make use of any thing relating to the Lord, and exhibiting his Christ as if it were a common thing, or forget the smallest of his injunctions; but receive his truth in love, and diligently observe his precepts.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. To mark the sins of priests and of congregations as greater than those of rulers or of private persons; (1) The offering must be more valuable.

a bullock; (2) The blood must be sprinkled on the altar of incense; (3) The whole flesh of the bullock must be burnt; whereas a lamb or kid is only required from rulers or private persons; the blood is but sprinkled on the altar of the burnt-offering; and the fat only is burnt, and the flesh reserved for the officiating priests.

[CHAP. IV. Ver. 3. Flattery is an object of God's deepest abhorrence. The Lord "shall cut off all flattering lips." (Ps. 12. 3.) But flattery, whether of self or others, is yet one of the most extensive and destructive diseases in society, (Ps. 26. 2. Prov. 26. 28.) claimed as a right inherent in certain ranks and offices. Accordingly, all false religions and wicked tyrannies are founded upon it. Priesthoods have been flattered as incapable of error, and kings have been flattered as descendants, not of men, but of gods. This chapter furnishes a wonderful contrast to these blasphemous sacrifices of flattery, and thereby affords us another of these incidental evidences of divine origin with which the Mosaic Law abounds. In this law it is taken for granted, that the anointed priest may be ignorant, and sin as the people, or rather cause the people to sin by his error or example, and his sacrifice is the most public and exemplary acknowledgment. At the door of the tabernacle he offers. He sprinkles the blood seven times—the emblem of a perfect expiation—and the whole sacrifice—the acknowledgment and evidence of his ignorance and sin—he carries forth without the camp, and publicly burns it with fire. No false religion could ever be founded on such admission of possible imperfection in its priesthood, nor subsist when it was discovered or acknowledged.——Ver. 13. Were it not a well known form of human error, it would scarcely be believed that there is what may be called a private and public conscience, distinct from each other. This arises partly from that sympathetic influence that leads men to surrender their own better judgment, and "follow a multitude to do evil," and partly, from the facility with which an individual may remove the accusation of guilt from himself, and lay it to the charge of others whom he could not control. The law of Moses provides against this prolific source of public evil, by indicating, as it were, the whole nation at the bar of God, and demanding public acknowledgment of sin, and evidence of repentance.——Ver. 22. That power furnishes some licence, because it can maintain impunity for sin, and that rank exempts from some religious duties, on the allegation of temporal business, or for the assertion of worldly honour, are errors both notorious and fatal. To guard against these evil principles, there is a striking peculiarity in the law for a ruler; if he sin against any of the commandments of his God, he is guilty. His elevated station, instead of procuring him indulgence for transgression or neglect, is called to a watchfulness against all sin, proportioned to the influence of his example for the good or evil of the people, and for advancing or counteracting the honour and glory of God.——Ver. 27. The sin-offering for the priest or for the whole congregation, must be a young bullock, without blemish; a ruler, a kid, a male without blemish; that for one of the common people, a female, whether a lamb or a kid. Why this distinction? The priest was the ruler in matters ecclesiastical; the congregation, in their corporate capacity, were the rulers, by virtue of the election they had made, (Deut. 1. 9—15.) and the persons so elected were political rulers, in virtue of the office they had accepted. Each is therefore required to sacrifice a male, as the leader and ruler of his flock. By this he is reminded of the dignity and duty of the ruler, and of the aggravated guilt he incurs by sin, whilst he is led to remember "he has a master in heaven," and to look to the sacrifice of the great ruler, who "laid down his life for the sheep." (John 10. 15.) When one of the common people offers a female, he offers a creature not inferior to the male in nature, but subordinate in office. This distinction holds good amongst Christians, "the husband is head over the wife, even as Christ is head of the church," (Eph. 5. 23.); and on this holy subordination of office, without any unholy assumption of superiority of nature, much of domestic happiness depends. Equally necessary to national happiness is a well ordered arrangement of of, as the fat is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn it upon the aitar for a [l]sweet savour unto the LORD: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and it shall be forgiven him.

32 And if he bring a [m]lamb for a sin-offering, he shall bring it a female without blemish.

33 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and slay it for a sin-offering in the place where they kill the burnt-offering.

privileges, and subordination to authority; and of this, the sacrifices of the common people significantly reminded them; while they led their faith to him who was to come, not as a ruler, but as "made under the law to redeem them that were under the law, that they might receive the adoption of sons," Gal. 4. 4. Now, as power sometimes sets itself above law, so humble ranks sometimes attempts to get below it. The same rule therefore applies to both, and the poor is not tolerated in disobeying any law of his God; while he is permitted to choose his sacrifice, either from the sheep or the goats, according to the nature of his own flock, or his means of purchase.—Note. The Saviour who records the widow's mite, requires for his service but such things as Providence and grace provide.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—In these offerings Jesus is yet represented as the strong and patient fatling; as the Lamb of God, and yet in the likeness of sinful flesh; laden with my imputed transgressions, and suffering the punishment thereof in his whole man, but chiefly in his soul, that I through him may obtain forgiveness. While I here discover how sin is aggravated, according to the station or number of the offenders, let me especially reflect how criminal and odious that must be which cannot be remitted without shedding of blood—the blood of God! how tremendous the justice of God, that can by no means clear the guilty! Let me, with the priests, never attempt to gain pleasure or profit by my sins; but, whenever I find myself guilty of evil, let there be an immediate application to Jesus, as made sin for me, that I might be made the righteousness of God in him.

[CHAP. V. Ver. 1. Our Lord, who, "as a sheep before her shearers," was dumb for a time, "answered the high priest nothing," Mat. 26. 62, 63, 64. But when the high priest said, "I adjure thee by the living God," our Lord, in obedience to this law, immediately replied: the voice of swearing, then, is the voice of him that administers the oath. By this righteous law, suppression of truth is sin.——Ver. 4. Habitual swearing begets such a fatal familiarity with an oath, that men actually take God's name in vain without thought or recollection; anger also prompts to threats or promises and oaths that pass as totally out of the memory, as a storm passes from the sky, leaving no trace; drunkenness produces similar wickedness and oblivion, with frequent circumstances of deep aggravation. These circumstances will account for the oath, and the possibility of its being hid from him by whom it was recklessly pronounced, and lightly forgot. The law may, perhaps, also be intended to apply to cases where the execution of the oath is found impossible, and it may, in that sense, be said to be hidden from him.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—How necessary is it to have a particular sight and sense of our sins! It therefore becomes us to keep a universal guard over all the powers of our soul, and members of our body; and over none more than our tongue. Grievous is the crime of robbing God and his ministers! And however mortifying, an honest restitution is necessary. Nor have we any reason to believe our crime pardoned while we retain the wages of unrighteousness; for all sin is unsavoury to the truly penitent soul. But bless the Lord, O my soul, that the oblation of Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God,—of Jesus, the corn of wheat,—suits every trespass which I can be guilty of! Bless him, that herein provision is made for the vilest sinner of mankind, and the poorest mortal upon earth; and that poverty is no bar in our way to heaven through him, nor our access to the God of heaven. Meanwhile, let me take heed to my ways that I sin not with my heart, my hand, or my tongue; since nothing less than the blood of God can expiate the most unwitting and involuntary mistake.

[CHAP. VI. Ver. 5. That is—fraud was punished with repayment of the principal, and twenty per cent. additional fine. Would that Christian legislators would carefully study the principles of the divine jurisprudence! How many enactments of insufficient or undue severity—how many fruitless expedients and experiments of human wisdom would be superseded, by those simple and efficacious laws which were revealed and enacted by the wisdom and authority of God!——Ver. 11. The ashes, the remnants of the accepted sacrifice, were carried by the priest having put off his sacred garments, and deposited in a clean place. This direction pointed to Christ, who having put off his garment of flesh, was laid in a new tomb, wherein was never man laid, John 19. 41.——Ver. 13. This fire represents love, zeal, devotedness, which the believer should never permit to fall low or expire, Rev. 2. 4, 5.—3. 2.——Ver. 23. Of other meat-offerings, a memorial was burned, the rest was eaten by the priests, Ch. 2. 2. & 10. 16. The meat-offering for the priest was wholly burnt, wholly ascended to God, thus shadowing out the completeness of the offering of Christ, and his bodily resurrection and ascension into glory, Acts 2. 27, 28.——Ver. 28. Jesus, who "bare our sins in his own body on the tree," said of himself, "This is my body, which is broken for you;" but while the body was broken, being "crucified through weakness," (2 Cor. 13. 4.) the spirit, represented by the strength and durability of the brass, was "made perfect through suffering," (Heb. 2. 10.) was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. 1. 4.——Ver. 30. That food which is not eaten, cannot remove hunger or sustain the body, and herein we see shadowed out the inefficacy of the blood of bulls and of goats, "to make him that does the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience," and leads us to that "blood of Christ" that alone can "purge the conscience from dead works to serve the living God." Heb. 9. 9, 14.—ED.]

21 In a [h] pan it shall be made with oil; and when it is baken, thou shalt bring it in: and the baken pieces [*] of the meat-offering shalt thou offer [i] for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

23 [†] For every meat-offering for the priest shall be wholly burnt; it shall not be eaten.

24 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

25 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, saying, [m] This is the law of the sin-offering: In the place where the burnt-offering is killed shall the sin-offering be killed before the LORD: [n] it is most holy.

26 The [o] priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it; [p] in the holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 [q] Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy; and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt [r] wash that whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place.

LIKEWISE this is the [a] law of the trespass-offering: [b] it is most holy.

2 In the [c] place where they kill the burnt-offering shall they kill the trespass-offering: and the blood thereof shall he [d] sprinkle round about upon the altar.

3 And he shall offer of it [e] all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards,

5 And the priest shall [f] burn them [g] upon the altar for an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a trespass-offering.

6 [h] Every male among the priests shall eat thereof; it shall be eaten in the holy place: [i] it is most holy.

7 As the [k] sin-offering is, so is the trespass-offering; there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith shall have it.

8 And the priest that offereth any man's burnt-offering, even the priest shall have to himself the [l] skin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.

9 And all [m] the meat-offering that is baken in the oven, and all that is dressed in the frying-pan, and in the pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it.

10 And every meat-offering mingled with oil, and dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have, [n] one as much as another.

11 ¶ And this is the [o] law of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he shall offer unto the LORD:

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VI.—Behold the criminal and odious nature of dishonesty in God's sight! No forgiveness thereof, even through the blood of Jesus, is to be expected, but in the way of restoring that which hath been unjustly acquired. While, therefore, I take heed to put far away my corruptions, and to put due honour upon the ordinances of God, let love to him perpetually burn in my heart, as the effect of his everlasting love to me; nor let any human invention be ever mixed with my worship of him. The Lord's ministers should be always duly, though not nicely, supported. But let them never expect profit or subsistence by their sins, or attempt to expiate them; let the whole guilt thereof terminate upon Jesus, who finished transgression and made an end of sin; and let them gratefully serve him as their great High Priest. While I perceive the insufficiency of these legal oblations, which even produced and transmitted uncleanness, I would reverence the blood of my Redeemer, and hope that, when my earthly tabernacle shall be dissolved, by the effectual application thereof, I shall be presented without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, in the presence of his heavenly Father.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 13. (1) The prohibition of leaven, in chap. ii. 11. related only to things burnt upon the altar; but he did not prohibit the offering of leavened bread for the priest's food. (2) This was a thank-offering to God for blessings, of which leavened bread was one. And it might denote that God rejects not the grateful services of his people, though tainted and mingled with corruption.——Ver. 15. This intimated, that Christ and his grace should be received without delay, and 12 If he offer it [p] for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving [q] unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour fried.

13 Besides the cakes, he shall offer for his offering [r] leavened bread with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace-offerings.

14 And of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation for an [s] heave-offering unto the LORD, and it shall [t] be the priest's that sprinkleth the blood of the peace-offerings.

15 And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten [u] the same day that it is offered; he shall not leave any of it until the morning.

16 But if the sacrifice of his offering be a [x] vow, or a voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth his sacrifice; and on the morrow also the remainder of it shall be eaten.

17 But the remainder of the flesh of the sacrifice on the [y] third day shall be burnt with fire.

18 And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it [z] shall not be accepted, neither shall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an abomination, and the soul that eateth of it [a] shall bear his iniquity.

19 And the flesh [b] that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten, it shall be burnt with fire: and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat thereof.

20 But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings that pertain unto the LORD, having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul shall [c] be cut off from his people.

21 [d] Moreover, the soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings which pertain unto the LORD, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

22 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, [e] Ye shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the beast that [f] dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use; but ye shall in no wise eat of it.

25 For whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, even the soul that eateth it shall be [g] cut off from his people.

26 [h] Moreover, ye shall eat no manner of blood, [*] whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings.

27 Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

28 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

29 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, He that offereth the sacrifice of his peace-offerings unto the LORD, shall [i] bring his oblation unto the LORD of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings.

30 His own hands shall bring the offerings of the LORD made by fire; the fat with the breast, it shall he bring, that [k] the breast may be waved for a wave-offering before the LORD.

31 And the priest shall burn the [l] fat upon the altar; but the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'.

32 And the right shoulder shall ye give unto the priest for an [m] heave-offering of the sacrifices of your peace-offerings.

33 He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings and the fat, shall have the [n] right shoulder for his part.

34 For the wave-breast and the heave-shoulder have I taken of the children of Israel from off the sacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest, and unto his sons, by a statute for ever, from among the children of Israel.

35 ¶ This is the portion of the [o] anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his sons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he presented them to minister unto the LORD in the priest's office; with thanksgiving speedily returned; and it also prompted them to invite the poor, or strangers, to share in the entertainment.

36 [p] Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, in the day that he anointed them, by a statute for ever throughout their generations.

[CHAP. VII. Ver. 13. From the institution of the passover, (Exod. 12.) leaven has lain under interdict. Why then is leavened bread admitted, nay prescribed in peace-offerings and thanksgivings? (1) To show that "every creature of God is good, if it be received with thanksgivings; for it is sanctified by the word and prayer." 1 Tim. 4. 4, 5. 1 Cor. 10. 23, 30. (2) To exhibit a practical illustration of the great principle that, "not that which goeth into the mouth defileth the man, but that which cometh out of the mouth (if coming from an unrenewed heart) this defileth the man." Mat. 15. 11.——Ver. 18. "When thou vowest a vow, defer not to pay it." Eccl. 5. 4. Accordingly, no part of the sacrifice was to remain, in any case, till the third day, clearly typifying the body of Christ, which was not to be suffered "to see corruption," (Acts 2. 27.) and was to be raised on the third day, Mat. 16. 21.——Ver. 30. The offerer must bring the offering with his own hands. The priest cannot bring it as his superior; nor his friend as his equal; nor his servant as his inferior. This points to the fact, that none but Christ can offer the sacrifice of reconciliation; and that religion, or faith, repentance, holiness is a personal concern between God and every man's own soul; of repentance, a bitterness which the world knoweth not; and of hope, a joy with which a stranger intermeddleth not. See Prov. 14. 10.——Ver. 38. Thanksgivings in the wilderness? Why are they not reserved exclusively for Canaan? Is not liberty, the liberty of the Son, abundant compensation for want of a "continuing city?" Is not manna, a sufficient substitute for "milk and honey?" Whatever be your lot, "rejoice in the Lord, O! ye righteous, for praise is comely for the upright," Ps. 33. 1.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—Ministers of the gospel ought to be plentifully supplied with every thing necessary and agreeable. And the more diligent any are in the services of religion, the more abundantly will they reap the advantages thereof. What glorious reward to himself, and redemption to his people, doth Jesus procure by his all-comprehending oblation! What robes! what delicious provision! CHAPTER VIII.

The consecration of Aaron and his sons to their priestly office: 1—37.

A. M. 2514. B. C. 1490.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Take Aaron, and his sons with him, and [a] the garments, and [b] the anointing oil, and a bullock for the sin-offering, and [c] two rams, and a basket of unleavened bread;

3 And gather thou all the congregation together unto the [d] door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And Moses did [e] as the LORD commanded him; and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

5 And Moses said unto the congregation, [f] This is the thing which the LORD commanded to be done.

6 And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, [g] and washed them with water.

7 And [h] he put upon him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith.

8 And he [i] put the breastplate upon him; also he put in the breastplate the Urim and the Thummim.

9 And he [k] put the mitre upon his head; also upon the mitre, even upon his forefront, did he put the golden plate, the holy crown; as the LORD commanded Moses.

10 And Moses took the [l] anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle, and all that was therein, and sanctified them.

11 And he sprinkled thereof upon the altar seven times, and anointed the altar and all his vessels, both the laver and his foot, to sanctify them.

12 And he [m] poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him, to sanctify him.

13 And Moses [n] brought Aaron's sons, and put coats upon them, and girded them with girdles, and put bonnets upon them; as the LORD commanded Moses.

14 ¶ [o] And he brought the bullock for the sin-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin-offering.

15 And he [p] slew it; and Moses [q] took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar, and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it.

16 And he [r] took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar.

17 But [s] the bullock, and his hide, his flesh, and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the LORD commanded Moses.

18 ¶ And he [t] brought the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

19 And he killed it; and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

20 And he cut the ram into pieces; and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat.

21 And he washed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-sacrifice for a sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And [u] he brought the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

23 And he slew it; and Moses [x] took of the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

24 And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ears, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

25 And he [y] took the fat, and the rump, and consolation! And let me not only timely perform my vows; but where I am left most at liberty, let me with cheerfulness give to the Lord. As there is no medium between God's acceptance and abhorrence of my works, let me examine myself, and take heed to my steps. Let my receiving and feeding upon Jesus be as early, and earnest, and social, as possible; and let me, by an after-improvement of divine ordinances, obtain the real benefit thereof. Never let me attempt to live in sinful pollutions along with feasting on Christ. But always beware of a licentious appetite after things prohibited of God. And, while I manifest the utmost regard to Jesus and his atonement, let me, as a ransomed priest, feed upon him as my portion; feed upon his dearest love and choicest supports; always eyeing the grant, appointment, and command of God, as the rule and reason of my conduct.

[CHAP. VIII. Ver. 12. Were this the minute detail of a mere ceremony, nothing could be more uninteresting. But as a picture of the consecration of the Lord Jesus, it becomes a most attractive object of contemplation to the believer. It consists of washing, clothing, crowning, anointing, in order to sanctification, that is dying to sin, and living to God. All these meet in Christ—humanity washed that was sinless, 1 Pet. 7. 26; clothed, that is with righteousness, Rev. 1. 13; crowned, that is with glory and honour, Heb. 2. 9; anointed, that is with the Spirit without measure, Heb. 1. 9; sanctified, as it is written, "For in that he died, he died unto sin once, but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." Rom. 6 10.—Ver. 30. From the commentary of David, (Ps. 133. 2.) we learn that this anointing was the emblem of brotherly unity. Why? It was one perfume sprinkled upon all the family, and diffusing its refreshing odour equally to all the worshippers; while the accompanying blood of the sacrifice was the bond of the council and covenant of peace. So Christians should be united, they are one family, Gal. 6. 10; so Christians should be united, they have one anointing and access by one Spirit to one Father, 1 John 2. 27. Eph. 2. 18; so Christians should be united, they have one sacrifice, Eph. 2. 13, 16; so Christians should be united, they have one righteousness, Rom. 3. 22; so Christians should be united, they have one home, John 14. 2. 3.—ED.]

32 And [f] that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire.

33 And ye shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days, until the days of your consecration be at an end: for seven days shall he consecrate you.

34 As he hath done this day, so the LORD hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you.

(3) The glory of the Lord appears, and a fire from heaven consumes the burnt-offerings on the brazen altar: 23, 24. This fire to be preserved in all their after oblations.

AND it came to pass, on the [a] * eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel;

2 And he said unto Aaron, [b] Take thee a young calf for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before the LORD.

3 And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, [c] Take ye a kid of the goats for a sin-offering; and a calf and a lamb, both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt-offering;

4 Also a bullock and a ram for peace-offerings, to sacrifice before the LORD; and a meat-offering mingled with oil: for to-day the LORD will [d] appear unto you.

5 And they brought that which Moses commanded before the tabernacle of the congregation; and all the congregation drew near, and stood before the LORD.

6 And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commanded that ye should do; and the glory of the LORD shall appear unto you. †

7 And Moses said unto Aaron, [e] Go unto the altar, and offer thy sin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself, and for the people: and offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as the LORD commanded.

8 ¶ Aaron therefore went unto the altar, and slew the calf of the sin-offering which was for himself.

9 And the sons of Aaron brought the blood unto him; and he [f] dipped his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar:

10 But the [g] fat, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver, of the sin-offering, he burnt upon the altar; as the LORD commanded Moses.

11 [h] And the flesh and the hide he burnt with fire without the camp.

12 And he [i] slew the burnt-offering; and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled round about upon the altar.

13 And they presented the burnt-offering unto him, with the pieces thereof, and the head; and he burnt them upon the altar.

Christ, and his gospel-church, answers to the purposes of God, declared in the promises and predictions of his word! Before angels and men he is called to, prepared for, and solemnly set apart to, his Mediatorial work. Holy, harmless, and undefiled, he steps forth, vested by his Father in a marvellous manhood and mediatorial function. Anointed with the Holy Ghost above measure, sanctified by his own blood, and made perfect through suffering, he himself and his Father rejoice in his office, and his execution of it. And the tabernacle of his body the church, and all instituted ordinances, are, together with him, consecrated to the service of God in his oblation, blood, and Spirit. Let ministers of the gospel learn with what solemn and deliberate preparation they ought to enter on their work. Let every saint observe what solemn washing in the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness, what putting on of the Lord Jesus, what sprinkling of his blood and Spirit, what feasting on his flesh as meat indeed, what self-dedication, what mortification of inward lusts during their whole week of life, are necessary to prepare them for their sacerdotal service in the house eternal in the heavens.

CHAPTER X.

(1) The sin and fearful death of Aaron's two eldest sons: 1—7. (2) The priests are forbidden to drink any intoxicating liquor while they attend their sacred work: 8—11. (3) Moses repeats the orders for Aaron and his remaining sons to eat their share of the late oblations; and receives Aaron's excuse for burning instead of eating their share of the people's sin-offering: 12—20.

AND [a] Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and [b] offered strange fire before the LORD, which he [c] commanded them not.

2 And there [d] went out fire from the LORD, and devoured them; and they died before the LORD.

3 Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the LORD spake, saying, [e] I will be [*] sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron [f] held his peace.

provision and peace to his people. I behold him, again and again, blessing his chosen: I discern the Almighty Father kindling his indignation against him, and kindly accepting his oblation in our stead. While I adore his grace and kindness, let me learn likewise a lesson of diligence and obedience. If I desire the benefit and comfort of divine appearances, I must attend upon divine ordinances; there no religious service can be acceptable to God, till the guilt of my sin be removed by an actual interest in the great propitiation; and all, therefore, but especially ministers, ought to begin their religion at themselves. God's presence in ordinances effectually attests them to be his. Displays of his divine glory ought to be entertained with joyful gratitude and holy reverence; and the fire of God's Spirit being once granted, to inflame our affections and consume our corruptions, must be cherished and supported with the daily fuel of meditation and prayer.

[CHAP. X. Ver. 2. Nadab and Abihu had been honoured with seeing God, (Exod. 24. 9, 10.) but how little privileges may be improved, appears in their self-willed offering of strange fire, "which God commanded them not." What an unexpected event! The tabernacle service commences with rebellion and judgment; the perfume of the anointing oil is dissipated in devouring fire; the holy garments become windingsheets; dear relatives become corpse-bearers; and no head is uncovered, no garment rent, lest wrath come upon all the people. Even the father's heart bows to the justice of the terrible sentence—"and Aaron held his peace." It was thus the earliest and brightest day of Christianity also opened with the secret covetousness of Ananias and Sapphira, (Acts 5. 1—11.) whose judgment tarried not, "and fear came upon all the churches, and as many as heard these things."—Note. These are not annals of curiosity: but "these things happened to them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come," 1 Cor. 10. 11.——Ver. 9. From the vicinity of this prohibition to the judgment on Nadab and Abihu, some have imagined they had sinned through wine. But there is, first, no intimation of such a sin in the narrative; and secondly, it is not the manner of Moses to conceal any faults, even in his brother or sister; therefore we conclude that, not drunkenness, but self-will in the worship of God; both without, and against divine authority, was the real transgression for which due, and thy sons' due, which are given out of the sacrifices of peace-offerings of the children of Israel.

15 The heave-shoulder and the wave-breast shall they bring, with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD; and it shall be thine, and thy sons' with thee, by a statute [r] for ever; as the LORD hath commanded.

16 ¶ And Moses diligently sought the [s] goat of the sin-offering, and, behold, it was burnt: and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar the sons of Aaron which were left alive, saying,

17 [t] Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God [u] hath given it you to [x] bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the LORD?

18 Behold, [x] the blood of it was not brought in within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded.

19 And Aaron said unto Moses, [y] Behold, this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt-offering before the LORD; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day, should it have been [z] accepted in the sight of the LORD?

20 And when Moses heard that, he was [a] content.

they died. Let Christians in the enjoyment of privileges beware of their abuse. Nadab and Abihu sin—the fire devours them, leaving not an instant for intercession. So John warns the church, "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it, 1 John 5. 16.——Ver. 20. Here there had been such a departure from the divine ritual, that Moses was angry. Why then does no judgment come on Eleazar and Ithamar? And why is Moses content with an explanation which admits that the error was committed against knowledge? The very confession of the sin, is one reason why it is pardoned, Prov. 28. 13. 1 John 1. 9; not for any virtue in the confession itself; but because of that mercy of God in Christ which faith has apprehended, before the tongue can make confession of the sin of the heart. Moreover, the sin of Nadab arose from a proud self-sufficiency which would dictate to God; that of Aaron, Eleazar, and Ithamar from an erroneous fear of offending.—Note. This is a frequent sin with professing Christians, who abstain from the Lord's Supper from an erroneous sense of unworthiness, and yet draw comfort from this supposed tenderness of conscience: but if men really judged themselves unworthy, they would flee to "the Lamb that was slain;" and if conscience were really tender, it would seek to be "sprinkled from dead works," Heb. 9. 14.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. X.—Stand in awe, my soul, and sin not! Let no honours, no gifts, no graces, render thee proud or inattentive to God's institutions. Who can stand before this holy Lord God, the fire of whose zeal for his own institutions burns hottest the nearest to his altar! His noted favours and his tremendous judgments are often most closely connected: and, for the warning of others, he sometimes punishes the first transgressors with the most fearful severity, and deeply marks their sin in their punishment. How insufficient were the giving of the law, the typical tabernacle, or the ceremonial priesthood, to prevent either sins or judgments! When God severely afflicts me or mine, let me draw my heart-composing considerations from the word, the providence, the glory, of God, as concerned in it; and never may my indulgence of private affection interfere with the honour or sovereign will of God, nor lead me to disgrace my spiritual unction with carnal cares, or the sorrow of the world, which worketh death. While my soul trembles at God's righteous judgments, never let my confusion occasion mistakes in any part of my duty: and, if I desire more of intimate fellowship with God, let me hearken to the voice of his messengers, and after all interruptions, re-apply myself to my work.——Let ministers seriously ponder how dangerous it is to change God's ordinances, even in the smallest circumstance; or to be animated to their work from earthly and carnal motives! Base and dangerous is it, especially for them to be overcharged with surfeiting or drunkenness, and the cares of this life, in a work of such importance and concern, which requires the most faithful attention to reprove the sinner, to comfort the believer, and tenderly to regard the reasonable excuses of such whose minds are distressed!

[CHAP. XI. Ver. 2. In this chapter, God proceeds to provide against the idolatry of the appetite, (Phil. 3. 19.) first, by merciful and sufficient provision, so that there may be no just cause of complaint: secondly, by wholesome restraint, so that there may be a constant check upon indulgence. Two zoological marks distinguish the clean from the unclean animals—parting the hoof, and chewing the cud. (1) The parted hoof of the ox and sheep, belongs to an animal inoffensive and peaceful: the claws of the lion and tiger are weapons of war and destruction. (2) Animals with parted hoof are more social in their habits, and regular in their march than others: the ox and the sheep congregate in the herd and the fold, and follow their leader through pastures and woods in one track: the lion and the tiger are unsocial in their habits, and follow merely the prey which they seek to destroy. These characteristics of the clean animals are daily monitors, that believers, restraining and mortifying all angry passions; "be careful to give none offence," (1 Cor. 10. 32;) to be "followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promises," (Heb. 6. 12;) whilst they give testimony against those "who separate themselves, having not the Spirit," (Jude 19;) and "whose feet are swift to shed blood," and "the ways of peace, have they not known," Rom. 3. 15, 17. The second characteristic of the clean and edible animals, is chewing the cud, that is, the power and habit of bringing up their food, and subjecting it anew to mastication, during the hours of recumbency; so that except when they sleep, they are never altogether at rest. This is the emblem of the spiritual man, "talking with himself on his bed, while he is still," (Psal. 4. 4;) "remembering God upon his bed, and meditating upon him in the night watches," (Psal. 63. 6;) and so evident is the similarity, that to ruminate, signifies in the clean beast, the act of "chewing the cud;" while in man, it also signifies the act of solemn meditation. The influence of these dietetic arrangements in preserving the Jews a separate people, continues till this day: they were peculiarly calculated and intended to preserve them from the dangerous infection of idolatrous feasts; or even from those dangerous intimacies, which are often cemented at the social intercourse of the table, and so often "become a snare and a trap" to the self-indulgent, Psal. 69. 22. While to Christians these arrangements are not binding, they nevertheless convey to them an obligatory lesson on purity of church fellowship, reminding us of the apostolic rule, "not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat." 1 Cor. 5. 11.——Ver. 5. The coney is described (Psal. 104. 18.) as finding its refuge in the rocks; and in Prov. 30. 26, they are described "as a feeble people, yet making their dwelling in the rocks." The rabbit cannot therefore be the animal meant, as it chooses its dwelling in dry sandy earth. Bruce seems clearly to prove that the modern name of this animal is ashkoko; that it differs much in form from the rabbit, is an inhabitant of rocks, and is abundant in Horeb and Sinai. ——Ver. 9. Two marks distinguish unclean fishes: as an example of fish without scales, we may take the murderous shark; of these without fins, the misshapen walrus: it is remarkable that, four times these creatures are denounced as an abomination. Being less acquainted with the dispositions and habits of fishes than of land animals, we are the less able to assign the reasons of the distinction; for beyond mere will, there is, no doubt, a reason; and in mere unwholesomeness, as some think, we do not believe it to exist; we seek it rather in the predacious and destructive dispositions of some, the foul and muddy resorts of others, and even in the monstrous appearance, by which many of the legally unclean fishes are distinguished from those that are clothed with scales, and furnished with fins.—Ed.]

Reflections upon Chap. XI.—Highly it becomes me, as the servant of God, to live as one separated from the world to his service, always to follow his directions, whether with respect to soul or body, and to eat for health, not from lust. Let even my body, therefore, be carefully preserved as a temple of the Holy Ghost, while, in a becoming manner, I imitate these clean animals, and become not almost but altogether, a Christian. Let me be addicted to meditation on the truths of God, which I have received for my spiritual food; and be steady in my steps, and inclined to render unto God and men their respective dues.—Clothed and protected with Jesus' righteousness and grace, let me, by faith and love, swim against the tides of corruptions and troubles, avoiding intimacy with cruel, self-seeking, sensual, superstitious, and earthly-minded men, and even the most distant approaches and temptations to it. But if at any time I be defiled therewith, without delay should I apply the cleansing blood and Spirit of Jesus Christ to my soul; bitterly lament that the infection will not be wholly extirpated till the evening-tide of my death; and, if I am the Lord's, diligently aim to be holy, as he is holy; and perfect, as my Father who is in heaven is perfect.

[CHAP. XII. Ver. 5. Though the venerable Brown, as in the marginal note, and others, look upon this doubling of the time for purification after the birth of a female, as a mark of dishonour upon her sex; we dare not adopt the opinion: nothing seems more contrary to the spirit of the Scripture, than any such dishonouring distinction. The original promise to "the seed of the woman;" the dignity of Sarah, as representative of the covenant of grace, Gal. 4. 24; Solomon's inspired and glowing description of female excellence, (Prov. 31) combine, with many similar references and records, to induce us to search for an explanation, not implying dishonour, but imbodying some important lesson. May not the explanation be found in the double transgression of the woman in Eden? (1) Her error of judgment, which lay in two things: viz. disregarding God's threatening, and believing Satan's promise. (2) Her actual sin, which also lay in two points: viz. herself first eating, then giving to her husband: this view seems clearly supported by Paul, 1 Tim. 2. 14: "And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." We discover, therefore, in this law, not a stigma affixed, but an abiding memorial set up, and an instructive lesson delivered to all the daughters of Eve. It is a repeated memorial of the original sin, and its heavy, but deserved sentence; it is a solemn warning to guard against deception, to distrust specious promises, as those of the serpent were; to seek the wisdom that cometh from above, and to continue in the faith of "the promised seed," the "child" to be born, the Son to be "given," "the Saviour of the body," Eph. 5. 23. 1 Tim. 2. 15.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XII.—What alarming stigmas the Lord put upon that sex by which sin entered into our race, till Jesus, the woman's seed, had finished transgression! but alas! sinful uncleanness cleaves to all, yea, even to our most natural and necessary actions, and would for ever exclude us from fellowship with God in his ordinances, and in heaven, had not he sent forth his Son to be the propitiation for our sins, and the fountain opened to purge away our sin and our uncleanness. So infectious is original corruption, and so infinitely necessary is it to improve Jesus' atonement and purifying influence, while we thank him for his mercies, and devote ourselves to his service.—Let parents consider what gratitude, what thanksgiving, what solemn dedication of themselves and seed to God, ought to attend safe deliveries in childbirth; and how desirable, comfortable, and edifying, to have children early circumcised with the circumcision which is of Christ!

in the skin; then the priest shall shut him up seven days more.

6 And the priest shall look on him again the seventh day: and, behold, if the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall [h] pronounce him clean; it is but a scab: and he [i] shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

13 Then the priest shall consider: and, behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague; it is all turned white: he is clean. [†]

14 But when raw flesh appeareth in him, he shall be unclean.

15 And the priest shall see the raw flesh, and pronounce him to be unclean; for the raw flesh is unclean: it is a leprosy.

Good, who examined the subject, not merely as a physician, but as an expositor of Scripture, considers them as identical with the three forms described by Moses about 3,000 years ago. Bateman, is disposed to consider the Jewish leprosy as confined to one incurable form; but, under the general name, Bahereth, Moses includes three specific varieties, one of which (ver. 39.) does not even render the patient unclean. These three forms of the disease are all characterised as commencing with bright spots, depressed in the centre; or, as Moses describes it, lower than the skin—and surrounded by reddish, prominent circles: sometimes these spots are as small as if produced by the puncture of a pin; and frequently situated on the front of the legs, immediately below the knees, or about the elbows, and sometimes on the face; they soon enlarge, generally preserving a circular form, and are propagated to different parts until they finally coalesce, and cover the whole body; in one species with white scaly incrustation; in another with patches dark and livid, and in either case extremely loathsome to the beholders, and distressing to the sufferer. But though the leprosy appears at first as a mere local disease in the skin, it afterwards discovers its constitutional character; and the bones, and joints, and, in some cases, the teeth, are affected; the toes and fingers fall off in succession, and the body remains a miserable fragment of its former self, where life still lingers in the midst of indescribable torments. The disease, in certain of its stages and circumstances, is confessedly contagious, though this characteristic, on an imperfect induction of observations and facts, Rayer has ventured to deny; and in every sense in which a disease can be so called, it is also hereditary. Amongst the most striking peculiarities of this disease, as observed by medical travellers in some of the Asiatic Islands, is the fearful and disgusting demoralization which reigns in the separated dwellings of the miserable outcasts; and in this combination of sin and misery, mutually producing one another, the victim frequently lingers during fifty years, in body and spirit waxing worse and worse—the emblem of sin, the warning of judgment to sinners!——Ver. 2. The high priest and his sons held the office of physician, and herein typified him who said, "they that be whole need not a physician; but they that are sick. I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance," Matt. 9. 12, 13. Do not then hide the leprosy of sin, but bring poor sinners to Jesus, carry them in the arms of prayer; bring them to his ministers, and all insufficient in themselves (2 Cor. 2. 16.) though his ministers be, they have "a treasure in earthen vessels" (2 Cor. 4. 7.) that can enrich the poorest, and a "balm in Gilead" (Jer. 8. 22.) for the most e It is a well known medical fact, that certain eruptions on the head are peculiarly inveterate. The leprous head is pronounced "utterly unclean;" spiritually it is the disease described, Rom. 1. 24, 28, in which men "professing themselves wise, become fools," when, "even as they do not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gives them over to a reprobate mind." These are utterly unclean, their leprosy is in their head.—Ed.

43 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the rising of the sore be white reddish in his bald-head, or in his bald forehead, as the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh, deadly disease. ——Ver. 3. The whitening of the hair by age, is one of the natural admonitions whereby man is warned, "Prepare to meet thy God." Amos 4. 12. A similar, but premature whitening by the leprosy gave warning to the Jew, a warning the more impressive as his hair was ordinarily raven black.—Note. The symptoms of age, or debilities of early disease, are merciful premonitions of death: "O, that men were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end!" Deut. 32. 29.——Ver. 45. The clothes rent—the emblem of deep religious sorrow before God, (Ezra 9. 5.) an outward token to the inward man of the heart, Joel 2. 13. The head bare.—The head, the highest part of the body; the seat of all the chief instruments of sense, becomes the emblem of wisdom and power: and by consequence of honour, Gen. 3. 15. Isai. 7. 8. The head uncovered, was therefore the acknowledgment that disease, as the bondage of Satan (Luke 13. 16.) as the harbinger of death, the "wages of sin," (Rom. 6. 23.) was the greatest dishonour, 1 Cor. 15. 43. The covering upon the upper lip, or, as some translate it, the bandage upon the chin, after the Jewish manner of dressing the dead—joined with the cry of unclean, was the emblem of the "mouth stopped" by the broken law, and only permitted to plead "guilty before God," Rom. 3. 19.——Ver. 47. The transmission of the worst contagion by garments, is the opinion of the highest medical authorities, Mead, Russel, &c., and it is admitted in the sanatory regulations of all civilized countries: but the visible symptoms of disease in garments have not been noticed by these writers. Michaelis, on the authority of an experienced manufacturer, describes a disease in woollen cloth, analogous to that described by Moses; and which he attributes to the commixture of dead wool—that is the wool of sheep that had died by disease. Calmet attributed the disease both in men and in garments to microscopic animalculæ—an idea, that modern observation and discovery render not improbable. The law whereby the suspected garment was to be tried by washing, and if found infected, which condemned it to be rent or burned, (ver. 56, 57,) operated at once as a check upon the sale of infectious clothing, and the most effectual preservative of the public health; while it reminded the possessor of the moral contagion that may lie in the love of "purple and fine linen," (Luke 16. 19;) the necessity of "washing his robes, and making them white in the blood of the Lamb." (Rev. 7. 14;) "of being saved with fear; pulled out of the fire;" and of "hating even the garment spotted by the flesh," Jude 23.—Ed.]

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall pronounce him [e] utterly unclean; his plague is in his head.

but the power of God is prescribed, with shame and confusion of face I behold the penal, the dreadful, the defiling, the spreading, and obstinate nature of reigning corruptions; and how they exclude from fellowship with God and his people! Jealous of myself, it becomes me to present my heart and my ways before my all-seeing High Priest, that he may search and try me. If he find me pining away in mine iniquity; wilfully increasing unto more ungodliness; depending on self-righteousness as the ground of my acceptance with God; habitually disposed to rage at reproof; fixed in gross heresy, or given to boast of that which is plainly sinful; I am certainly a leper, a servant of sin: and let me, with the deepest agony and grief, bewail my condition, while by faith I apply to him; for his word only can effect the cure, and his grace relieve the misery. If he find in me the opposite marks of real grace, particularly a deep sense of universal filthiness in heart and life, still let me wash myself in Jesus' blood, on account of my remaining corruptions and daily infirmities.—Let me submit to his trial the garments of my conversation, that he may purge out what is amiss; and save my soul, though my works should be burnt up.—Let ministers learn with what tenderness and exact attention to God's prescriptions they should judge of the states of others, in order either to admit them to, or exclude them from, the seals of God's covenant.

[CHAP. XIV. Ver. 4. The cedar wood mentioned here, and in Num. 19. 6, is said not to be the cedar of Lebanon, so distinguished in Scripture for the uses of architecture; but the fragrant wood of the juniperus oxycedrus, which grows abundantly in Syria and Palestine. We are led, however to believe it to be the cedar of Lebanon, and that it is used with the hyssop; (1) as representing the two scriptural limits of vegetation: thus it is written, 1 Kings 4. 30—33. "And Solomon's wisdom excelled all the wisdom of the children of the east country, and all the wisdom of Egypt; and he spake of trees from the cedar of Lebanon, even to the hyssop that springeth out of the wall." Now, as under the blessing of Heaven, a wholesome vegetable diet is one of the chief remedies in cutaneous diseases; these two extremes might well represent the whole vegetable family. (2) The cedar as an uncorruptible wood, might naturally represent the constitution restored from corruption, and spiritually, that better and incorruptible life of which bodily health is the best

18 And the remnant of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall [s] pour upon the head of him that is to be cleansed; and the priest shall [t] make an atonement for him before the LORD.

19 And the priest shall [u] offer the sin-offering, and make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed from his uncleanness, and afterward he shall kill the burnt-offering.

20 And the priest shall [x] offer the burnt-offering and the meat-offering upon the altar: [y] and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and he shall be clean.

21 And if he [z] be poor, and [†] cannot get so much; then he shall take one lamb for a trespass-offering [‡] to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth-deal of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering, and a log of oil;

22 And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, such as he is able to get; and the one shall be a sin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering.

23 [a] And he shall bring them on the eighth day, for his cleansing, unto the priest, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the LORD.

24 And the priest shall take the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

25 And he shall kill the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall [b] take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

26 [§] And the priest shall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand.

27 And the priest shall sprinkle with his right finger some of the oil that is in his left hand seven times before the LORD.

28 And the priest shall put of the oil that is in his hand upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the trespass-offering.

29 And the [c] rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, [d] to make an atonement for him before the LORD.

30 And he shall offer the one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, such as he can get;

31 Even such as he is able to get, * the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering: and [e] the priest shall make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed before the LORD.

32 This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leprosy, whose [f] hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleansing.

33 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

34 When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I [g] give to you for a possession, and I [h] put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession;

35 And he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, It seemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the house:

36 Then the priest shall command that they [†] empty the house before the priest go into it to see the plague, that [i] all that is in the house be not made unclean; and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house.

37 And he shall look on the plague, [‡] and, behold, if the plague be in the walls of the house with hollow strakes, greenish or reddish, which in sight are lower than the wall;

38 Then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shut up the house seven days.

39 And the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall look: and, behold, if the plague be spread in the walls of the house:

40 Then the priest shall command that they [k] take away the stones in which the plague is, and they shall cast them into an unclean place without the city.

similitude, (1 Pet. 1. 23); while the hyssop might naturally set forth gratitude for those sanative qualities which God has so largely infused into the vegetable tribes, and spiritually those "leaves for the healing of the nations," (Rev. 22. 2); which flourish unfading on the tree of eternal life. By comparing Heb. 9. 19, with Isa. 1. 18, we discover that the scarlet represents here the deep dye of sin, which, dipt in the living waters of mercy become as wool and as snow.——Ver. 5. The earthen vessel, represents the humiliated body in which Christ died; the running water is the emblem of that ever-enduring, that eternal life; the current of which is never exhausted; which our Lord possessed in himself, and which he freely bestows on all who hear him, John 10. 28.——Ver. 35. Would we judge aright of these ancient laws delivered to Moses, we must examine them in their bearing upon modern circumstances. Now, viewed in this light, there are few things in modern times, more requiring legislative interference and remedy than the houses ordinarily provided for the poor. Damp, and ill ventilated, in one apartment, or admitting every blast in another; producing, in proportion to their cost, a larger return to the owner than the splendid dwellings of the rich—they furnish the perennial seeds of disease, waste and destroy their numerous and miserable inmates; become in the result, an intolerable tax upon the community, who totally overlook the public nuisance concealed under the mask of private property. Now, under these circumstances, modern European jurisprudence offers to the miserable inhabitant of the unhealthy hovel, no redress, beyond removal—a removal to as bad, if not to worse; with still no remedy, but the reiterated renewal of the still hopeless experiment. Upon this scene of darkness, let us pour the light of God's law by Moses. The owner, the occupying tenant, (ver. 35,) states to the priest his suspicion that the house is infected. It must be no bare attempt at annoyance to his superior, for all the furniture of the occupant must be removed, and he must seek another residence while due examination is made: should the examination lead to suspicions, cleansing and due repairs are employed; and, should these suspicions be confirmed, the wretched dwelling is razed to the very foundation, and its very dust is carried forth out of the city, lest its floating particles should endanger the public health! Were a commission of learned, philanthropic, and godly physicians, carrying this law in their hands, to pass through the narrow and miserable lanes of our towns and cities, and visit the unhappy refuges of our condensed and diseased pauperism, what an architectural revolution would be produced! and how deeply would public health and private comfort be bound to offer the sacrifice of thankfulness to God! But, while the fact of house contagion cannot be doubted, its causes are so obscure, that little is yet 41 And he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the dust that they scrape off without the city into an unclean place.

42 And they shall take other stones, and put them in the place of those stones; and he shall take other mortar, and shall plaster the house.

43 And if the plague come again, and break out in the house, after that he hath taken away the stones, and after he hath scraped the house, and after it is plastered;

44 Then the priest shall come and look, and, behold, if the plague be spread in the house, it is a fretting leprosy in the house: it is unclean.

45 And he shall [l] break down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house; and he shall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place.

46 Moreover, he that goeth into the house all the while that it is shut up shall be unclean until the even.

47 And he that lieth in the house shall wash his clothes; and he that eateth in the house shall wash his clothes.

48 ¶ And if the priest [*] shall come in, and look upon it, and, behold, the plague hath not spread in the house after the house was plastered; then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the plague is healed.

49 And he shall take to cleanse the house [m] two birds, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop.

50 And he shall kill the one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water.

51 And he shall take the cedar-wood, and he hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the slain bird, and in the running water, and sprinkle the house seven times.

52 And he shall cleanse the house with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar-wood, and with the hyssop, and with the scarlet.

53 But he shall let go the living bird out of the city into the open fields, and make an atonement for the house: and it shall be clean.

54 [n] This is the law for all manner of plague of leprosy, and scall.

55 And for the leprosy of a garment, and of a house,

56 And for a rising, and for a scab, and for a bright spot;

57 To [o] teach [*] when it is unclean, and when it is clean: this is the law of leprosy.

2 Speak [b] unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When any man hath a [c] running issue out of his flesh, because of his issue he is unclean.

3 And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his [d] flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness.

4 [] Every bed whereon he lieth that hath the issue is unclean; and every [] thing whereon he sitteth shall be unclean.

accurately known. Decaying materials, confined air, microscopic animalculæ and plants; various miasmata, and animal exudation may all, with other causes, be the instruments of the judgments of God. But the cause of heart contagion, the word of God has clearly developed; and we know, that, because of sin, "the earthly house of this tabernacle" has been condemned by the priest that examined it, and must be "dissolved;" and that believers change their unhealthy residence for a "building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," 2 Cor. 5. 1.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIV.—No human endeavours, but God alone, can cure my spiritual plagues. By his grace, through the application of the blood and Spirit of Jesus, the God-man—of Jesus, the once slain, but now living and ascended Saviour—I must be cleansed from my reigning corruptions. Thus shall I have access into God's camp, his church below; and, as a bird escaped, fly away towards heaven, rejoicing in my deliverance. But not till, through the Spirit, I repeatedly wash myself and my performances in the fountain of his blood; till I search out and mortify my corruptions, the deeds of my body, and receive the full efficacy of Jesus' righteousness, and the influences of his blessed Spirit, for the sanctification of my whole powers and members; shall I be admitted to my real habitation, or enter into unreserved and immediate fellowship with divine persons, holy angels, and glorified saints. But blessed be the Lord, that my all-comprehending offering, Christ Jesus, suits me, whether I be poor or rich, and renders my person, and all my services, constantly acceptable before God.—In this plague of the house, let me observe how sin worketh the dissolution not only of human bodies, but of families, nations, and churches; and that no human projects, but Jesus and his Spirit preached and applied, can prevent their destruction; and that, where there is a continued obstinacy in sinning, notwithstanding mercies and judgments, inevitable ruin must necessarily ensue.

[CHAP. XV. Ver. 3. The running issue, evidently included all forms of inflammation terminating in a constant purulent discharge: verse 8. seeming evidently to include disease of the lungs; and these, whether contagious or otherwise, are all ranked, and most justly, under one common character of uncleanness. But why, 11 And whomsoever he toucheth that hath the issue, and hath not rinsed his hands in water, [h] he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

12 And the [i] vessel of earth that he toucheth which hath the issue shall be broken;* and every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in water.

13 And when he that hath an issue is cleansed of his issue, then he shall number to himself [k] seven days for his cleansing, and [l] wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in running water, and shall be clean.

14 And on the eighth day he shall take to him [m] two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, and come before the LORD unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and give them unto the priest.

15 And the priest shall offer them, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering: and the [n] priest shall make an atonement for him before the LORD for his issue.

16 And if any man's [o] seed of copulation go out from him, then he shall wash all his flesh in water, and be unclean until the even.

17 And every garment, and every skin, whereon is the seed of copulation, shall be washed with water, and be unclean until the even.

18 The [p] woman also with whom man shall lie with seed of copulation, they shall both bathe themselves in water, and be unclean until the even.

19 ¶ And if a woman [q] have an issue, and her issue in her flesh be blood, she shall be [†] put apart seven days; and whosoever toucheth her shall be unclean until the even.

20 And [r] every thing that she lieth upon in her separation shall be unclean; every thing also that she sitteth upon shall be unclean.

21 And whosoever toucheth her bed [s] shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

22 And whosoever toucheth any thing that she sat upon shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

23 And if it be on her bed, or on any thing whereon she sitteth, when he toucheth it, he shall be unclean until the even.

24 And if any man [t] lie with her at all, and her flowers be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days; and all the bed whereon he lieth shall be unclean.

25 And if a woman [u] have an issue of her blood many days out of the time of her separation; or if it run beyond the time of her separation; all the days of the issue of her uncleanness shall be as the days of her separation: she shall be unclean.

26 Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her separation; and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her separation.

27 And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and [x] shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

28 But if she be cleansed of her issue; then she shall [y] number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean.

29 And [z] on the eighth day she shall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

30 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering: and the priest shall make an atonement for her before the LORD for the issue of her uncleanness.

31 [a] Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness; that they die not in their uncleanness, when they defile my tabernacle that is among them.

32 [b] This is the law of him that hath an issue, and of him whose seed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith;

33 And of her that is sick of her flowers, and of him that hath an issue, of the man, and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her which is unclean.*

* All the beforementioned laws concerning uncleanness, and the rites of purification, were designed to impress on the Hebrew people the necessity of inward cleanness and purity of mind. And were further intended to prevent the Israelites from being drawn into idolatry by establishing a wide difference of customs and habits between them and the surrounding heathen.—Wells.

CHAPTER XVI.

The divine institution of the great fast of expiation, (1) Upon that day of the year only durst the high priest enter the most holy place: 1, 2. (2) He must perform the principal service of the day in his plain linen garments, not in his golden robes: 4. (3) Sin-offerings and burnt-offerings must be presented both for himself and for the people: 3—14. (4) One of the goats provided for a sin-offering must be slain; the other dismissed into the wilderness: 15—22. (5) The burnt-offerings for the high priest and people: 23—28. (6) The conductor of the scape-goat, the high priest, and the man who burnt the flesh of the sin-offering, must wash themselves: 24, 26, 28. (7) The people must observe the day in holy resting, and in bitter mourning for their sins: 29—34.

If the issue be stopped, is the patient still unclean? he remains so, only till he make public acknowledgment of the mercy of God.—Note. The regenerate soul, in which the power of sin is stopped, feels most sensitively the shame of its former disease. Paul ranked visibly and justly amongst the chief of saints, but Paul's awakened memory and sensitive conscience pronounced him the chief of sinners, 1 Tim. 1. 15.——Ver. 12. The vessel of earth that the unclean has touched must be broken—that is, not every time he has touched it, but when he has ceased to use it: and whether such vessels may have been of the porous and absorbing character of much of the modern pottery of the East, used for cooling water by filtration and evaporation, or of a glazed and more perfect manufacture, still the breaking was a valuable sanatory regulation; while it ministered to the recovered invalid a salutary memorial that, at best, he "dwelt in a house of clay," (Job 4. 29.) soon to be broken in pieces. The vessel of wood was merely rinsed in order to its cleansing: most probably the beautifully varnished wooden ware of Eastern countries rendered impervious to fluids, and thereby enabled to resist, or cast off any contagious matter. The distinction between the vessels forms a just emblem of the state of man; the body must be broken, the spirit washed, (John 3. 5.) the body is for sacrifice, the spirit for renewal, Rom. 12. 1, 2.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XV.—In these things, as in a figure, I behold how shameful and infectious are the scandalous outbreakings of original and inward corruption, and particularly those which are any way connected with fleshly lusts. Neither the corrupters nor the corrupted can have fellowship with God or his people, but in a believing improvement of Jesus' blood and Spirit, and in bitter and unfeigned repentance of their sin. Let my body, therefore, as well as my soul, be kept pure for the Lord. Let me, with the most earnest care, avoid the company of apostate, erroneous, unchaste, frothy, and wicked persons; and have no fellowship in thought, word or deed, with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. Without this circumspection and care, I shall certainly contract

AND [a] the LORD spake unto Moses, after [b] the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they offered before the LORD, and died;

2 And the LORD said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he [c] come not at all times into the holy place within the vail before the mercy-seat, which is upon the ark, that he die not: for I will [d] appear in the cloud upon the mercy-seat.

3 Thus shall Aaron come into the holy place; [e] with a young bullock for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering.

4 He shall [f] put on the holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with the linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: these are holy garments; therefore shall he [g] wash his flesh in water, and so put them on.

5 And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two [h] kids of the goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering.

6 And Aaron shall offer [i] his bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself, and make an atonement for himself, and for his house.

7 And he shall take the two goats, and [k] present them before the LORD at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And Aaron shall cast [l] lots upon the two goats; one lot for the LORD, and the other lot for * the scape-goat.

9 And Aaron shall [m] bring the goat upon which the LORD's lot † fell, and offer [n] him for a sin-offering.

10 But the [o] goat on which the lot fell to be the scape-goat shall be presented alive before the LORD, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape-goat into the wilderness.

11 ¶ And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself.

12 And he shall [p] take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the vail.

13 [q] And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the LORD, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat that is upon the testimony, that he die not.

guilt, stains, infamy, and hurt, which will not be purged away, but follow me till I die.

[CHAP. XVI. Ver. 3. Aaron may not come into the holy place but in the prescribed dress—we may not draw nigh to God, but in the name, by the spirit, and clothed in the righteousness of Christ.——Ver. 10. To a few special points in this divine ordinance, let us direct our attention—matters common to this and other sacrifices require no particular notice. The lot was a divine ordinance (Prov. 18. 18.) constituting an authorized appeal to the omniscience and providence of God. So it was, according to "the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God," (Acts 2. 23.) that Christ should suffer in the flesh, as the one creature died; and that he should be "quickened by the Spirit," (1 Pet. 3. 18.) as the other escaped. ——Ver. 17. The high priest entered alone—so when Christ was made captive, "they all forsook him and fled;" and when prophetically seen "coming from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah; (Isa. 63. 1, 3.) he had "trodden the wine-press alone; and, of the people there was none with him"—alone he ascended into heaven; (Acts 1. 9, 10.) and alone he sitteth at the right hand of God, (Acts 1. 32, 33.) ——Ver. 29. Why is the day of atonement a day of affliction? because it was the stated anniversary for confessing "all iniquities and transgressions" (ver. 21.) in the presence of God—and confession implies repentance, else it is lip service and mockery; and repentance implies grief for, and hatred of our sins, even when "turning from them to God, with full purpose of, and endeavour after new obedience:" the Saviour "bearing our griefs, and carrying our sorrows," (Isa. 53. 4.) is no doubt a sight of "great joy" (Luke 2. 10.) to believers; but the remembrance that he "was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities," (Isa. 53. 5.) that "in all our afflictions, he was afflicted;" (Isa. 63. 9.) nay, that by the sins of professed believers, he is even now "crucified afresh," (Heb. 6. 6.) "and put to an open shame"—these are the things that convert the day of atonement into a day of affliction, and commingle tears of sorrow with songs of joy.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVI.—In these ceremonial observances I am still directed to Jesus, as appointed by God, and fully qualified to make atonement for all the sins of an elect world. I behold him, in his debasement, stript of his glorious robes of light and majesty, clothed with a mean but pure manhood; and at once standing as the laborious High Priest, and as the God-honouring, and sin-expiating sacrifice. He needed not to offer for himself; but the Lord lays upon him the iniquities of us all. As our slain goat he atones for them, and as our scape-goat he carries them all into the land of forgetfulness; dying for our offences, but raised again, and ascending to glory, for our justification. Behold him entering into the celestial oracle in the virtue of his own blood! There he appears in the presence of God for us, pleading his own merits, and offering up the incense of continual intercession for us, putting off his robes of debasement, laying aside every vestige of the likeness of sinful flesh, and clothed and crowned with glory and honour. The sprinkling of his blood sanctifies the church, and all the ordinances of it; and renders our sacrifices and incense of grateful obedience, of fervent prayer and praise, acceptable to his Father. He returns also in the Spirit from within the vail to bless all nations in the gospel; and at last will return personally in the clouds, without sin, unto our eternal salvation. But while, in the purification of these agents after their sacred work, I perceive the imperfections of the most noted ceremonies for purging the conscience; let me diligently observe what pollution I contract in my most religious, my most solemn services, and let me live by faith, looking to Jesus whom I have pierced, and mourning bitterly over my transgressions as the cause of his sufferings! Nor let me ever forget what infinite glories must dwell in Christ, who answers, nay, infinitely more than answers, to all these sacrifices, these oblations, these priests, these means of purification, of which I have hitherto read!

[CHAP. XVII. Ver. 4. This law has been the source of much perplexity to two of the most learned commentators, Michaelis and Boothroyd. Michaelis considers it as requiring that every animal killed for common food must first be brought to the door of the tabernacle, and have the blood sprinkled, and the fat consumed as a peace-offering; and this he considers as a temporary law, intended for the wilderness, and afterwards repealed, (Deut. 12. 13.) on the entrance to Canaan. Boothroyd proposes to reconcile the passages by supplying a clause found in the Samaritan and Septuagint versions, and which provides, not that animals for common food should be first offered as peace-offerings, but that no peace-offering should be killed any where but at the door of the tabernacle. Now an addition to, or explanation of a divine law, it is easy to comprehend; but a direct repeal is a reflection on the legislator not to be admitted. The opinion of Michaelis is therefore to be rejected. Neither is it desirable to derive over expositions with Boothroyd from foreign sources.

tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the LORD, even that man shall be [q] cut off from among his people.

10 ¶ And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that [r] eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.

11 For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you [s] upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul.

12 Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, [t] No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood.

13 And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, [u] which hunteth and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall [x] even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust.

14 [y] For it is the life of all flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for [*] the life of all flesh is the blood thereof; whosoever eateth it shall be cut off.

15 ¶ And every soul that eateth [†] that which died of itself, or that which was torn with beasts, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger, he shall both [z] wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even: then shall he be clean.

Let us therefore examine whether such resort be necessary. From ver. 5, we learn that the end of the law was, "that the children of Israel might bring their sacrifices which they offered in the open field, to the door of the tabernacle." Now, as the preamble of an act of parliament explains, and confines the enactment to its proper object; so this exposition of the design of the law, though following after in place, is yet the virtual preamble not to a temporary provision, but to a "statute for ever, throughout their generations." The ordinance in Deuteronomy is therefore no repeal, but a mere declaratory enactment to remove any doubts that might arise as to the intention and limits of the former law.——Ver. 7. Devils, literally hairy ones. The Egyptians worshipped an imaginary deity called Pan—which means every thing; because, in their mythology he was considered the principle of all things: he was represented under the figure of a goat, his lower extremities covered with hair; hence the description in the text. Pan and his lascivious crew of satyrs and fauns (pictured as covered with hair) were the woodland deities of a degrading idolatry—and, to preserve Israel from its contagion, sacrifices in the open field were forbidden; and, where circumstances permitted, were strictly confined to the door of the tabernacle. The phrase of abhorrence with which this worship is described, is not merely figurative but literal. In every system of idolatry down to this day, prostitution constitutes a part of the impure and satanic worship.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVII.—How high is the sovereignty of God, by which he can enact what laws of worship, and means of approaching him, he pleases! But to worship him according to our own inventions, to neglect the way of his appointing, so far from being acceptable before God, is both dangerous to ourselves, and considered by him as nearly connected with the idolatrous worship of devils. It is necessary, therefore, on every worshipping occasion, to cleave close to Jesus, as our altar and high priest, and to the communion of his saints; and, for the preventing of false worship, for the honour of divinely-instituted ordinances; and for the uniting of the church, to adhere strictly to God's appointment, even in things circumstantial; and to prefer public ordinances to private. In this blood of animals, so noted because made an atonement for men, I behold the blood of the new covenant enjoined to me—the blood of Jesus Christ shed for me. Let me, therefore, impressed with the repeated commandments of Heaven, maintain the deepest reverence for it, and every thing connected with it, and detest every thing murderous or cruel! And let nothing deathful, dead, or dying, nothing that can be torn in pieces, or torn from me, but the ever-living Jesus, and JEHOVAH in him, be the provision of my soul and portion of my heart! If I am defiled by such things, either I must wash in Jesus' fountain opened, or perish in my sin.

[CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 28. The expulsion of the nations of Canaan, by the alleged command of God, has often afforded a topic of cavil and objection to infidels. The of a woman and her daughter, neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; for they are her near kinswomen: it is wickedness.

18 Neither shalt thou take [o] a wife to her sister, to vex her, to uncover her nakedness, besides the other in her life-time.

19 ¶ [p] Also thou shalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedness, as long as she is put apart for her uncleanness.

20 Moreover, [q] thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, to defile thyself with her.

21 And thou [r] shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire [s] to Molech, neither shalt thou [t] profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

22 [u] Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind: it is abomination.

23 [x] Neither shalt thou lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith; neither shall any woman stand before a beast to lie down thereto: it is [o] confusion.

24 [y] Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things; for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you.

25 And the [z] land is defiled: therefore I do [a] visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself [b] vomiteth out her inhabitants.

26 Ye shall [c] therefore keep my statutes and my judgments, and shall not commit any of these abominations; neither any of your own nation, nor any stranger that sojourneth among you;

27 (For all these abominations [d] have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled;)

28 That the land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you.

29 For whosoever shall commit any of these abominations, even the souls that commit them shall be [e] cut off from among their people.

30 Therefore shall ye keep mine [f] ordinance, that ye commit not any one of these abominable customs, which were committed before you, and that ye defile not yourselves therein: I [g] am the LORD your God.

CHAPTER XIX.

A repetition and enforcement of sundry laws—some peculiar to the Jewish economy —some of universal obligation upon all men, chiefly for the purpose of warning and guarding against the immoralities of the Canaanites:—1—37.

A. M. 2514. B. C. 1490.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, [a] Ye shall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy.

3 ¶ Ye shall [b] fear every man his mother and his father, and [c] keep my sabbaths: I am the LORD your God.

4 [d] Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods: I am the LORD your God.

5 ¶ And if ye [e] offer a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, ye shall offer it at your own will.

6 It [f] shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if ought remain until the third day, it shall be burnt in the fire.

7 And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is abominable; it shall not be accepted.

8 Therefore every one that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the LORD; and that soul shall be [g] cut off from among his people.

9 ¶ And [h] when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest.

10 And thou shalt not [i] glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; [k] thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger: I am the LORD your God.

11 ¶ Ye [l] shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another.

12 ¶ And ye shall not [m] swear by my name falsely, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

simplest reply to such frivolous charges, is simply this—that for child-murder, (see Psal. 106. 37, 38.) forbidden in verse 21, the law of every civilized country, till this hour, inflicts a heavier penalty than voluntary expatriation; (a penalty that was always within the choice of the Canaanites,) even the penalty of death. And, if an infidel were invested with the power, not merely of ruling men, but what he so often attempts—of becoming the god of God, what penalty would he inflict? would he let the child-murderer go free? there are those indeed who would, "their foolish heart being so far hardened" that they deny all accountability either to God or man —but with the exception of these, "who, not liking to retain God in their knowledge, are given up to strong delusions," even infidels will generally acknowledge, that for the crime of child murder, expatriation were a punishment far too gentle; and that they were, as God adjudged them, indeed worthy of death. The corruption of morals indicated by the entire chapter, and the shocking crimes that consummate the national guilt, are indeed sufficient to "vindicate the ways of God" in the destruction of the Canaanites, and to afford a warning to all nations, that though judgment tarry it never sleeps.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVIII.—What a sink of shocking pollution is our world! Sinful and dangerous is conformity to the men of it; and yet it is little avoided, nay, often much studied, by many professors of the true religion! With infinite wisdom has God framed his rules of marriage for avoiding uncleanness, and for spreading of love and friendship among mankind: and yet sinners debase themselves, and violate the dictates of nature, in order to fulfil their filthy and furious lusts, arising from the abominable source of a desperately wicked heart. What need to distrust ourselves, and abstain from every, even the smallest appearance of evil; for filthy lusts and absurd idolatries ripen, not only individuals, but nations, for ruin; and to observe the judgments inflicted on others would tend to deter us from their sins. As God seldom leaves men to the rage of their lusts, till they forsake him and his institutions; let me, conscious of my own inward readiness to commit the worst of crimes, and in the firm faith of God's infinite excellency, high dignity, and authority over me, of his new covenant grant of himself, and delightful relation to me, as the Lord my God, cleave closely to his commandments, as an effectual preservative from them. And, while I live solely on Jesus' perfect fulfilment of the law, in gratitude for his goodness, let me always abound in the work of the Lord.

[CHAP. XIX. Ver. 2. There is a most important lesson conveyed in the divine directions—"Speak unto all the congregation: Ye shall be holy." Religion is not intended as a mere guide for sober age, while licensing of thoughtless youth to "walk in the light of their own eyes:" it is not intended as a mere check upon the appetites of the poor, while permitting the rich every indulgence of desire: it is not intended as a mere canon for ecclesiastics, which others are authorized to neglect or violate—It speaks alike to all who desire to be called "children of God;" and who hope to be "joint heirs with Christ;" and it demands of all—"be ye holy, for I the Lord your God am holy."——Ver. 7. The passover must be eaten on the night of the day in which it was killed—it must be "eaten in haste," and if any remained till the morning, it must be burned with fire. Thus every thing connected with it, indicated the urgency of the Egyptians for their removal; and the people's anxiety for liberty. But the peace-offering, indicating a state of rest, may remain and be eaten on the second day; and, not until the third is its use forbidden. It would then, in a warm climate, have become corrupted; would have ceased to be an emblem of him whose flesh must not "see corruption;" and therefore is burned (ascends) on the third day, a type of him, who, on that day arose from the dead.——Ver. 10. The second specific provision (verses 9, 10.) of the Mosaic poor laws, (the first being Exod. 23. 11.) and admirably calculated to unite charity with industry, an essential principle in every measure of relief.——Ver. 13. Compare this punctuality of immediate payment to the humble operative, with the preference the worldly code gives to what are called debts of honour, and let the law of God be judged by the boundless superiority of its moral ordinances.——Ver. 14. Fear thy God, who, for reasons known to himself, has inflicted these privations; and who knows how to punish those, who, by inhumanely mocking the afflicted, are, in reality "reproaching their Maker," Prov. 17. 5.——Ver. 19. This law did not forbid to the Jew the use of mules purchased from another people, but the intentional production of them in his own flock. The whole law was calculated to prevent unnatural commixtures, and to remind Israel that they were a peculiar and separate people.——Ver. 26. Enchantments being derived from a word signifying a serpent, there is reason to think the law forbids augury or fortune-telling by observation of serpents. Times, that is, what are called fortunate or lucky days, or the reverse: a wretched superstition still lingering wherever second causes are more regarded than the overruling and ever-watchful providence of the Almighty.——Ver. 28. Cutting the flesh was a common mode of mourning in Egypt, as the murderous suttee is still in India. Printing marks—in modern language, tattooing—has been found almost in all nations. The Britons were so ornamented, rather so disfigured, in the times of Julius Cæsar. The Bedouin Arabs, the New Zealanders and other tribes, still retain the same barbarous custom. The custom seems to have originated in superstition and idolatry, and, as peculiarly calculated to preserve their powers, receives an emphatic prohibition from the Lord.——Ver. 30. The law of the sabbath is thus often repeated, because temptation to violate it is of frequent recurrence.——Ver. 31. Pretended fortune-tellers, and discoverers of things lost or stolen, are still to be found even in Christian countries. These pretensions being practical lies, are of the devil, for he is a "liar, and the father of it," John 8. 44. He puts it into their heart to lie, as into Judas to betray; and he finally enters into the one, as surely as into the other, John 13. 2, 27.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIX.—In these peace-offerings let me behold Jesus, my peace-maker with God, and speedily receive and live on him by faith. In these gleanings let me observe what care God takes of the poor: nor can I have any true religion without a similar temper. Yea, let me think what gleanings of promises, and deeds of grace, for us poor strangers of the Gentiles, are left in every corner of the Jewish scriptures. In these forborne trees, let me learn to avoid all rash desires of created enjoyments, or even honouring the Lord with first-fruits not arrived at their perfection. Let me never attempt to alter God's frame of creatures; never attempt to mix works and grace; Jesus' righteousness and my own; his Spirit and my natural abilities; his truths and my own fancies; his ordinances and my own inventions. If I enjoy the directions of God's word and Spirit, let me be ashamed to copy after heathen superstition; but let me carefully observe the positive institutions of my God, and never neglect the weightier matters of the law. 2 ¶ Again, thou shalt say to the children of Israel, Whosoever he be of [a] the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that [b] giveth any of his seed unto Molech,* he shall surely be put to death; the people of the land shall stone him with stones.

3 And I will [c] set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people; because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile my sanctuary, and to profane my holy name.

4 ¶ And if [d] the people of the land [e] do any ways hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, and kill him not;

5 Then I will [f] set my face against that man, and against his family, and will cut him off, and all that go a [g] whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Molech, from among their people.

6 ¶ And the [h] soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will cut him off from among his people.

7 ¶ [i] Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the LORD your God.

8 And ye [k] shall keep my statutes, and do them: I am the LORD which [l] sanctify you.

9 ¶ [m] For every one that curseth his father or his mother shall be surely put to death: he hath cursed his father or his mother; his [n] blood shall be upon him.

10 ¶ And [o] the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death.

11 ¶ [p] And the man that lieth with his father's wife hath uncovered his father's nakedness: both of them shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

12 And [q] if a man lie with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall surely be put to death: they have wrought * confusion; their blood shall be upon them.

13 ¶ [r] If a man also lie with mankind as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

14 And [s] if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness: they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no wickedness among you.

15 [t] And if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death: and ye shall slay the beast.

16 And if a woman approach unto any beast, and lie down thereto, thou shalt kill the woman and the beast: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

17 ¶ [u] And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and see her nakedness, and she see his nakedness, it is a wicked thing; and they shall be cut off in the sight of their people: he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; [x] he shall bear his iniquity.

18 [y] And if a man shall lie with a woman having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness; he hath † discovered her fountain, and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood; and both of them shall be ‡ cut off from among their people.

19 And [z] thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister; for he uncovereth his near kin: they shall bear their iniquity.

20 And if [b] a man shall lie with his uncle's wife, he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness: they shall bear their sin; they shall [c] die childless.

21 And [d] if a man shall take his brother's wife, it is ‡ an unclean thing; he hath uncovered his brother's nakedness: they shall be childless.

22 ¶ Ye [e] shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them; that the land, whither I bring you to dwell therein, [f] spue you not out.

precepts so briefly, let me extend my meditations on them: and, in all my obedience, let me be influenced by the firm faith that the lawgiver is JEHOVAH, my God in Christ. Whatsoever is not of this faith is sin. Nor can my obedience be sincere without being universal to all his commandments.

[CHAP. XX. Ver. 2. Molech, worshipped either by children passing between two fires, or being placed in the hands, or in the body, of the brazen statue intensely heated, by which means they were instantly destroyed.——Ver. 4. But should not charity cover, rather than publish or punish "the multitude of sins?" 1 Pet. 4. 8. Yes; charity, (fervent charity among yourselves) shall cover the multitude of sins against one another, but may not interfere with the offences of idolatrous murder, which is an offence against God. Such was the judicial law of the Jewish state; the church of Christ has the same law in principle, but with spiritual penalties, because she is spiritual, 1 Cor. 5. 5. & 10. 20. 2 Cor. 6. 14. Eph. 5. 11.——Ver. 20. Childless, has, by some, been supposed to signify, that the guilty parties should suffer death, and so have no children, but this is inconsistent with possible circumstances, as, for example, the crime might be committed in a strange land, where the Jewish law, were it even death, could not be enforced; or the crime might be concealed, so that the infliction of the penalty would not be attempted. By comparing the passage with Jer. 22. 30, where Coniah is written childless, with 1 Chr. 3. 16, 17, where we find he had a large family, (there called Jeconiah); and then returning to Jeremiah, where he defines childless to mean, expulsion for ever from the throne he had disgraced by his wickedness, we will be enabled to conclude that childless necessarily means no more than disinherited descendants are not reckoned to their guilty parents in the public genealogies.—ED.]

CHAPTER XXI.

(1) Of the priests' mourning and marriage: 1—15. (2) The corporal blemishes which excluded Aaron's male descendants from the priestly work, but not from the sacred food: 16—24.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, [a] Speak unto the priests the sons of Aaron, and say unto them, [b] There shall none be defiled for the dead among his people:

2 But for his kin that is near unto him, that is, for his mother, and for his father, and for his son, and for his daughter, and for his brother,

3 And for his sister a virgin, that is nigh unto him, which hath had no husband; for her may he be defiled.

4 But he shall not defile himself, [c] being a chief man among his people, to profane himself.

5 [d] They shall not make [*] baldness upon their head, neither shall they shave off the corner of their beard, nor make any cuttings in their flesh.

6 ¶ They shall [e] be holy unto their God, and not profane the name of their God: for the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and the bread of their God, they do offer; therefore they shall be holy.

7 ¶ [f] They shall not take a wife that is a whore, or profane; neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband: for he is holy unto his God.

8 Thou shalt [g] sanctify him therefore; for he [h] offereth the bread of thy God: he shall be holy unto thee: for I the LORD, which sanctify you, am holy.

9 ¶ And [i] the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the whore, she profaneth her father: she shall be burnt with fire.

10 ¶ And he that is the high priest among his brethren, [k] upon whose head the anointing oil was poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes;

11 [l] Neither shall he go in to any dead body, nor defile himself for his father, or for his mother;

12 Neither [m] shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God; for the crown of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the LORD.

13 ¶ And he shall take a [n] wife in her virginity.

14 A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or an harlot, these shall he not take; but he shall take a virgin of his own people to wife.

15 Neither shall he [o] profane his seed among his people: for I the LORD do sanctify him.

break out; and especially when they pass unpunished: but corrupt nature is prone to evil; the commands of God are therefore enforced with the most awful penalties, and threatenings of death; and filthy pleasures infallibly issue in fearful punishments: nor are any more exposed to the severe indignation of God, than those professors who wilfully imitate the profane world. But honourable, pleasant, and profitable is a course of universal holiness; especially amidst a multitude of temptations and examples to the contrary: and delightful is the study of it, when God, as our own God, sanctifies us wholly, soul, body, and spirit; and thus forms us for himself, that we may dwell alone, and show forth his praise.

[CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1. Defiled—by touching the dead body, entering the house where it lay, following to the grave, or mourning.—Patrick. This prohibition extended to every common priest, except in cases of near kindred, in which, however, though he might be defiled, by the unavoidable demands of affection, still he must not voluntarily defile himself farther. The entire priesthood was a type of Christ who was "undefiled and separate from sinners," Heb. 7. 26; yet was not ashamed to call his church for which he gave himself (Eph. 5. 25.) brethren, (Heb. 2. 11.) and who, "himself having suffered, being tempted, was able (by sympathy and power) to succour them that are tempted."——Ver. 7. This verse would seem to imply the possibilty of such moral degradation in the priesthood as, to modern ideas, may appear impossible. But it was necessary to guard against the infectious example of the heathen priests, who, in their impure rites, prostituted their wives and daughters. The Mosaic law is even more morally stringent than our translation represents, for zorah does not signify a prostitute, but one who had been humbled.—— Ver. 7. He is holy—not the husband, but the priest, who, whatever might be his personal character, was ceremonially holy, or dedicated to God, and should be personally holy in accordance with his profession.——Ver. 12. High priest, literally, the priest, the great one, who, in respect of his greatness was the emblem of Christ exalted, with "a name above every name." Now, as Christ "endured the cross for the joy set before him," (Heb. 12. 2.) and was "anointed with the oil of gladness," (Heb. 1. 9.) a mourning high priest would not have fitly represented him to the eye of faith. Neither might the high-priest go out of the sanctuary; so Christ, once exalted, "the heavens must receive till the times of the restitution of all things," (Acts 3. 21.) when he will appear the second time without sin to salvation, Heb. 9. 28.——Ver. 14. This peculiarity in the marriage of the high priest, is the emblem of the spiritual marriage of Christ with his church, so beautifully set forth in scripture. See particularly, Is. 54. 5. Hosea 2. 7, 16, (Tshe signifies my husband,) 2 Cor. 11. 2.——Ver. 17. Blemish, deficiency, redundancy, or injury of any bodily member, blindness, imperfection of growth, or any unclean disease, excluded from the priesthood, and constituted, as it were, a providential excommunication, not from certain sacred privileges, but from sacred offices. This ordinance forms, 1. A beautiful image of Christ, the "lamb without blemish," 1 Pet. 1. 19. 2. Of the holy priesthood (of the church, appointed) "to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ," 1 Pet. 2. 5; while, 3. It reads in the name of God, a solemn rebuke to those parents, who, from worldly motives, dedicate the most incompetent members of their families to the service of God in the holy ministry, and to those who, from similar worldly motives enter into a work for which they know themselves incompetent, and to which they feel no call from the Spirit of God.——Ver. 23. The priest with a blemish may eat of the holy things, the priest unclean must not taste, lest he die, ch. 7. 20. & 21. 2. The reason of the distinction is plain—a blemish is

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, that they [a] separate themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel, and that they profane not my holy name in those things which they [*] hallow unto me: I am the LORD.

3 Say unto them, [c] Whosoever he be of all your seed, among your generations, that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Israel hallow unto the LORD, having his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be [d] cut off from my presence: I am the LORD.

4 [*] What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath a [*] running issue, he shall not eat of the holy things, until he be clean. And whoso toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead, or a man whose seed goeth from him;

5 Or [f] whosoever toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, or a man of whom he may take uncleanness, whatsoever uncleanness he hath;

6 The [g] soul which hath touched any such shall be unclean until even, and shall not eat of the holy things, unless he wash his flesh with water.

7 And when the [*] sun is down, he shall be clean, and shall afterward eat of [h] the holy things; because it is his food.

8 [i] That which dieth of itself, or is torn with beasts, he shall not eat, to defile himself therewith: I am the LORD.

9 They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they [k] bear sin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it: I the LORD do sanctify them.

10 ¶ There shall no [l] stranger eat of the holy thing: a sojourner of the priest, or an hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing.

11 But if the priest [m] buy any soul [†] with his money, he shall eat of it, and he that is born in his house; they shall eat of his meat.

12 If the priest's daughter also [n] be married unto [o] a stranger, she may not eat of an offering of the holy things.

13 But if [p] the priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she shall eat of her father's meat; but there shall no stranger eat thereof.

14 ¶ And if a man eat of the holy thing [q] unwittingly, then he shall [r] put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give it unto the priest with the holy thing.

15 And they shall not [*] profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they offer unto the LORD;

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXI.—In these ceremonial figures I behold Jesus, my priest for ever, untainted with selfish affections, or immoderate passions—I behold him holy, harmless, and undefiled—perfect as his Father who is in heaven is perfect; personally united with an unspotted manhood; graciously united to virgin churches; and spiritually married to washed and sanctified souls; nor ever decoyed from attending his work, no, not by the most powerful temptations. Let me learn likewise what noted examples gospel-ministers ought to be of holiness and purity; what close and earnest attention they ought to give to their work; with what patience and resignation they ought to bear the loss of worldly comforts; how circumspect they ought to be with respect to their marriage and family; and how, as servants, they ought to labour to be perfect and unblemished, even as their Master. Yea, if I name the name of Christ, whatever be my place in his church, let me depart from iniquity, and follow after holiness in all manner of conversation. While God is my portion, as well as my Master, on no account should I desert or neglect his worship: and, while my God liveth, never should I sorrow for deceased relations, or withdrawn comforts as those who have no hope. Since I am a child of Jesus, let me never by whorish pollutions or apostasy, discredit him or endanger myself. Since I am betrothed to him, let me never wittingly lay his enemy, an heir of hell, in my bosom. And, since God hath promised to supply all my wants, let me cast my cares on him, and firmly trust that he will perfect his work which concerneth me, rendering me perfect, even as my Father which is in heaven is perfect. And let me bless the Lord, that though my infirmities should disqualify me for office in the church, they do not debar me from partaking of Jesus, my sacred provision, in the courts and ordinances of his grace.

[CHAP. XXII. Ver. 2. To abuse official privileges is the tendency of every order of men; a tendency from which Satan will not permit the servants of God to be exempt, 1 Sam. 2. 13. Mat. 20. 21. Acts 20. 29, 30. Against this tendency, the Lord directs the provisions of this law. Accordingly the order to the priests, to separate themselves from the holy things, imports, that the priests presume not to plead any exemption from the law relating to the use of holy things, upon any plea of office; but rather that they should consider their office as imposing an obligation to a more scrupulous observance of the divine precepts, 1 Tim. 4. 12. Phil. 3. 17. 2 Thess. 3. 9. 1 Pet. 5. 3. The extension of this law, and its privileges, to the priest's purchased and permanent servants, as well as family, (ver. 11, 13.) shadows out the ingathering of the Gentiles to the "purchased possession," (Eph. 1. 14.) and inculcates upon Christians an impressive lesson of the necessity, not merely of personal but of family religion.——Ver. 23. Why this distinction? A vow was a solemn promise made to God, of which it is said, "the Lord will surely require it," Deut.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, [u] Whatsoever he be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers in Israel, that will offer his oblation for all his vows, and for all his free-will offerings, which they will offer unto the LORD for a burnt-offering;

19 Ye shall offer [x] at your own will a male without blemish, of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats.

23 Either a bullock or a † lamb that hath any thing superfluous or lacking in his parts, that mayest thou offer for a [c] free-will-offering; but for a vow it shall not be accepted.

25 Neither from a [d] stranger's hand shall ye offer the [e] bread of your God of any of these; because their corruption is in them, and blemishes be in them: they shall not be accepted for you.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

27 When a bullock, or a sheep, or a goat, is brought forth, then it shall be [f] seven days under the dam; and from the eighth day, and thenceforth, it shall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

23. 21. see Ps. 65. 1. & 76. 11. Eccl. 5. 4. Now, while requiring it, God requires neither more nor less; consequently the sacrifice must present an exact image of the vow; even as the work of Christ was in exact correspondence with the engagement of the covenant of grace, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God," Heb. 10. 7. But the free-will-offering, being, as its very name imports, free, an emblematic freedom, was not rejected on account of any natural defect or superfluity. But let it be remembered, this free-will-offering was to death; and then the consolatory doctrine of God's compassion to our natural defects and superfluities, while it furnishes consolation to the tempted and troubled spirit, (Rom. 7. 8—10, 13, 15, 18, 21, 23, 24.) totally excludes every unhallowed presumption of "continuing in sin, that grace might abound," (Rom. 6. 1.) and irresistibly enforces the fact, that true believers, whilst they "become dead to the law by the body of Christ," are "married to him who is raised from the dead, that they should bring forth fruit unto God." Rom. 7. 4.——Ver. 25. Though by instruction, example, and prayer, believers may aid one another, yet no man can be converted for another; and, "except ye be converted, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," Mat. 18. 3. Religion cannot be by proxy, it must be personal.——Ver. 30. Some religious duties may be deferred, because the believer lacks present means, time, or opportunity; but the sacrifice of thanksgiving must be immediate, in which spirit, he can "pray without ceasing," 1 Thes. 5. 17.—Ed.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXII.—Beholding in these figures the perfect and permanent purity of my Redeemer's person and nature; the persevering exactness of his obedience; the absolute perfection of his sacrifice of himself, and its unfailing virtue for preventing the destruction of his spiritual seed; we may observe, that it is altogether necessary to exclude wicked persons, and even scandalous saints, from the more sacred provision of the church, the seals of God's covenant; that every person or work, dedicated to the service of God, should be devoted to him in holiness; and the greatest care be used in meddling with holy things; for cursed is the deceiver that offereth unto the Lord things corrupt or unripe. But especially must we remember, that all delay of the cordial reception and improvement of Jesus Christ, and his fulness, offered for our comfort in the gospel, is infinitely sinful and dangerous, for thus only can we secure access to God; and nothing can powerfully influence us to obedience, but a firm faith and deep sense of his redeeming love.

[CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 4. Feasting and holiness are generally esteemed incompatible; but there is no more necessary separation, than between God and man. Now God and man we never find reconciled to each other, (Rom. 8. 7.) unless in the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ, (2 Cor. 5. 18—20); so feasting and holiness, we will never find united, until we have learned "to use the world without abusing it," (1 Cor. 7. 31.) a lesson, which nothing short of "the renewing of the spirit," (Tit. 3. 5.) can effectuate.——Ver. 5. 9 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall [l] reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a * [t] sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest;

11 And he shall [k] wave the sheaf before the LORD, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it.

12 And ye shall [l] offer that day, when ye wave the sheaf, an he-lamb without blemish, of the first year, for a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

13 And the meat-offering thereof shall be [m] two tenth-deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the LORD for a sweet savour; and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin.

14 And [n] ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye have brought an ‡ offering unto your God: it shall be a statute [o] for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

15 ¶ And [p] ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering; seven [q] sabbaths shall be complete:

16 Even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number [r] fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the LORD.

17 Ye shall bring out of your habitations [s] two wave-loaves of two tenth-deals: they shall be of fine flour; they shall be [t] baken with leaven; they are [u] the first-fruits unto the LORD.

18 And ye shall [x] offer with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock and two rams: they shall be for a burnt-offering unto the LORD, with their meat-offering and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire, of sweet savour unto the LORD.

19 Then ye shall [y] sacrifice one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offerings.

20 And the priest [z] shall wave them, with the bread of the first-fruits, for a wave-offering before the LORD, with the two lambs: they shall be [a] holy to the LORD for the priest.

21 And ye shall [b] proclaim on the self-same day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you; ye shall do no servile work therein: [c] it shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.

22 ¶ And [d] when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapest, neither shalt thou gather any gleaning of thy harvest; thou shalt leave them unto the poor and to the stranger: * I am the LORD your God.

23 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

24 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, [e] In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, a [f] memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation.

25 Ye shall do no [g] servile work therein; but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

27 Also on the tenth day of [h] this seventh month there shall be a day of atonement: it shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall afflict your souls, and offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And ye shall [i] do no work in that same day: for it is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the LORD your God.

year began with the equinoctial new-moon in spring; and on the fourteenth day, the passover, the parent of all their feasts, was celebrated.—Note. The Jewish feasts begin with the death of the lamb, and the sprinkling of its blood, after which immediately follows deliverance from bondage. So the believer's first joy dates from his knowledge of his Saviour's sorrows; his hunger and thirst are after righteousness, and he is filled, (Mat. 5. 6.) he keeps the perpetual feast, of a new year of a new life, because "Christ his passover is sacrificed for him," 1 Cor. 5. 7, 8.——Ver. 17. Why is leaven so strictly prohibited in the passover, and on so many other occasions? (see Exod. 12. 15. & 13. 7. & 34. 25. Lev. 2. 11. & 6. 17. & 10. 12.) and why, in the feast of pentecost, (which signifies fifty, and was so called, because on the fiftieth day from the passover, this feast was celebrated,) why, in this feast, is the commixture of leaven directly enjoined? Let it be observed, that a principle is good or bad, according to the commixture. Thus, love, commingled with the world, cannot co-exist with the love of God, (1 John 2. 15); but love, commingled with the knowledge of Christ, is very God dwelling in the heart, 1 John 4. 16. Love in the one combination, we must expel; love in the other must abound more and more, Phil. 1. 9. 1 Thes. 3. 12. It is thus that leaven representing the active principle of the sinner in a state of worse than Egyptian bondage, (Rom. 6. 16.) is utterly to be cast out; while leaven, representing the active principle of a believer "made free from sin," (Rom. 6. 18.) is carefully to be retained. This feast being one of the harvest, the leaven might well represent the secret blessing of increase the Lord had openly given; and being a feast of thanksgiving, would also set forth the secret, yet all-pervading and increasing quality of grace, as it is written, (Amos 4. 5.) offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven; and again, (2 Pet. 3. 18.) "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." For the kingdom of heaven, both in the heart of a single believer, and of the whole church, "is like leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened," Mat. 13. 33.——Ver. 24. On account of the trumpets of rams' horns employed in announcing the jubilee, (Lev. 25. 9.) and by Joshua at Jericho, (ch. 6. 4.) as well as by Asaph. (Ps. 81. 3.) (for the Hebrew original distinguishes them from the silver trumpets, (Num. 10. 2, 10.) many of the Jewish Rabbins are of opinion, that the feast of trumpets was a memorial of the deliverance of Isaac by the substitution of a ram, (Gen. 22. 13); and, because the original Hebrew, in the text, means a shout of a multitude, as well as blowing of trumpets, others are of opinion that it was an anniversary memorial of creation, according to Job 38. 7. Basil and Theodoret considered it a memorial of the trumpet in the delivery of the law on Sinai, (Exod. 19. 16); Patrick, as a solemn celebration of the entrance of the civil new year. Both Jennings and Cruden, deliver it as an admitted opinion, that the Scriptures do not, as in other cases, acquaint us with the occasion of its institution. Now, this being contrary to the analogy of Scripture, in which quotation and comparison constitute (under the Spirit of God) the great instruments of interpretation, let us therefore search the Scriptures, and we will find it recorded (Ps. 81. 3.) "Blow ye the trumpet in the new-moon, on our solemn feast day. For this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob. This he ordained in Joseph (the sold deliverer) for a testimony, when he (the Lord) went out through (or against) Egypt, where I heard a language that I understood not." Is not the trumpet sound, therefore, a memorial of the judgment of Egypt, and the deliverance of Israel, and of the unintelligible Egyptian tongue? For such is the sound of the trumpet, except blown by an experienced trumpeter, and falling upon the practised ear of the soldier, instructed in the secret meaning of the different calls, see Num. 10. 4. 1 Cor. 14. 8. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIII.—While I consider these sacred festivals as memorials—of the finished work of creation—of Israel's deliverance from Egypt—of the giving of the law at Sinai—of the provocation of the golden calf, and reconcilement relative to it—and of the Hebrews dwelling in tents—let me also discern them as typical figures of the gospel rests in the apostolic, millenial and eternal periods. Jesus' person, work, and fulness, appear as the end and substance of them all; and the oblations then offered represent to me Jesus, my whole burnt-offering, who satisfied justice, and glorified all the divine perfections in my stead; Jesus, my sin-offering, who expiates every crime; Jesus, my peace-offering, whose blood pacifies an offended God, quiets my conscience, and comforts my heart; Jesus, my meat-offering, who is meat indeed for the nourishment of my soul. Yea, they represent to me how his people, and their services offered through him, are the delight of his Father, and the joy of his own heart. In the first-fruits of barley and flour let me behold Jesus in his debasement and glory, as having in all things the pre-eminence, sanctifying the whole harvest of elect men, and all their fruits of righteousness; and as offered to be the present and endless nourishment of my soul. Let them also figure out the called of God, who are first-fruits to God and the Lamb; and their ready and acceptable service. In the passover I discern him as our passover sacrificed for us. In the feast of unleavened-bread, I see him, as through his whole life, a man of sorrows; but holy, harmless, and undefiled. In pentecost, I behold him exhibited as the law-fulfiller in the apostolic period for the salvation of multitudes. In the feast of trumpets, I hear the gospel sound, from morning to evening of the Christian period, proclaiming a full salvation, through a crucified Redeemer, to all the ends of the earth. In the fast of expiation I again behold him finishing transgression, and making an end of sin, the sin of a whole elect world, in one day; and having by himself purged away our sins, sitting down at the right hand of the majesty in the heavens, there to appear in the presence of God for us. And in the feast of tabernacles he is prefigured as tabernacling in our nature and world, that we might have familiar fellowship with him, particularly in the apostolic and millenial, but chiefly in the eternal period. Let me bless the Lord for such manifold memorials of Jesus; and especially that our privileges under the gospel are still more excellent, our enemies themselves being judges. Let me observe holy seasons in a holy manner. Let the sabbaths of the Lord be kept in all our hearts, in all our dwellings, and by all under our care. Let us honour the Lord with the first-fruits of all our substance. While kind to strangers, to the poor, and destitute, let us hearken to the joyful sound of salvation to miserable sinners; and, looking on Jesus Christ as crucified for us, let us afflict our souls, till God himself wipe away all tears from our eyes; and when our harvest and vintage of labours are ended, then shall we commemorate with pleasure our hardships by the way, and rejoice to change them for an eternal weight of glory.

[CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 8. Fine flour, a pure table, pure frankincense—are they not the significant emblems of a "contrite heart," (Ps. 51. 17.) a heart broken because of sin, as wheat between the millstones; and cleansed from all worldly refuse? (See Amos 8. 6.) Are they not emblems of a pure church fellowship at the table of the Lord? and of the "prayers of saints," (Rev. 8. 3.) "lifting up holy hands," (1 Tim. 2. 8.) to a holy God? And is not the bread set in order, the re-union of natural men into one body, by one spirit and one faith, and ranged by a godly discipline, under one Lord, according to the words of Paul, (1 Cor. 10. 17.) "we being many, are one bread, and one body?"—— Ver. 11. Blasphemed the NAME, as it stands in 7 And thou shalt put [h] pure frankincense upon each row, that it may be on the bread [i] for a memorial, even an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

8 Every sabbath he shall [k] set it in order before the LORD continually, being taken from the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant.

9 And [l] it shall be Aaron's and his sons'; and they shall eat it in the holy place: for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, by a perpetual statute.

10 ¶ And the son of an Israelitish woman, [m] whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel; and this son of the Israelitish woman and a man of Israel strove together in the camp:

11 And the Israelitish woman's son [n] blasphemed the name of the LORD, and cursed. And they [o] brought him unto Moses; (and his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan;)

12 And they [p] put him in ward, [o] that the mind of the LORD might be showed them.

13 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

14 Bring forth him that hath cursed [q] without the camp, and let all that heard him [r] lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation [s] stone him.

15 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, [t] Whosoever curseth his God shall bear his sin.

16 And he that blasphemeth the name of the LORD, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he blasphemeth the name of the LORD, shall be put to death.

17 ¶ [u] And he that [†] killeth any man [‡] shall surely be put to death.

18 ¶ And he that [x] killeth a beast shall make it good; [§] beast for beast.

19 And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; as he hath done, so shall it be done to him;

20 Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth: as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again.

21 And he that killeth a beast, he shall restore it: and he that killeth a man, he shall be put to death.

22 Ye shall have [y] one manner of law, as well for the stranger, as for one of your own country: for [z] I am the LORD your God.

23 ¶ And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, that they should bring forth him that had cursed out of the camp, and [a] stone him with stones. And the children of Israel did as the LORD commanded Moses.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses [a] in mount Sinai, saying,

2 [b] Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into [c] the land which I give you, then shall the land [d] keep a sabbath unto the LORD.

3 Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof:

4 [e] But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the LORD; thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard.

5 That which [f] groweth of its own accord of thy harvest thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes [e] of thy vine undressed: for it is a year of rest unto the land.

6 And the sabbath of the land shall be [g] meat for you; for thee, and for thy servant, and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant, and for thy stranger that sojourneth with thee,

7 And for thy cattle, and for the beasts that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be meat.

the Hebrew, the words "of the Lord" being supplied by the translators. The Hebrew for blaspheme, signifies to gore, as a beast with a horn; to pierce as with a sharp instrument: so it is translated, (Is. 36. 6.) and well representing the mixture of contempt and hatred of God from which blasphemy springs. The name is evidently that of the Angel of the covenant, of whom God had said, (Exod. 23. 21.) "provoke him not, for MY NAME is in him:" this was he of whom the apostle spoke, (Acts 3. 16.) "There is none other name given under heaven, amongst men, whereby we must be saved." This is he who "by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than the angels," (Heb. 1. 4.) even "a name that is above every name," Phil. 2. 9. All that heard the blasphemer were commanded to lay their hands upon his head, (1) to identify his person; (2) to testify to his guilt; (3) to witness the great truth that sin is worthy of death; (4) to admit the guilt of the whole congregation, were they authoritatively to sanction sin by silence, acquiescence, or approval; and (5) to represent its transference from the congregation to the guilty individual condemned and put to death by command of God, and the concurrence of the congregation.—Note. (1.) How careful should Christians be, lest by any timid silence in the sight of the wicked," (Ps. 39. 1, 2.) by any failure of just and loving reproof, or by any act of joining with them, or approval of them, (Eph. 5. 11.) they should become "partakers of other men's sins," 1 Tim. 2. 22. (2.) Let blasphemers recollect that awful intimation, (Matt. 12. 36.) and if "for every idle word," then how for every blasphemous word, will they be able to "give account in the day of judgment?"—ED.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIV.—While in Jesus' light I see light, and feed upon him, especially from sabbath to sabbath, let me essay to give light in his church, and be a good savour of Christ, in the feeding of his people with the true bread which cometh down from heaven. Let such as desire to enjoy gospel light never grudge the necessary expenses of it. And never let the pure oil of divine truth be adulterated with the fancies of men. What a mercy is it, that they, who come to God, find a table spread for them in the wilderness; and that on every sabbath ministers are to provide fresh provision for the souls of their people!—That the saints, in one generation after another, are set upon the table of the church, and especially on Christ, to the honour and delight of JEHOVAH! Let me further observe, that a graceless offspring is often the fruit of an unhallowed marriage; that quarrels usually end ill; and that judges ought to act with deliberation, and yet with impartiality and zeal. I tremble, therefore, at the load of uncontrolled blasphemy which lies unpardoned on Britain; since men have spared the heaven-daring miscreants, till they are so common, that stones would almost be wanting to cast at them all! Let my soul weep in secret places for their crimes! Shall not God visit for these things? Shall not his soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

9 Then shalt thou cause the trumpet [*] of the [i] jubilee to sound, on the [k] tenth day of the seventh month; in the day of [†] atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land.

10 And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim [i] liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family.

11 A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye [m] shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed.

12 For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field.

13 [n] In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession.

14 ¶ And if thou sell ought unto thy neighbour, or buyest ought of thy neighbour's hand, ye [o] shall not oppress one another.

15 [p] According to the number of years after the jubilee thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the fruits he shall sell unto thee: [‡]

16 According to the multitude of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years thou shalt diminish the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he sell unto thee.

17 Ye shall not therefore oppress one another; but thou shalt [q] fear thy God: for I am the LORD your God.

18 ¶ Wherefore ye [r] shall do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety.

19 And the land [s] shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat your fill, and dwell therein in safety.

20 And if ye shall say, [t] What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase:

(2) It necessitated a septennial increase of cattle from the neighbouring countries, and consequent improvement of breed. (3) It encouraged servants to acquire property. (4) It taught masters a due regard to the interests of servants. (5) It inculcated the doctrine of providence; upon faith in the spiritual, and covetousness in the natural man; and thereby encouraged the one, and condemned the other. (6) It set forth the rest, (the sabbatism, keeping of sabbath) that "remaineth for the people of God," Heb. 4. 9.—"Even so, come Lord Jesus," Rev. 22. 20.——Ver. 9. Jubilee: the derivation of this word is uncertain; the facts included are plain. Some derive it from Jubal, the inventor of musical instruments, (Gen. 4. 21.) and suppose it to intimate the music of the trumpet with which it was to be introduced; others, as Rabbi Kimchi, derive it from Jobel, signifying a ram's horn, because it was proclaimed with trumpets of rams' horns; others derive it from Jabal, to restore, because, in the year of jubilee, possessions were restored to their original owners. The Septuagint, accordingly, renders it remission; and Josephus, liberty; another etymology derives it from Jubal, a stream, because, like the stream of time, it carried all things along with it; the English word, jubilee, is derived immediately from the Latin jubilo, to rejoice with shouting. It is an institute eminently typical of Christ, as the particulars will demonstrate.——Ver. 10. The Jew might be compelled to surrender his own freedom; he might sell his children, or they might be arrested in payment of their father's debt. See verse 39. Exod. 21. 2, 7, 8. 2 Kings 4. 1. But while this compulsory sale of freedom was intended, and admirably calculated to prevent fraudulent debts, or punish fraudulent debtors; the law of the year of release (Exod. 15. 12.) and of the jubilee, was equally calculated to prevent the granting of fraudulent credits, with a view to ensure either the debtor or his family. Viewed as a political institute, the power of parents over their children's freedom, amounts not to more than the power of apprenticeship: common, and even necessary, in all civilized nations. The proclamation of liberty was a lovely emblem of our deliverance from "the bondage of corruption" into "the glorious liberty of the sons of God;" (Rom. 8. 21.) and a glorious type of our great deliverer, who said "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach deliverance to the captives, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord," Luke 4. 18. But the jubilee restored the Jew not only to liberty, but property; so are believers restored to "an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for those who are kept through faith unto salvation," 1 Pet. 1. 4, 5. Levites are their possession among the children of Israel.

34 But the field of the suburbs of their cities may [o] not be sold: for it is their perpetual possession.[*]

35 ¶ And if [f] thy brother be waxen poor, and [†] fallen in decay with thee, then thou shalt [‡] relieve him: yea, though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee.

36 [g] Take thou no usury of him, or increase: but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

38 [h] I am the LORD your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, and to be your God.

39 ¶ And [i] if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee; thou shalt not [§] compel him to serve as a bond-servant:

40 But as an hired servant, and as a sojourner, he shall be with thee, and shall serve thee unto the year of jubilee:

41 And then [k] shall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and unto the possession of his fathers shall he return.

42 For they are [l] my servants which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: they shall not be sold [l] as bond-men.

43 [m] Thou shalt not rule over him with rigour, but shalt fear thy God.

44 [n] Both thy bond-men, and thy bond-maids, which thou shalt have, shall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bond-men and bond-maids.

45 Moreover, of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land; and they shall be your possession:

46 And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; [*] they shall be your bond-men for ever: but over your brethren, the children of Israel, ye shall not rule one over another with rigour.

47 ¶ And if a sojourner or stranger [†] wax rich by thee, and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor, and sell himself unto the stranger or sojourner by thee, or to the stock of the stranger's family:

48 After that he is sold he may be redeemed again; [o] one of his brethren may redeem him:

49 Either his uncle, or his uncle's son, may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family may redeem him; or, if he be able, he may redeem himself.

50 [p] And he shall reckon with him that bought him, from the year that he was sold to him, unto the year of jubilee: and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years; according to the time of an hired servant shall it be with him.

51 If there be yet many years behind, according unto them he shall give again the price of his redemption out of the money that he was bought for.

52 And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, then he shall count with him, and according unto his years shall he give him again the price of his redemption.

53 And as a yearly hired servant shall he be with him; and the other shall not rule with rigour over him in thy sight.

54 And if he be not redeemed [*] in these years, then he [q] shall go out in the year of jubilee, both he and his children with him.

was restored to his family. What happy meetings on the morning of jubilee! So, the believer is restored to "the household of God," "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named," Eph. 2. 19. & 3. 15.——Ver. 23. The earth, like its inhabitants, is "sold under sin;" still "the earth is the Lord's," (Psal. 24. 1.) and "the god of this world" (2 Cor. 4. 4.) will not be permitted to retain it for ever; it is Christ's by purchase, and so is the church, (Eph. 1. 14. Psal. 74. 2. Acts 20. 28. 1 Pet. 2. 9.) it is his by right of conquest from the usurping enemy, (Psal. 98. 1. Heb. 2. 14. 1 Cor. 15. 25, 26.) and will soon be his by the baptism of fire, and the establishment of everlasting righteousness, 2 Pet. 3. 7—13.——Ver. 30. The house in a walled city, being purchased as a place of safety, and of trade, could not be reclaimed after a year's possession. As a political ordinance, this operated as a needful prevention of monopoly, while it promoted intercourse, enterprise, and improvement; as a religious ordinance it was emblematic of that "city of the living God," (Heb. 12. 22.) which "God hath prepared," (Heb. 11. 16.) and in which salvation, (a blessing inalienable from the lawful possessor) "God hath appointed for walls and bulwarks," where he "keeps him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on him," Is. 63. 1, 3.——Ver. 32. The Levites had no great division of the land like the other tribes, but forty-eight cities and suburbs selected throughout the entire country, including the six cities of refuge (Num. 35. 1—8.) as the appointed instructors of the people; (Neh. 8. 7, 9.) and because of the cities of refuge, the magisterial guardians of the public peace, they were thus dispersed through the tribes, and, as such, possessed the special right of redeeming their houses at any time; a privilege not bestowed for their private benefit, but necessary to the public welfare—an emblem of the inalienable right of reformation with which God has invested the church, and to which he specially commissions his "pastors and teachers," Eph. 4. 11—15, 22, 23. Mal. 2. 4—7. & 3. 7, 17, 18.——Ver. 36. This is not a law against legal interest for money lent, but the fourth provision of the Mosaic poor law—an appeal to benevolence, which is "always merciful and lends;" (Psal. 37. 26.) a restraint upon covetousness, ever ready to traffic in the poor man's necessities, Amos 2. 7. & 4. 1. & 8. 6.——Ver. 46. This law of bond-men is neither to be explained nor defended, as if it were founded on a special order, like the extirpation of Amalek; or, as the merciful, but temporary correction of an existing and unavoidable evil; for God legislates not by temporary expedients, but by eternal principles: but it is to be explained and defended, on its own merits, which are these. (1) These services were bought at their just price; not from men-stealers, traffickers condemned of God, (Exod. 21. 16.) but from the parties themselves. (2) They might be redeemed or manumitted without any legal hinderance, as is evident from the case provided for, Exod. 19. 20. (3) They are under the protection of the law, Josh. 9. 20, 21. (4) By comparing (Judg. 1. 27, 28, 30, 33, 35.) with (1 Kings 9. 20, 21.) the bond-service, in a most remarkable instance, will be found a mere rent charge or tribute, either in labour or money in return for the possession of houses or lands. And farther, from (Ezra 2. 21. Neh. 7. 5, 6, 57, 61. & 10. 28.) compared with (Exod. 12. 44.) and with the everlasting covenant with Abraham, (Gen. 17. 12, 13, 27.) it will appear, that bond-servants were, (as in the case of Solomon's servants,) legally incorporated with the church and kingdom, and entitled to all the covenant privileges of Abraham's lineal descendants. (5) By the Mosaic law, every servant, and therefore, in a special manner, the privileged bond servant, was protected by law from every form of oppression, Deut. 24. 14, 18. Now a system of servitude, under these restrictions, and with these privileges, cannot in any sense be called slavery, nor be employed to countenance slavery; nor does it require any apologetic explanation; for, as God authorized it, it was a system both of mercy and justice: for man's perversion of it, neither explanation, apology, nor defence, can be offered.—ED.]

the happiness, the common salvation, of a new-covenant state, of the gospel period, and of the celestial state, all purchased by Jesus' atoning blood, and published and offered to us in the gospel, may I be disengaged from all undue affection to created comforts, and never hasten to be rich, but depend on God for daily bread, in following the ways of religion and charity. In view of my eternal jubilee, let me consider wisely the cases of the poor; study equity in all my dealings; and stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made me free. Blessed be his glorious name—though I have forfeited all my happiness—though I have sold myself a bond-servant to Satan and my lusts—my Kinsman-Redeemer Christ has paid all my debt, all my ransom! And whom the Son hath made free, they are free indeed! Let me adore his sovereignty, that, while almost all the world are detained in everlasting bondage, the seed of Abraham, according to the Spirit, are made the Lord's free-men.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 1—46. This chapter, which mostly corresponds with Deut. xxviii., is a summary of the oracles and providences of God relative to the Jewish nation. In the first part of it we have a summary of much of the contents of those promises already met with, and of the whole of those hereafter contained in the Bible, with respect to the Jewish nation. All the prosperity they met with in the days of Joshua, the judges, the kings, the deputies of the Persian, Grecian, or Roman powers, were but the fulfilment of these predictions. In the second part of in we have a summary of all the threatenings which relate to their nation, whether denounced by Moses, the prophets, Christ, or his apostles. All the miseries which that nation endured under the judges, kings, Chaldeans, Persians, Greeks, and Romans, for about fifteen hundred years; and all the miseries they have endured in their present dispersion among the Gentiles, which have already continued above seventeen hundred years, without any interruption, is but a literal accomplishment of them. The third part has been, in some measure, verified in some of their former deliverances; especially in the mercies which they received in their return from Babylon, and afterwards until the time of Christ. But we expect a more full accomplishment of it in the latter days, when the Jews shall be converted to the Christian faith, and replaced in their own land.

[CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 5. Because God's temporal promises and threatenings were so many, some have thoughtlessly asserted that he urged not the doctrine of a future state; but they who assert this omission "do err, not knowing the scriptures;" for, when we examine the wondrous catalogue of promises commencing (verse 4.) we find at least twelve distinct temporal blessings; but, in addition to these, God promises (verse 9.) his covenant to be established. Now, that covenant was everlasting, not merely with successive generations, but with Abraham individually, personally, Gen. 17. 7, 9, 10. Now, if the covenant between God and Abraham was everlasting, Abraham therein inherited everlasting life; and Israel in the establishment of that covenant, received the doctrine and the promise of immortality, as well as of the temporal blessings with which it was accompanied. 25 And I [s]will bring a sword upon you, that shall avenge the quarrel of my covenant: and when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will send the pestilence among you; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

26 And when [h]I have broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver you your bread again by weight: and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied.

27 [i]And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me;

28 Then I [k]will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins.

29 [l]And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat. [*]

30 And I will [m]destroy your high places, and [n]cut down your images, and [o]cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you.

31 And I will [p]make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will [q]not smell the savour of your sweet odours.

32 And I will [r]bring the land into desolation; and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it.

33 And I will [s]scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you; and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste.

34 Then [t]shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths.

35 As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest; because it did [u]not rest in your sabbaths when ye dwelt upon it.

36 And upon them that are left alive of you I will send a [x]faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall when none pursueth.

37 And they shall fall one upon another, as it were before a sword, when none pursueth: and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies.

38 And ye shall [y]perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up.

39 And they that are left of you shall [z]pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them.

40 ¶ If they shall [a]confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto me;

41 And that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then [b]their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity:

42 Then will I [c]remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I [d]will remember the land.

43 The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them: and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity; because, even because they [e]despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes.

44 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, [f]I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the LORD their God.

45 But I will [g]for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors, whom I brought
